Also, manufacture to order the California Burglar and Fire-Proof Safe, with the Burglar's Lock invented by Mr. W. C. Bussey, of Jackson, Amador county, Cal. No Key required to open this State. It is done by Mathematical Calculation. Call and examine for yourselves, at our Works.

THIS LOCK PUT ON SAFES NOW IN USE

Splendid Presents

TO SEND ABROAD.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS

.....OF.....

California Scenery!

A SERIES OF OVER

ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!

ILLUSTRATING

The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.

PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,

And Published by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 & 319 Montgomery Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

MASONIC TEMPLE,

Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!

Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

A. J. PLATE,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

ALSO,

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS, Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, &c., &c.,

NO. 411 SANSOME STREET,

Between Commercial and Sacramento Sts., San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND

IN USE

THE ORIGINAL P. P. STEWART'S FUEL SAVING

Air-Tight Cooking Stoves,

FOR WOOD OR COAL.

IMPROVED IN 1861;

WITH NEW AND EXTRA LARGE FLUES, AND BY THE ADDITION OF THE CELEBRATED PATENT DOUBLE-SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.

Attention is Invited to the following Points of Superiority:

1. DURABILITY.—Lasting, with proper care, at least twenty years. Stoves are now in use that were set up in 1838.

2. MANUFACTURE.—Every portion of the Stove is thoroughly constructed. Each Stove is submitted to a critical test, and none leave our works unless completely and perfectly finished.

3. CAPACITY.—Baking, Boiling, Roasting, and all other culinary operations performed at the same time.

4. ECONOMY.—Saving the cost of the Stove in one year in the cost of fuel.

5. VENTILATION OF OVEN.—In the Stewart Stove alone, the front doors open directly into the oven, (protected by letters patent) securing a direct draft through the top of the oven by means of perforated holes in the doors and back flues. It will be borne in mind that, as the heated air always rises, this method of ventilation is the only one of any value whatever.

6. ENTIRE CONTROL OF HEAT.—The heat generated by the Stove may be held therein and used or thrown into the room at pleasure.

7. THE DOUBLE SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.—By which a compressing and inverting action of heat is obtained, and the oven more evenly and efficiently heated than by any other known invention.

9. HOT WATER RESERVOIR AND WARMING CLOSET.—Both useful and convenient, supplied by the waste heat and without extra fuel.

10. WATER BACK.—An arrangement for supplying hot water for the bath-room equal to any range.

 Beware of numerous imitations in the market, many of which resemble the "Stewart" only in appearance, and none of them possess any of its peculiar qualities.

See that the name of P. P. STEWART is on each Stove. None other genuine.

For sale by CALEB M. SICKLER, 422 Kearny street,

Between California and Pine, San Francisco.

Repairs for Stewart's Stoves constantly on hand.

FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,

612 BATTERY STREET,

Between Jackson and Pacific, San Francisco,

Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements.

Also BILLIARD TRIMMING of every description.

☞ All goods sold are warranted.

CRANBERRY PRESERVES, 35 CENTS PER CAN, or three cans for $1, at HASKELL & BUCKELEW'S.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S

SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Rosa House

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hohnrt & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 270 Pine

CARPETS.
D. N. & E. Walter & Co., 303 California street.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush street
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts., below the Market.
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhatlan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 220 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Stuart & Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOOD AND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

HOW AUTHORS WRITE.

A comical writer, who dislocates the English language in a style of "tremenjus ecksentrisity," has gotten off the following "screed," and, as a literary 'koorosity," it merits both a laugh and a perusal:

Sum funny things hev been sed konsurnin the habits ov orthors and their pecoolirities. As for instance, thus: Bulwer writ "Night and Mornin." What he did the rest ov the day is not stated.

Collins rit "After Dark." Praps he coodn't rite so well bi day. Likewize he rit. "No Name." I spose he numbers his karacters as tha du in the stait prison. But I don't see how he got along without names.

Mrs. Langton rit "Every Day." She coodn't hev let up on Sundays then, nor 4th of Julys. She just tended tn biz, she did.

Chas. Collins rit "At the Bar." He wns a sperited riter.

Sum orthors rote "Bound tu the Wheel." What an unkumfortable posish tu rite in, bound tu a wheel. Thunder!

Florence Marryat rit "For Ever and Ever." I don't take stock in that yarn. She must hev hed sleep, tu say nuthin uv the opera and shoppin.

Gilmore rote "Four Years in the Saddle," so tis sed. He must hev hed a "quiet horse" Horses do jounce a fellow so—I kant go the horse part.

Mrs. Chetwyind rit "Three Hundred a Yeer," 300 is a good menny, but Warren eklipst her a long ways. He rit "Ten Thonsand a Yeer." Whew! And rote "Now & Then" at that. He must hev ben a powerful rapid riter tu wurk off so menny. If sum othors would only rite now and then it would bc a great releef and saving uv paper, pervided that didn't get off ten thousand ov'em.

Featherstonhaugh rit "Late, but not Two Late." He knew when tu let up, and its a great pity some othors is not thus wize gifted.

Miss Muloch rote "Nothin New." This cood be said of menny others with great propriety.

Harrington rit "Inside." I take it for granted that most people do. It woodn't be kumfortable ritein on the sidewalk in rainy wether.

West rit "Ten yeers in Polneesia." He struck it out amazin well. I spoze it waz quiet out there & he liked it.

A. G., he rit "Among the Mountains," and another chap "By the Sea." Their tastes waz dissimilar.

Sum other rote "Above and Below." Abov what? Below what? I'd like tu kno. Praps he rote one day in the attick and the next day in the kitchen. Orthers ar so exsentrick.

A. Nonymous rote "Hunted to Death." A self-possest cuss, he was. A nervey lot. What a karm kool brane was hizzen. It must hav been that he waz in pursoot ov pleasure under diffikulties, or else his printer waz hard up for copy. That's so. Let us suppose a kase, thus wize. Three detektivs hez run you tu earth. That is tu say, youre on a fense, with 2 big bull dogs on one side & the detektivs on the other. Think you cood rite serenely in this posish? I guess not. If you cood twood be a novel affare. I kant imagine enuything more sublime or pathetick than a chap riten in such a posish. I kant.

Mrs. Riddell 'tis said, rote "Too Much Alone." This may be slander on the part of sum woman hoo wanted to gossip with her. Ez for me, I kant be two much alone when I write. Hoo in thunder wants a krowd about? It distracks from the subjeck.

Sum orthur wrote "Awl for the Best." That must hev ben Seward. That's him klean throo.

Florence Marryat rote "Two Good for Him." Praps twas for her husband, but not for me; no, I thank yer. Ez for me, give me the best, or give me nun. I say to orthors: do yer best, don't be afraid.

Mrs. Mackensie Daniel rote "After Long Years." Sensible woman. If sum ov the rest ov em wood wait till tha git too the age of discretion, it wood be better for awl konserned It seems az tho sum kommenced at the age ov distraction. St. Slocom, Jr., of Bytown.

A Veteran.—A most remarkable character was brought to the observance of the authorities of this city, on Tuesday last, through a request of the Commissioners of Public Charities and Correction. for the discharge of an aged female named Mary Woodward. She has been sentenced to the Penitentiary for upwards of ninety seven terms, making a period of nearly forty years, most of which she has spent in the service of the State. When this startling fact is contemplated, and the quantity of liquor she must have consumed to entail upon her such "dire vengeance" of the law, it is really astonishing. Justice Dowling filled out a discharge and sent it to the Island, and Mary was released on Wednesday.—N. Y. Police Gazette.

A New Supporter of the Government.—In some of the London papers, the printers made sad havoc of Mr. Gladstone's great speech on the Franchise Bill. That nonsense should be made of his Latin was natural enough, but the grand sentence in his peroration, commencing "You can't fight against the future! Time is on our side!" appeared as "You can't fight against the future! Tim is on our side."

SPORTSMEN'S EMPORIUM.

FIRST PREPIUM FOR 1864, 1865 and 1866.

538 Washington street, below Montgomery.

ROBERT LIDDLE & CO.,

GUN AND RIFLE MAKERS, and IMPORTERS OF GUNS, RIFLES and PISTOLS. ☞ Also, Agents for HENRY'S PATENT RIFLE, and WM. GREENER'S celebrated DOUBLE GUNS.

FISHING TACKLE, and all the appurtenances required by Sportsmen, to be found here.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES AT PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

TRUMP & BRADY,

No. 615 Market street,

In Basement of St. Lawrence House, opposite Montgomery,

STEAM AND GAS FITTING,

PLUMBING, Etc.

Gas Letters and Reflectors made to order. Ships, Stores and Dwelling fitted up with Steam, Water and Gas Pipes, at the lowest rates.

Pumps Repaired, and all kinds of Johbing done at the shortest notice.

All Work warranted, or no charges made.

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

OF

MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,

PASTE & FARINA.

(706 Sansome St. 706)

SAN FRANCISCO.

BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & Co.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS W. SUTHERLAND, deceased.

It appearing to the said Court by the petition this day presented and filed by Alexander R. Baldwin, the Administrator of the estate of Thomas W. Sutherland, deceased, praying for an order of sale of Real Estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the Real Estate to pay the charges and expenses of administration

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 11th day of February A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of said day at the Court room of said Probate Court at the City Hall, in said city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated January 10th, A. D. 1867.

Office of the County Clerk } ss.
Of the City and County of San Francisco, }

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true, full and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 10th day of January A. D. 1867

WM LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. Jeghers, Deputy Clerk.

J. F. Hutton, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. j12 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of EDMOND O'LOUGHLEN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator of the Estate of Edmond O'Loughlen, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Edmond O'Loughlen, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the 15th day of January, A. D., 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Edmond O'Loughlen, deceased, according to law:

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published once a week, for four successive weeks, before the said 15th day of January A. D., 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated, December 4th 1866. d8 5t

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

The following steamships will be despatched on dates as given below:

STEAMRES FOR JANUARY.

January 19th—MONTANA, Captain J. Sutton, connecting with RISNG STAR, Captain Howes.

January 30th—CONSTITUTION. Captain J. M. Cavalry, connecting with NEW YORK, Captain Gray.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER

AMERICA,

WILL SAIL FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua,

From MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on

FRIDAY, - - JANUARY 25, 1867,

Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship

NICARAGUA,

(2500 tons) For NEW YORK.

The MOSES TAYLOR will sail on February 15th.

For further information, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,

Up stairs, San Francisco

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.

H. STOCKDALE Proprietor

Lundborg, Dentist, 519 Montgomery St.

North Washington HAIR RESTORER.

THIS IS A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY, and stands above comparison with any other article for the Hair ever brought before the public.

A PERFECT

Hair Restorer and Hair Dresser

BOTH COMBINED IN ONE.

First—It is not a Dye.

Second—Will not Color the Skin.

Third—Will restore Gray Hair to a beautiful Black, Brown, Auburn, or whatever might have been its original color, and cause it to assume its former beauty.

Fourth—Will cure all Humors and Diseases of the Scalp.

Fifth—Will remove Dandruff and Scurf from the head, and keep the hair moist and silk like in its appearance as in youthful days.

Sixth—Will promote a healthy growth.

Seventh—Will prevent it from falling off, and cause it to grow on bald heads where there is life and vitality at the roots, but where these are gone there is no hope of success.

Eighth—The best testimony that can be given will be found inside of each bottle.

Warranted to do all we claim for it, or the money refunded after using two bottles. Try it and be convinced.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Price.....One Dollar.

SIMONDS & CO., Proprietors,
Fitzwilliam, N. H.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

STOP THAT COUGHING.

SOME OF YOU CAN'T, AND WE PITY YOU. You have tried every remedy but the ONE destined, by its intrinsic merit, to supersede all similar preparations It is not surprising you should be reluctant to try something else after the many experiments you have made of trashy compounds foisted on the public as a certain cure, but

NEWELL'S

PULMONARY SYRUP

is really the VERY BEST remedy ever compounded or the cure of Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Consumption. Thousands of people in California and Oregon have been already benefited by the surprising curative powers of

NEWELL'S PULMONARY SYRUP,

and with one accord give it their unqualified approbation. We now address ourselves to all who are unacquainted with this, the greatest Panacea of the age, for the healing of all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, assuring you that has cured thousands, and it will cure you if you try it. This invaluable medicine is pleasant to the taste, soothing, healing and strengthening in its effects; entirely free from all poisonous or deleterious drugs, and perfectly harmless under all circumstances.

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

Certificates from many prominent citizens of San Francisco accompany every bottle of Newell's Pulmonary Syrup.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco

REDINGTON'S

Flavoring Extract

ARE MADE FROM FRESH FRUITS. Each bottle holds twice as much as any other brand in the market, consequently they are the cheapest and the best. USE NO OTHER.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Agents for the Pacific Coast

REDINGTON & CO.'S

Essence of Jamaica Ginger.

THIS VALUABLE PREPARATION, containing in a highly concentrated form all the properties of the Jamaica Ginger, has become one of the most popular domestic remedies for all diseases of the stomach and digestive organs.

As a tonic it will be found invaluable to all persons recovering from debility, whether produced by fever or otherwise, for whilst it imparts to the system all the glow and vigor that can be produced by wine or brandy, it is entirely free from the reactionary effects that follow the use of spirits of any kind.

It is also an excellent remedy for females who suffer from difficult menstruation, giving almost immediate relief to the spasms that so frequently accompany that period.

It gives immediate relief to Nausea, caused by riding in a railroad car, or by sea-sickness, or other causes.

It is also valuable as an external application for Gout Rheumatism, Neuralgia, etc.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast

TWICE READ.

The lamp burns with a fitful glow,
The sounds die in the streets below,
The rain sweeps on the pane!
I push my Iliad aside;
What weight to me have Helen's woes,—
Andromache's—the Trojan's foes,
Or God-like Hector slain?
I read it once, long years ago,
"But not alone"—I whisper low.

We bent absorbed above each page,
The birds sang noisily in their cage,
The vines swayed in the air.
I mind me well that summer day!
The sunbeams crept toward our book,
Then stopped as with a puzzled look,
To read the legend there.
Our hearts sang then, though lips were dumb,
A song for all the years to come!

The bright, glad years! I could not see
The shadows waiting there for me,
The weary, haggard years!
I'll lay you by, old book, to night;
And trim the lamp, and sew or sing
Or write a ballad—anything
To stop these burning tears.
In the Nevada's lonely shade
His grave, by strangers' hands, was made!

The years to come—the hidden years!
What loves and hopes, and doubts and feare,
They hold in their wide hands!
The bubble sparkles on the streams,
Fit emblem of the hopes that be;
The streams run seething to the sea,
Over the silver sands,
And full sailed boats along them flee,
With priceless freight, but none for me.

The years gone by; the hopes that sleep
Within their tomb now make me weep
And trembling kneel to pray!
O, silent years that were so bright!
Wan corpses washed on a wild coast,
Each one comes like a spectral ghost,
Down to your graves—away!
These lonely thoughts but ill prepare
Me for the day and all its care.

THE NEW MOON.

When, as the garish day is done,
Heaven burns with the descended sun,
'Tis passing sweet to mark,
Amid that flush of crimson light,
The new moon's modest brow grows bright
As earth and sky grow dark.

Few are the hearts too cold to feel
A thrill of gladness o'er them steal,
When first the wandering eye
Sees faintly, in the evening blaze,
That glimmering curve of tender rays
Just planted in the sky.

The sight of that young crescent brings
Thoughts of all fair and youthful things—
The hopes of early years:
And childhood's purity and grace,
And joys that like a rainbow chase
The passing shower of tears.

The captive yields him to the dream
Of freedom, when that virgin beam
Comes out upon the open air;
And painfully the sick man tries
To fix his dim and burning eyes
On the soft promise there.

And there do thoughtful men behold
A type of errors, loved of old,
Forsaken and forgiven;
And thoughts and wishes not of earth,
Just opening in their early birth,
Like that new light in Heaven.

At a very excellent hotel, not a hundred miles from our parts, they were one day short of a waiter, when a newly arrived Hibernian was hastily made to supply the place of a more expert hand.

"Now Barney," said mine host, "mind you serve every man with soup the first thing—serve soup first."

"Bedad, I'll do that same," said the alert Barney.

Soup came on, and Barney, after helping all but one guest, came up to the last one.

"Soup sir?" said Barney.

"No soup for me," said the man.

"But you must have it—it is the rules of the house."

"D—n the rules of the house!" exclaimed the guest. "When I dont't want soup I won't eat it."

"Well," said Barney, with all due solemnity, "all I can say is this: it's the regulations of the house, and d—n the drop else will ye get till ye's has finished the soup!"

The traveler gave in, and the soup was gobbled.

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

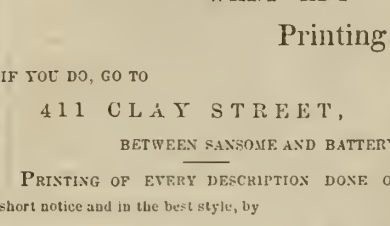
REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON SEWING MACHINES,

AT THE CALIFORNIA STATE FAIR, 1866:

"To the Presdent of the State Agricultural Society:

Your Committee on Sewing Machines beg leave to report that we have examined the Several Sewing Machines (The Grover & Baker, the Wheeler & Wilson, and the Florence,) on exhibition, and find that,

For General Family Use, The



IS THE BEST.

[Signed] J. N. ANDREWS,
THOS. C. McHALE,
L. ELKUS."

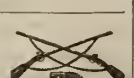
HENRY HILLS & CO.,

MALE AND FEMALE EMPLOYMENT OFFICE, REAL AND GENERAL AGENCY HOUSE AND BUSINESS BROKERS, have removed their office and business to No. 401 Bush street, first door above Kearny.

Particular attention will be paid to the supplying of Private Families, Hotels, Restaurants, Farmers, Milk Ranches, Contractors, Saw Mills, etc., with Cooks, Waiters, Bakers Clerks, Farm Hands, Teamsters, Coachmen, Gardeners, Mechanics, Laborers, Teamsters, Chamber Maids, Housekeepers, Table and Nurse Girls, and Girls for general housework—all at the shortest notice. We also attend to the sale and renting of Houses and Ranches, and buying and selling of business places generally, and to the procuring of Partners. Those who may favor us with their orders from the City and Country, by Mail, Express or otherwise, may rest assured that they will be promptly and faithfully attended to.

Henry Hills wishes to call the attention of his Brother Firemen—having formerly been connected with them in the San Francisco Fire department—to the above branch of business, and not to forget him at any time that they may require any business transacted in his line.

WILSON & EVANS,



No. 513 Clay street,
Importers and Dealers in

FIREARMS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION, SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Pouches, Eley's Caps, Wads, and all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing-Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Linen and Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.

WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY

NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warranted to give satisfaction.

WILSON & EVANS.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work o all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOSEPH H. WEED,
V. KINGWELL.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS, Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Bamschedit's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

McNALLY & HAWKINS,

Plummers and Gas Fitters,

Have removed their place of business to the new store on MARKET STREET, adjoining the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum,

Where they will keep constantly on hand a large and elegant assortment of GAS FIXTURES, PLUMBING MATERIALS, etc.

Buildings fitted up with Gas, Water and steam in the most approved manner, and at the cheapest rates.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,

Practical Card and Seal Engraver,

AND PLATE PRINTER,

No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

AYER'S

CHERRY PECTORAL,

FOR THE RAPID CURE OF

COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, HOARSENESS, CROUP, BRONCHITIS, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION, AND FOR THE RELIEF OF CONSUMPTIVE PATIENTS IN ADVANCED STAGES OF THE DISEASE.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of country abounds in persons publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs by its use. When once tried, its superiority over every other Expectorant is too apparent to escape observation and where its virtues are [illegible], the public no longer hesitate what antidote to employ for the distressing and dangerous affections of the pulmonary organs that are incident to our climate. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this having gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

We can only assure the public, that its quality is carefully kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all that it has ever done.

Great numbers of clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled usefulness of our remedies, but space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our AMERICAN ALMANAC in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the complaints they cure.

Those who require an alterative medicine to purify the blood will find AYER'S COMPOUND EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA the remedy to use. Try it once, and you will know its value

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers.

N. P. COLE & CO.,

WHOLESALE

Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

Furniture AND Bedding!

508, 510, 518 & 528 Washington St.

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

SAN FRANCISCO.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM

PRICE 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.

PRICE 50 CENTS.

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor Sansome & Commercial streets.

Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicides, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA AND YELLOW DOCK IODIDE OF POTASS.

THE

Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither spirit ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla"

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets.

TIME & LABOR SAVED BY USING

Standard Soap Company's

CELEBRATED

WASHING POWDER.

This Powder is superior to all soaps or compounds for Washing and Cleaning.

It is made of pure material, and contains nothing whatever that will injure the finest fabric. Equally as good for Hard or Soft Water. No Soap ever required to be used with it. One pound will make three gallons of beautiful Soft Soap. It is put up in wrappers of one pound each, and in boxes of ten pounds bulk, with Directions. Get a package from your grocer and test its virtue.

Sold by all Grocers. See and get none but STANDARD SOAP CO'S

MANUFACTURED AT 207 COMMERCIAL STREET,
San Francisco.

☞ Standard Soap Company also manufactures superior Pale, Chemical Olive and Detersive Soap, which they sell at the Lowest Market Prices.

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

THIS COMPANY being no longer bound by the Rates of the Board of Underwriters is now ready to Insure against Loss and Damage by Fire, ON AS REASONABLE TERMS as any other responsible Company.

The Lowest Possible Rates compatible with SAFETY will be charged.

Call at this office before insuring elsewhere.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, President.
B. ROTHCHILD, Secretary.

FIREMAN'S FUND
Insurance Company.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
238 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Capital fully paid in Gold Coin.....$500,000 00
Surplus, April 30, 1866..... 154,824 57

Totul Assets.....$654,824 57

REDUCTION IN RATES.

THE TARIFF OF RATES HERETOfore established by the Board of Fire Underwriters being virtually suspended, this Company are prepared to take desirable risks at such Reduced Rates as are consistent with the security of both Insurer and Insured.

D. J. STAPLES,
Vice President.
CHAS. R BOND, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.
INCORPORATED.....1821.
Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both
Fire and Marine Risks,
AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.
R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pres't.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

GREAT WESTERN
Life Insurance Company.
OF NEW YORK.
STOCK and MUTUAL

The Security of the Stock Plan, with all the Advantages of the Mutual System.

POLICIES AND DIVIDENDS ARE NON-FORFEITABLE.

Thirty Days Grace for Payment of Premiums.

J. W. BRUMAGIN.
General Agent for California,
Office 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
111 Montgomery street. bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,
(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Manufacturer and Dealer in
SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,
From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.
Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

RHEUMATISM CAN BE CURED
BY USING
Healy's Rheumatic Liniment,
Which is warranted to cure the most obstinate cases of
CHRONIC OR INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.
It relaxes the muscles, removes the pain, and restores health and vigor to the system.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb 6, 1866.
MR. HEALY—Dear Sir: Having witnessed many cures effected by your Rheumatic Liniment, I take great pleasure in universally recommending it to those in search of a really good article.
Yours, &c., FRANK V. SCUDDER.

MR. FRANK HEALY: I suffered considerable rheumatic pains in both shoulders for a long time. I tried many remedies to get relief, but to no purpose. I was advised to try a bottle of "Healy's Rheumatic Liniment," which I did, and it has greatly relieved me. I am now using the second bottle, and am confident that in a few days I shall be well.
Yours, &c., R. PAGE,
316, Montgomery street.
San Francisco, Feb, 9, 1866.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 13, 1866.
To F. HEALY: I have heard much and seen practical proofs of your Liniment, and I endorse all you claim for it. L. GOETZ,
335, 337, Pine street.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 12, 1866.
Dear Sir: I have used the bottle of Liniment you sent me, and it has done me good. Please send me another. WM. HORN,
718, Battery street

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT is for sale by all Druggists on the Pacific coast.
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Wholesale Agents, CRANE & BRIGHAM, and R. H. McDONALD & CO., SAN FRANCISCO.

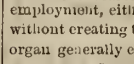
MISS WOODS,
Dress and Cloak Maker,
CORNER OF CLAY AND KEARNY STREETS,
Over Hinckley's Drug Store.

MISS WOODS IS THOROUGHLY ACCOMPLISHED in the business to which she has devoted herself, and has had an experience that has made her completely familiar with all its practical details. For a long period she occupied a position with MRS. TARBOX & COLLINS, which rendered an accurate acquaintance with the business absolutely indispensible. MISS WOODS is confident as to her ability to give satisfaction to all who will favor her with a trial

MARTIN GROSTETTA,
LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,
Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

DR. FONDA SAN FRANCISCO
EYE INFIRMARY,

PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUsively for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.
P. W. FONDA, M. D.,
Surgeon in charge Infirmary,
223 Kearny street between Bush and Sutter.

PRESERVE YOUR SIGHT.


PERFECT SPECTACLES EXactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minute employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill suited or common Spectacles.
PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent pre-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.
Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

COME AND SEE ME!
Dr. J. Heald, Dentist,
Corner of Kearny and California streets, (entrance on California street,)
Has reduced his prices for all Dental operations, on account of the dull times, to one-half the usual prices, believing "Live and let live" a good motto.
Best Gum Teeth, set in Goodyear's Patent Rubber, Vulcanized, Full Upper or Lower Sets, $25. Plain Teeth, on the same, Upper or Lower, $15 to $20. Teeth filled with Gold, $2. All other Fillings, $1. Teeth extracted, in a superior manner, only 50 cents
☞ Every style of Dental work done in the best possible manner, and warranted as good as the best done in this city.
N. B.—Persons whose circumstances require a discount from these prices shall have a satisfactory one, so that all may have good Teeth, both ornamental and useful.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,
Teachers of Dancing,
CONGRESS HALL,
On Bush-st., adjoinin Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent.

OSACCA JAPAN TEA. A FRESH LOT, IN 5 LB boxes, just imported, by HASKELL & BUCKELEW,
514 Market street.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
LUCY J. PRINCE, Plaintiff, vs. LOUIS M PRINCE, Defendant.
Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send greeting to LOUIS M. PRINCE, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.
The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Hon. Court, dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and awarding to Plaintiff the sole custody of Louis Prince, the child of said parties, and for general relief.
And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.
Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this eighth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.
WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELLED]
D. P. BARSTOW, Plaintiff's Attorney. no10-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco.
CECILE PEBELIE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELIE, Defendant.
Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelie, defendant.
You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you, by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.
The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff be permitted to resume her maiden name, and for general relief.
And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.
Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[L. S.] By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, City and County of San Francisco.—In the Probate Court.
In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS SMITH, deceased.
Order of Publication on Application for Order of Sale.
On reading and filing the petition of Christian Schricher, Administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the said Administrator to pay the allowance to the family, the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts.
It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court at the Court Room thereof, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 4th day of February 1867, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administratior to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts.
And it is further ordered, that a copy of the foregoing order be published once a week for four weeks, in the CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper published in the city and county aforesaid. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated January 2d, 1867. j5 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:
In the matter of the Estate of ALFRED RODMAN and ELOISE RODMON, Minors.
It appearing to this Court from the petition this day presented and filed by John C. Merrill, the Guardian of the estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, Minors, praying for an order of sale of the real estate of his said wards, that it would be beneficial to the said wards that such real estate should be sold at private sale.
It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said wards, and all persons interested in said estates, appear before this Court at the Court Room thereof at the Court House in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 4th day of February, A. D., 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.
And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before said hearing of said petition in the THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
January 2d, 1867.
D. P. BARSTOW, Esq., Attorney for Guardian. j5 5t

ESTATE OF LOUIS McGLAUFLIN, DECEASED.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executrix of the Estate of Louis McGlauflin, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at her residence, No 773 Brannan street, in the city and county of San Francisco.
EMELINE McGLAUFLIN, Executrix.
San Francisco, January 5th, 1867.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Executrix. j5 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS—ESTATE OF KARL GOTTLIEB WERTHSCHUTZKY, deceased.
Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Karl Gottlieb Werthschutzky, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against, the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his law office, Nos. 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
J. W. BRUMAGIM,
Administrator of the Estate of Karl Gottlieb Werthschutzky, d29 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY and County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the Estate of HENRY MILES, deceased.
Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.
On reading and filing the petition of HARRIET MILES, the Administratrix of the Estate of HENRY MILES, deceased, setting forth that she has filed her final account of her administration of the Estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled.
It is ordered, that all persons interested in the Estate of the said Henry Miles, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court-room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 14th day of January, 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate to the heirs of said deceased, according to law.
It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks before the said 14th day of January A. D. 1857, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper published in the said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
December 13th. A. D. 1866.
Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.
I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of said City and County, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order on file and of record in my office.
Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 13th day of December, A. D. 1866.
WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
[SEAL AND STAMP.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
JAMES MCCABE, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner.
d15 5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
RUDOLPH STEINBACH, Plaintiff, vs. JOSEPH L REED, et als., Defendants
Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, and the complaint filed in the said city and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send greeting to JOSEPH L REED, CAROLINE L. REED, CHRISTIAN L LEN, PETER S McNIEL, SARAH J McNIEL, EDWARD STRODE, NEWELL WINANTS, JOHN C. FRY, JAMES RYAN, S. CLINTON HASTINGS, Administrator of the Estate of Austin E. Smith, deceased, WILLIAM SMITH, Defendants.
You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.
The said action is brought to compel the defendants to set forth the nature of their several claims in and to the lands and premises described in the complaint, and that adverse claims of said defendants may be determined by a decree of this Court, that it be declared and adjudged that the defendants, or either of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said lands or premises, and that they be forever debarred from asserting any claim thereto adverse to plaintiff, and that he is the owner thereof in fee, and for such other and further relief as to equity shall seem meet
And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.
Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 24th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-six.
Int. Rev. Stamp.) WM. LOEWY, Clerk
Cancelled. 5cts.) By W. R. SATTERLEE, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL.]
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. d22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.
MARY ELIZABETH BARRETT, Plaintiff, vs. CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.
Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send Greeting to CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.
You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.
The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the sum of $30,000, being the one-half of the common property of the parties, be adjudged to belong to and be delivered to this plaintiff; and that the care, custody and education of the children of the said parties, viz: Cornelius William and Arthur Joseph, be awarded to the plaintiff; and that pending this suit, the defendant may, by order of this Court, be restrained and enjoined from selling, or in any manner disposing of the common property referred to in the complaint—that is to say, $60,000; and that defendant be ordered to pay plaintiff $250 per month for the support of herself and children, and the further sum of $1,000 as attorneys' fees for the prosecution of this action, and for general belief.
And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply ro the Court for the relief therein demanded.
Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[SEAL.] By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
PIXLEY & SMITH, Attorneys for Plaintiff. d29 3m

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Executrix and Executor of the last will and testament of GIOVANNI MONTEVERDE, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned, at the office of A. D. Splivalo, No. 430 Jackson street, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.
RAMONA ARDONEY MONTEVERDE, Executrix.
GIUSEPPE CORDEVIOLA, Executor.
San Francisco, December 15, 1866. d15 5t

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE, - - - PROPRIETOR AND MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON, - - - - - - TREASURER.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING.
January 12th, 1867.

Charles Reade's Grand Scenic Drama,

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND.

George Fielding,	George Pauncefort
Thomas Robinson,	H. Edwards
Mr. Meadows,	H. D Thompson
Josephs,	Mrs. Harry Jackson
Haws,	G. Parney
Peter Crawle,	Harry Jackson
William Fielding,	C. L. Graves
Susan Merton,	Miss Julia Corcoran

MONDAY—

MISS JENNIE PARKER

Arrived by the last steamer and will make her first appearance as the COLLEEN BAWN.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra,	$1 00
Parquet,	50
Upper Circle,	25

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Pine street, below Montgomery.

T. MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor and Manager

THOMAS MAGURE respectfully announces that owing to the TREMENDOUS SUCCESS attendant on the Performances of

THE IMPERIAL COMPANY,
OF
JAPANESE GYMNASTS, JUGGLERS, ACROBATS,
AND TUMBLERS,

He has succeeded in making arrangements with Professor RISLEY, at the enormous nightly expense of

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS,

To prolong the stay of the JAPANESE COMPANY until the departure of the Steamer of the 19th instant, consequently they will

APPEAR NIGHTLY
IN THEIR UNRIVALLED PERFORMANCES
Until that date.

Saturday Afternoon—GRAND JAPANESE MATINEE, for Ladies and Children.

Dress Circle and Parquet, $1; Family Circle, 50 cents; Gallery, 25 cents. No extra charge for Reserved Seats.

INAUGURAL ENTERTAINMENT

OF

B'NAI BERITH
LITERARY AND SOCIAL CIRCLE, IN AID OF THE FUNDS OF THE Ladies' United Hebrew Benevolent Society,
AT PLATT' HALL,
TUESDAY EVENING, - - - JANUARY 15TH, 1867.

On which occasion will be performed, under the special superintendence of James Dowling, Esq., Stage Manager of the Metropolitan Theatre in this city, the Nautical Drama, in two acts,

BLACK EYED SUSAN.

William,	Sam. Leszynsky
Doggrass,	J. Warshawski
Gnatbrain,	J. F. Hayes
Captain Crosstree,	J. Israel
Jacob Twig,	A. Wiener
Blue Peter,	Miss Augusta Livingston

With Song and Dance,

Quid,	H. Blankenstin
Hatchet,	J. Levy
Seaweed,	Lewis
Admiral,	Nathan Jacobs
Lieutenant Pike,	A. Leszynski
Black Eyed Susan,	Miss Therese Sherk
Dolly Mayflower,	Miss Anna Goldstein

Captains, Sailors, after which
DAMON AND PYTHIAS, (in German) will be recited by Miss Therese Sherk.
To be followed by J. Stirling Cope's one act Farce,
BOX AND COX.—MARRIED AND SETTLED.

Mr. Box,	A. Wiener.	Mr. Cox,	Israel Levy
Mrs. Box,	Miss A. Livingston.	Mrs. Cox,	Miss A Goldstein
Bouncer,			Lewis

To conclude with a BALL.
Mr. Falk has charge of the Refreshment Saloons, and will serve the best the market affords.

Tickets of Admission, - - - One Dollar
Reserved Seats, Fifty cents Extra.
Seats will be reserved at the box-office of Platt's Hall, on Tuesday, from 10 A. M. to 3 P. M.
The performance will commence at 8 o'clock, precisely.

MASQUERADE BALL!

THE SECOND ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION
MASQUERADE BALL
OF THE ALEMANNIA
Will take place
AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL,
ON
SATURDAY EVENING JAN. 19, 1867.

The Hall will be beautifully decorated by Messrs. A. & T. Torning.
Chris Andres' and the Second Artillery Band have been engaged for Concert and Dance Music.
Spectators' Tickets to be had of the undersigned Committee:
LOUIS HECHT, JR., 413, 415, 417 Battery street.
S. FROHMAN, corner Jones and Post streets.
ED. GOLDSMITH, 414 Kearny street.
E. S. FREEMAN, 4 5 Sacramento street.
ALF. E. EICKSTEIN, Lick House.

"SHERMAN'S
March Through Georgia."

ADMISSION, - - - TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

THOS. NAST'S GREAT PAINTING now on Exhibition at the Fine Art Gallery of SNOW & ROOS,
219 Montgomery street, (Russ Block.)

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

H. A. COBB. R. A. SINTON.

COBB & SINTON,

H. A. COBB, - - - Auctioneer.
407 CALIFORNIA STREET.

REAL ESTATE SALE DAY,.....TUESDAY.

TUESDAY,

TUESDAY.....January 15th, 1867.
AT 12 O'CLOCK,

At Platt's Hall,

SPECIAL
GRAND CREDIT SALE
OF
2000 Homestead Lots

25X100 FEET EACH.

TERMS:

ALL SUMS OVER $600, ¼ Cash; ¼ In One Year; ¼ In Two Years; ¼ In Three Years.
All Sums Less than $600, ¼ Cash, balance 1 Year.
Deferred Payments Bearing 10 Per Cent Interest Per Annum, and Secured by Mortgage on Premises.

Title—United States Patent.

THE LANDS cover the most beautiful locality in the city of San Francisco, embracing what are familiarly known as the

O'NEIL AND HEALEY TRACTS,

Famous for productiveness of soil and freedom from the prevailing winds and fogs of the city, as well as for picturesque and beautiful views.

APPROACHES AND ROADS TO THE LANDS.

The Bay View Shell Road leads directly through the property, while the "Potrero and Bay View horse railroad" is far advanced in construction, and under heavy forfeiture to be completed and running through the tracts by 1st July next, by which latter route the distance from the City Hall is just the same as that passed over the by North Beach and Mission Railroad to its terminus on Folsom street.
Lithographed Maps gratis at our office, and at office of H. F. Williams & Co., 638 Clay street.

COBB & SINTON, Auctioneers,
407 California street.

GREAT REDUCTION!
FURNITURE
At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSING out our last year's stock of FURNITURE, etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth; and Main street, Stockton.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

ART GALLERY,
POMPEIIAN MUSEUM,
CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,
On Mission and Valencia streets.
OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

☞ An addition of TWENTY FIVE WILD ANIMALS has just been made to the Zoological department. ☜
NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.
The TREES AND SHRUBBERY are classified and named.

ADMISSION TO ALL PARTS OF THE GARDEN,.....25 CENTS.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars. Also, by Montgomery and Mission Omnibuses.

☞ Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,

Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.
REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

LIST OF LATE PUBLICATIONS

JUST RECEIVED BY

A. ROMAN & CO.

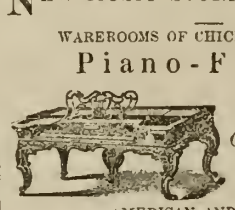
Sunnybank. A Novel. By Marion Harland
Longfellow's Prose Works. New Edition. 4 vols. 12mo.
The Vision of Sir Launfal. Beautifully Illustrated.
Bitter Sweet. New Edition Finely Illustrated.
Cotter's Saturday Night. Illustrated.
Evangeline. With 10 new Illustrations by Felix O. C. Darly.
The Doctrine of a Future Life. By Wm. R. Alger.
Culprit Fay. With 100 Illustrations by Arthur Lumley.
Ogden's U. S. Tariff for 1866.
Roses and Holly. A Gift Book for all the Year. Elegantly Illustrated.
Holy Types. By Joseph A. Seiss.
Utterly Wrecked. By Henry Morford.
Barth and Rogers on Auscultation and Percussion.
Lectures on the Communion Office.
With Gen. Sheridan in Lee's last Campaign. By a Staff Officer.
Beethoven's Letters. 1790—1826—2 vols.
Jean Ingelow's Poems. New Edition. 8vo. Handsomely Illustrated.
Whittier's Prose Works. New Edition 2 vols.
Kissing the Rod. A Novel. By Edmund Yates.
Roundhearts. By the author of "Rutledge."
Binding the Sheaves. "Win and Wear Series."
Hope and Have. By Oliver Optic. "Woodville Series."
Young Middy. By F. C. Armstrong.
Doctor Goethe's Courtships.
Who Breaks, Pays.
After the War. A Southern Tour. By W. Reid.
Early Jesuit Missions. By Bishop Kip. New Edition.
Orographic Geology By George L. Vase.
History of the Sanitary Commission. By C. J. Stille.
Martyria; or Andersouville Prison. By A. C. Hamlin.
Bancroft's History of the United States. Vol. IX.
The Picture of St. John. By Bayard Taylor.
Tennyson's Poems. Diamond Edition. 1 vol. complete.
The Elements of Heraldry. By Wm. H. Whitmore.
The Authorship of Shakspeare. By Nathaniel Holmes.
The Science of Wealth. By Amasa Walker.
Fanchon, the Cricket. By Georges Sand. New Edition.
The Philosophy of the Conditioned. By H. L Mansel.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
Publishers, Booksellers and Stationers,
417 and 419 Montgomery street.
San Francisco

NEW MUSIC STORE.

WAREROOMS OF CHICKERING & SON'S
Piano-Fortes.



MASON & HAMLIN'S
CABINET
ORGANS,

AMERICAN AND FIREIGN
Sheet Music,
VIOLIN AND GUITAR STRINGS,

Musical Instruments and Music Merchandise, Wholesale and Retail, at Lowest Rates.
KOHLER, CHASE & CO,
421 Montgomery street, next door to A. Roman & Co.,
San Francisco.

RESIGNATION OF AGENCY

OF THE
PHŒNIX INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF HARTFORD.

San Francisco, January 8th, 1867.

L. B. DELL HAS THIS DAY RESIGNED THE LOCAL Agency of the above company, and removed his office to DELL, GRANNA & CO.'S store, 511 1-2 and 513 FRONT STREET, where he is ready to effect insurance in either Home or Foreign companies, and furnish information on insurance matters free of charge. Thanking his friends and patrons for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their patronage in the future.

L. B. DELL, 511 1 2 and 513 Front street.

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS,	ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS,	WATER HOUSES,

And all kinds of

Asphaltum Work,

Done at short notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco.

McNALLY & HAWKINS,
Plummers and Gas Fitters,

Have removed their place of business to the new store on MARKET STREET, adjoining the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum,
Where they will keep constantly on hand a large and elegant assortment of GAS FIXTURES, PLUMBING MATERIALS, etc.
Buildings fitted up with Gas, Water and Steam in the most approved manner, and at the cheapest rates.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

Grand Reduction!

FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,

9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Under the Lick House.

SILKS.

Bonnet's Best BLACK SILKS reduced from $5 to $4 per yard
Ponson's Best BLACK SILKS reduced from $4 50 to $3 50 per yard.
Paulo & Conturier's BLACK SILKS reduced from $4 to $3 per yard.
Bischoff's BLACK SILKS reduced from $3 50 to $2 50 per yard
Gros de Naples COLORED SILKS reduced from $4 to $3 per yard
Gros de Lyon COLORED SILKS reduced from $4 50 to $3 50 per yard.
EVENING & BRIDAL SILKS reduced from $75 to $60.
CHENE SILKS reduced from $60 to $40.
STRIPED AND DROGUET SILKS reduced from $40 to $30

SHAWLS.

INDIA TAPIS reduced from $600 to $400.
INDIA OPEN CENTRE reduced from $300 to $200.
INDIA OPEN CENTRE reduced from $200 to $150.
INDIA OPEN CENTRE reduced from $150 to $100.
FRENCH CASHMERE LONG reduced from $500 to $350.
FRENCH CASHMERE LONG reduced from $150 to 100.
FRENCH CASHMERE LONG reduced from $100 to $75.
FRENCH CASHMERE SINGLE reduced from $200 to $150.
FRENCH CASHMERE SINGLE reduced from $75 to $50.
FRENCH CASHMERE SINGLE reduced from $50 to $35.
PAISLEY CASHMERE LONG reduced from $75 to $50.
PAISLEY CASHMERE LONG reduced from $60 to $40.
ONE RUSSIAN SABLE CAPE AND CUFFS reduced from $700 to $600.

DRESS GOODS.

EMPRESS CLOTHS, Plaid and Plain, reduced from $1 50 to $1 per yard.
EMPRESS CLOTHS, Plaid and Plain, reduced from $1 25 to 75 cents per yard.
POPLINS, Plaid and Plain, reduced from $1 50 to $1 per yard.
POPLINS, Plaid and Plain, reduced from $1 25 to 75 cents per yard.
FRENCH MERINOS reduced from $1 25 to 88 cents per yard.
OTTOMAN VELOURS, POIE DE CHEVRES, REPS, Crepes, Biarritz, Etc.

LACES.

Point de Venice Set reduced from $200 to $150.
Point d' Alencon reduced from $150 to $100.
Point de Duchesse reduced from $100 to $75.
Point Rond reduced from $75 to $50.
Point d' Angleterre reduced from $50 to $35
Point d' Angleterre reduced from $30 to $20.
Point d' Angleterre reduced from $20 to $12.
Point d' Application reduced from $15 to $10.
Lace Handkerchiefs.
Lace Collars,
Lace Barbes,
Lace Bertheas,
Lace Capes.
Point Appliqne, Chantilly, Guipure, Cluny, Valenciennes, Chantilly, Etc., by the yard.

CHANTILLY LACE FLOUNCE

Reduced from $700 to $350
Chantilly Lace Flounce reduced from $300 to $150.
Chantilly Lace Flounce reduced from $150 to $100.
Point d' Applique Flounce reduced from $250 to $150
Guipure (for Trimming of Shawls) reduced from $150 to $110.
Guipure (from Trimming of Shawls) reduced from $100 to $75.

CLOAKS.

Velvet Circulars,
Velvet Basquines,
Silk Cloaks of every style,
Astrakan Circulars,
Sadown Jacquettes,
Etc., Etc., Etc.

HOSIERY AND FURNISHING GOODS

Balbriggan Hosiery,
English Hosiery, in Cotton and Merido, for Ladies and Children.

FRENCH HOSIERY.

A full assortment of Merino and Flannel Vests and Drawers for Ladies, Gentlemen and Children.

EMBROIDERIES.

Jaconet Edgings and Insertings,
Jaconet Bands.
Embroidered Collars and Cuffs, a la Shakespeare.
Plain Linen Handkerchiefs, for Gentlemen.
Clear Lawn; Plain and Embroidered Handkerchiefs, for Ladies and Children.

HOUSEKEEPING GOODS.

Barnsleys, Linens and Damasks,
Napkins and Doylies.
Towels and Kitchen Towelings,
Nainsooks, Swiss Mulls,
French Mulls, Jaconets, Cambrics,
Bishop Lawns,
Victoria Lawns, Organdies,
French Percales,
Etc, Etc., Etc.

PIANO AND TABLE COVERS,

RICHLY EMBROIDERED.

Velvet Table Covers,
Jacquart Table Covers, Etc., Etc.

MOURNING GOODS.

Poplins, Empress, Ottomans, Crepes, Velours, Barpours, Tamise, Merinos, Thibets, Bombazines, French and English Alpacas, Crapes, Collars; Sleeves, Handkerchiefs, Etc.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.,

RETAIL STORE,

9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
LICK HOUSE BLOCK.

Wholesale House,

107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE STREET.

CALIFORNIA BOOK STORE

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 9. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 19, 1867. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

"Mark Twain" on Chamber-Maids; Sipperton's Wife, a Story; Artemus Ward in London; "Black Sheep;" Cheap Labor and Chinamen; Reflections of a Miserable Unfortunate; Literary Gleanings; Love-Letters; "Lion's Mouth," Female Suffrage; How Nouns are Abused; Correspondence; Amusements; Poetry—Deceived, by W. A Kendall, Etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO

Alas for the "Alta!"

Two weeks before the appearance of the dreaded Times Grandmumma Alta laid in a stock of fashionable leading articles, articles prepared regardless of expense by the best artists in the business. The Times came out, has not yet gone in, but has proved a very harmless rival even to the Alta. The Bulletin has, since the appearance of the Times, published daily a supplement which is certainly, to those who wish for well selected light reading, worth the price charged for paper and supplement. It often contains as much and as good reading matter as one of the English Magazines. We admire the energy of the Bulletin, and, as it is a fact that it is the very best paper on the Pacific Coast, do not refrain from publishing that fact. But the Alta! Alas! Alas! Alas! Grandmamma Alta recovered from the shock which the Times gave her very speedily. Two weeks after the appearance of this long threatened monster, Granny said:— "It ain't goin' to amount to much, and I guess I'll reduce my expenses. All the ribbons and finery I've been wearin, of late cost a sight of money. I have got along these many years without any man who understood grammar, or French, or Latin, or any of them nonsenses, and seeing that since I've been employing grammarians and such like, people havn't advertised no freer, I'll stop." Mistaken Grandmamma! She has stopped; she has curtailed her expenses. She now employs cheap men to write editorials. We can copy one of these editorials in full, as it is short. We give it as a specimen of the style of editorial article which is furnished by the leading morning journal of San Francisco in the year 1867.

"Madam Rumor was busy yesterday with her poisonous tongue, circulating ridiculous reports that the America had arrived from San Juan with the cholera on board. It was like the story of the 'three black crows,' and only culminated when it was known beyond a peradventure that the steamer had not arrived. It is singular how easily some people will allow themselves to be excited on idle rumors. It is well understood that epidemics can find no lodgment in this city, and, moreover, medical men assert that the cholera is not contagious. Even if the steamer should arrive with disease on board, a rigid quarantine can confine it to a spot, even as Richelieu saved himself by drawing the magic circle of the Church with a wave of the hand. If idle tongues could be busy in some legitimate channel, the America or a dozen ships might arrive and depart, and none but those interested in the vessels be any wiser of their coming or going. Sensible people will mind their own business and not allow themselves to be scared into a belief that they have any extra pains or aches.'"

This editorial article is throughout written in the style of a young lady who has still to remain six terms at school before her education is completed. The young lady, however, would receive a stern reprimand, did she write such a sentence as:—"It was the story of 'the three black crows,' and only culminated when it was known beyond a peradventure that the steamer had not arrived." The young lady would have been told that the story instead of reaching its culmen or highest point, when it was known that the steamer had not arrived, would be utterly destroyed and fall to atoms. As everybody in the office appears to have a hand in writing for the Alta at present, the "devil" writing the theatrical notices, the proof-reader reviewing the books (when "the establishment" cannot afford to employ so thoroughly competent a reviewer of all literary productions—except the CALIFORNIAN—as was "on" last week) and we positively believe that Fitz Smythe has to write the editorials. Let the Alta beware! The Times is not dead. It may be turned into a newspaper yet. The report that sixteen assessments have already been levied on the stock is an invention of the enemy. The Times will very likely live longer than the Flag did, The Alta must wake up.

A Japanese Disease.

The Japan Herald of September 29th, gives an account of the last illness and death of the Tycoon. The Herald states the cause of death to have been:—"a disease resembling dropsy, unknown in Europe, but to which the Japanese are liable, and called by them kake." The discovery of a new disease creates as much excitement—not to say satisfaction—among medical men, as does the discovery of a new species of animal among the students of natural History. This disease might be transplanted to Europe we should imagine, and Tycoon kake would become fashionable. But how provoking it would be, after the doctors had taken so much trouble, if this kake which killed the Tycoon turned out to be nothing but a variation of the old fashioned stoma-kake which European little boys who eat too much, are frequently troubled with.

"Eggs .71 Dozen.."

In the report of the amount of provisions allowed per capita in the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Asylum, the following bewildering statement occurs:—"Eggs .71 dozen." How much does that amount to in whole eggs? We have studied over this problem until the perspiration has stood in great beads on our manly brow and trickled in small rivulets down our innocent nose; we have studied still longer until the rivulets became cataracts and threatened to wash away the bridge of the before-alluded-to innocent nose, and still the problem remains to us misolved. We appeal to the public how much egg—white, yolk and shell—per diem, will .71—that is eggs .71—afford to a deaf, a dumb or a blind child? A friend, or we might perhaps better describe him as a fiend who wishes to set us to calculating again with a view to causing us to accomplish the act of self destruction, mentally and bodily, suggests that 71 with a dot before it means 71 one hundredths or one hundred 71ths or something else in algebra. What is this to us? Are we to be driven deaf, dumb, blind and distracted, by attempting to solve such arithmetical conundrums? We call upon Warring Wilson to state whether each child under his care receives 100 71ths of an egg per annum, or 71 100ths. We know that the amount of butter allowed per capita—both for hair dressing purposes and for food—is small, but the allowance of egg—the decimal fraction of egg allowed, appears to us to be still more scanty. Is this "eggs .71 per capita," intended to euphemistically express the fact that the Superintendent allows the children under his care to luxuriate in egg broth—or the water in which his eggs have been boiled? We give it up. We may be all wrong in these suppositions. We never were good at figures. We have forgotten our multiplication table and have much more comfort since we did so. We glory in our ignorance of figures, never even count our change out of a five dollar piece when we have made the purchase of an article costing three bits, and if eggs .71 dozenths means one egg a mouth for the deaf and dumb to look at and the blind to cut, we apologize to the Superintendent. If the Bulletin has made a mistake in publishing the report, the Bulletin ought to be ashamed of itself. A few problems like the above egg riddle would send thousands to Stockton Lunatic Asylum.

Benjamin's Troubles.

We know that Benjamin got into trouble when he went down to Egypt, in consequence of an article of silver plate being found in his sack of corn when he was about to depart homewards. Benjamin's character was speedily cleared, and we do not hear that in after-life he was ever taunted with allusions to "that silver cup." There is an unhappy Benjamin in the United States, who went down to New Orleans, did a little speculation in corn, and his enemies declare, carried off numerous pieces of silver plate. One of the most persistent of Benjamin's persecutors is "Brick Pomeroy." Brick is constantly ejaculating "spoons" when Benjamin's name is mentioned, and devotes column after column of the La Crosse Democrat to abuse of the unhappy Benjamin. Goaded to desperation, at last by the indefatigable "Brick," Benjamin has appealed to the Courts for protection—he has sued Brick Pomeroy for libel. The Bulletin charitably hopes that he has a character which it is possible to libel, It says:—

"Gen. Butler will of course, with his remarkable pertinacity, and his thorough knowledge of legal practice, leave nothing undone or unsaid that will tend to establish his reputation as an honest man for all time to come. The confidence with which he goes into court is a strong indication that he will be successful. That he may be, must be the hope of every loyal man."

It would be as well perhaps if the prayers of the congregation in every church were requested for Benjamin during this great trial. It will, indeed, be a great thing if Benjamin Butler establishes his reputation as an honest man for all time to come.

Poor Prince!

One of the most faithful actors who ever appeared on the San Francisco stage died on Wednesday last. This actor filled every part committed to him with the greatest fidelity, sticking close to business and never indulging in the reprehensible custom of "gagging" for the purpose of raising a laugh. The character in which he won most fame, was that of "The Dog of Montargis," in this he never failed to bring down the house. Off the stage, Prince was loved and admired by all who knew him. It is supposed that disgust at the proceedings of the Poundmaster and his pack of poisoners hastened the end of poor Prince. The good old dog has left this stage to appear on another and happier plane, we trust, where stupid Supervisors and civic assassins are not allowed to exist. Many a person will feel more grief at hearing of the demise of J. W. Shaeffer's dog Prince than they could pretend to experience at the death of many bipeds of their acquaintance,

Cool—Very.

One of the Sunday papers of this city, in reviewing May Wentworth's Poetry of the Pacific, says:

"A large proportion of these poems were first given to the public through the columns of the Sunday Mercury, whence they were extensively copied by Eastern and even European journals. Among the pieces presented are several by the late Edward Pollock, including his 'Olivia,' 'The Chandos Picture,' and 'Adeline.' Lyman Goodman, also a favorite contributor of ours, who died young in years and full of promise, is kept in memory by several of his most exquisite conceptions—among others, 'The Fair Tamborinist and 'Minnie Adair.' John R. Ridge, Frank Soule, W. A. Kendall, R. F. Greeley, James Linen. 'Caxton' (W. H. Rhodes), C. W. Stoddard, E. G. Paige ('Dow, Junior'), J. F. Bowman, J. T. Goodman, Miss Pittsinger, Carrie Carlton, Jean and Fanny Bruce, and many others equally talented are embalmed in these elegant pages."

This is delightfully cool. Lyman Goodman "also a favorite contributer of ours," died long before the paper referred to commenced its existence, and consequently never contributed a line to said paper. The same is true of Pollock. In fact, the whole paragraph quoted is an exquisite specimen of the most impudent style of journalistic "blowing."

The Deaf, Dumb and Blind Asylum.

The semi-annual report of the Superintendent of the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Asylum at the Mission Dolores, shows a satisfactory state of affairs. The health of the pupils has been excellent, and their conduct extremely good. In order to prove that this institution is carried on in an economical manner, a statement has been prepared comparing the reports of the Deaf and Dumb and Deaf, Dumb and Bliud Asylums in other States with that issued by Warring Wilkinson, the Superintendent of the California Institution. As regards economy, the result of this comparison is favorable to California, but we are sorry to see that deaf and dumb children have a more liberal allowance of food in New York than in California:

NEW YORK (Deaf and Dumb.)—Butter, per capita. 43.40 lbs; coffee and chicory, 5 62 lbs: meats and fish, 188.12 lbs; lard 2.69 lbs; molasses, 3.87 gallons; sugar, 33.41 lbs; tea, 1.75 lbs; breadstuffs, cost $14 40.

CALIFORNIA (Deaf and Dumb and Blind)—Butter, per capita. 26.46 lbs; coffee, 4.53 lbs; eggs, .71 dozen; lard. 2 56 lbs; meats, 186.48 lbs; molasses, 2.27 gallons; sugar, 26.61 lbs; tea, 1.68 lbs; breadstuffs cost $10.

The living in the New York Asylum appears to be far more generous than in our California Institution. We trust that the difference in the allowance of provisions per capita is caused by more economy being exercised in the California than in the New York Asylum. We trust that these unfortunates who are deprived of one, two, or three of their five senses have an opportunity frequently afforded them to gratify the sense of taste at dinner time. California should be able to afford to conduct her charities on at least as liberal a basis as those of New York.

Sporting Extraordinary.

A few days since a party of sportsmen went out from San Quentin "after decks," and in the vicinity of California City they "struck game" in abundance. Returning to their quarters, they were not a little exultant at finding that the birds were in splendid condition, averaging four pounds and a half when cleaned. A few days afterward the hunting party were enlarging upon their success at Sheppard's Hotel at the Point, describing the size and splendid condition of the game they had bagged, when an innocent looking youth who was present suddenly spoke up, saying: "Wal now, that accounts for it. I reckon them was my brother's ducks. He missed ten on 'em the same day you say you was a huntin' in the neighborhood; and no wonder they was fat and in good condition, for he had been a fattenin' of 'em up for more'n six weeks." The "hunters" left incontinently, and have not since been heard from in the neighborhood of California City.

[The "Lion's Mouth" has been wide open this week and has swallowed greedily many extraordinary morsels. The above comes from one of our idiot contributors who occasionally becomes a kleptomahia with regard to articles of antiquity in the shape of "jokes" and "funny stories."]

A Horrible Conundrum.

Why is the Emperor Maximilian like a donkey with a bag of nails on his back?

Because—as in the case of Saul—it is useless for him to kick against the pricks. [This conundrum was sent to us by a lunatic who became an inmate of the Asylum at Stockton in consequence of attending the Rev. Mr. Earle's revival meetings. We have not bestowed thought on the subject for fear of being sent to our contributor against our will, but we presume that the pricks which this maniac characterizes as hard for Maximilian to kick against, are the pricks of Uncle Sam's bayonets, which he will feel if he does not very soon get out of Mexico.]

THE second half of the current year has witnessed a succession of great calamities. The Portland fire, the devastation of the Bahamas by hurricanes, the famine in India, the inundations in France, the Quebec fire, have appended each after the other to public sympathy and benevolence. And recently reported by the Cable, comes news of a fearful flood in the North of England, involving the loss of many lives, and doubtless a vast amount of property. All this, too, on the heel of desolating wars. It is hardly wonderful that the soothsayers find it a time for prophesying, and many looking after a sign of what is yet to come.

SLEPPINGTON'S WIFE.

BY F. C. BURNAND.

I HAVE a reputation to lose. The sooner I can lose it the better. It is, I regret to say, the reputation for being a gay Lothario. Nay, more than this, and worse than this—for gay Lotharios, as far as I know anything about such characters, are flirts, are men-about-town, are known in certain ancertain circles, and apart from all questions of morality—I must mention that I am a stickler for morality, a stickler of the strictest sect of sticklers—apart, I say, from all moral questions, these fellows do small harm to any but themselves. Now, I never had the reputation of being a "gay dog" or a "sly dog," or any other dog, until now, when I am spoken of as a sad dog.

A friend of mine, a sensible sort of fellow, shook his head at me only yesterday, and said, "he was afraid I was a sad dog."

"Look here, Mivins," I said to him—from which you will gather that his name is Mivins—"What d'you mean?"

His reply, given with a cunning expression of his eye, was, "Oh, everybody knows it."

"My dear Mivins," I said, most seriously, "do not let us jest.

Here he laughed. I am annnyed when a man laughs to whom I'm talking seriously.

I want to know why he calls me sad dog.

"Well," he begins, and hesitates.

I don't take my eye off him, and I pause for reply.

"Well," he begins again.

And I say, "Well?" inquiringly.

"Well," he retards, slowly, as if demurring to some statement on my part.

This, I feel, is not coming to the point; so I put to him a leading question.

"Have you heard any absurd report about me?"

"Well, he replies, "not exactly about you, but—"

"But what" I ask, as sternly as ever, because now we are coming to the point.

"Well, you know——" he recommences, evidently evasive. I catch him up sharply:

"I do not know."

Whereupon he says, screwing up his umbrella, so as to have something to attract his attention and thus avoid meeting my gaze:

"Well, you see——"and stops.

I tell him once for all that I do not see. I rouse myself, and energetically appeal to him, as a friend, to inform me why, since my short absence, from England, I have acquired a reputation utterly foreign to my real nature; why club acquaintances point me out to their club acquaintances; why, if I am at a bachelor's party, and any question arises whose tendency is not clearly and resplendently virtuous, I am appealed to as the person "who ought to know." I want to know why, and let him tell me, in the name of friendship, if he can, why, if the conversation in my presence turns accidently upon Divorce cases, on the state of the marriage laws in different countries—I say, I want to know why the—why the dickens they should address me as an authority upon such matters as these? I know I have read law: I have been in a special pleader's office, but I am no practitioner: and, in short, to come, as is my object, to the point, what the dickens does everyone mean by it?

By way of answer he asks me not to be offended at what he's going to say. Of course not, I tell him.

"Then," he returns, "I'll mention a name—Mrs. Montgomery Sleppington." He has come to the point, and sticks there.

"I thought so," is my reply. "Walk into my room and I'll tell you the whole story."

"The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," says he, jocularly. Again I remind him that this is no time for trifling, whereupon he proposes a cigar. As it will keep him quiet while I am giving him information of a most important character, I accede to his request, allowing him to light his own Havanas, although my curtains will suffer: for I am particular in these matters, and cannot afford either my amber furniture to be tarnished by tobacco, or my fair fame by the breath of scandal.

Mivins is a club man, Mivins moves about in society: he knows everyone, speaks to anyone, will do you a good turn or a bad turn with equal readiness, according to the material at his command. If he knows a good story about you, he will tell it and spare not. If he knows a bad story he will tell that. I do not think he ever improvises; he recounts. Therefore, if I want to correct a wrong impression, which has got abroad about myself, I give Mivins the right idea that I want conveyed hither and thither; and though I know Mivins will not give up the first, yet I am certain that he will annotate it with the latest intelligence, of which he will at first be the exclusive possessor. Therefore I tell Mivins this story about myself and Mrs. Montgomery Sleppington (who I heartily wish I'd never met.) and to corroborate every statement, I show him, as a friend, extracts from my diary, kept from time to time during my tour, and hearing every possible mark of having been written when and where I assert they were written.

Mivins in a very easy chair, and a very easy attitude, watches his smoke vanishing into the air, on its road toward my curtains, and says, "Go ahead." I go ahead. And therefore should this meet the eye of anybody who wants a strong moral lesson, let him put himself in the position of Mivins, and let him consider me as now going ahead for his especial benefit.

Now then, Mivins listening, I am talking:

"You know I am fond of travelling, Mivins?" (He nods: don't believe he did know it)—"and when you do want a holiday go out of England, that is what I say."

Mivins observes that that is what he says too, which detracts from the originality of my remark. I ask him if he minds my reading occassional notes from my diary. He says, "Oh not at all;" only he adds, "get on."

"Well, Mivins, this year I determined to visit the great St. Bernard and get a dog."

Mivans wants to know if I've got one of those beasts here. I tell him I'll come to that in time. I detect a desire upon his part to tell me a story about some friend of his who did get a St. Bernard, but I stop him at the outset. He compromises for silence on his part by a request for sherry. I have it at hand. He is supplied, and I am going ahead again. So is he with the sherry. I continue:—

"You know"—I assume he knew a great deal, but he doesn't: this flatters him, I think—"you know what a quiet fellow I am: if I can get a congenial companion I am delighted to travel with him; if not. (and being a quiet man, such a friend is difficult to find,) I travel alone. One often picks up people on the journey, and sometimes they turn out very satisfactorily, and if they don't, one can drop them."

"I see," interrupted Mivins. "You picked up Mrs. Montgomery." He doesn't see: it is nothing of the sort. "Well, then, go ahead," says Mivins.

I am coming to the point as fast as possible, so it's perfectly absurd for Mivins to jump to conclusions. Mivans apologises. He thought it was the old story. I reprove him with a look, and continue:

"When I got to Dieppe ——"

"You don't get St. Bernard's at Dieppe," objects Mivins.

"I know that," I tell him, somewhat testily, and he apologises again for the interruption.

"When I got to Dieppe I was all alone—" ("You started alone, didn't you?" interpolation by Mivins. Answered by me, annoyed—"Yes")—"and felt rather dull. I made up my mind to dine at the common board of the house." ("Meaning table d'hote, I suppose," says Mivins. A nod of assent from me.) "Well, at the table opposite to me were seated a lady and a gentleman. I have an excellent memory for faces, not for names," (Mivins says, "So has he,") "and I was certain that I'd seen the gentleman before." "Your tailor, eh?" Mivins inquires. Mivins is not serious: I regret it, but he is not. However, I let him know, without spoiling my story, that he wasn't my tailor: whereat Mivins appears disappointed.) "He spoke French admirably: at least I imagine he spoke it admirably, as he talked fluently in the language of the country, and kept up a conversation with his fair neighbor on the one hand, and a dark neighbor on the other, during the whole of the dinner-time. I didn't join in myself, being somewhat depressed. "Mivins interrupts, "I suppose you said, 'Wee, Mossoo, commong voo portay kickshows.'" "You!" I answer, ironically, "might have said it; but I can be serious, when it is necessary." He begins to see it is necessary now, and looks at his watch. Before I go on, can I give him another cigar? I will send out for one. I send out, by his direction, for three "marinieros cahalleros" first brand.)

I resume:—

"The gentleman's face bothered me. With the lady's I was very much struck. She was a very fine, handsome, woman." (At this point I am obliged to restrain a slight ebullition of levity on Mivins' part. And I resume:)

"A very fine woman; about thirty, I should say. She had certainly the finest eyes I ever saw. Flashing Spanish eyes. A thin black line of an eyebrow. Long dark eyelashes, and—and"—(feeling I'm not equal to any description of a nose beyond "finely chiselled," I pull up abruptly with)—"that's all."

(Here the marinieros caballeros arrive. Mivins lights a mariniero, fills another glass of sherry, and now we are going on again.)

"I thought they both"—("The lady and gentleman?" asks Mivans. "Yes, the lady and gentleman," I reply,)—"looked at me as if they had seen me before somewhere. I felt a little embarrassed; and became more and more depressed with each course. Why, I don't know," ("Bad wine," suggests Mivins.) "I think it must have been a presentiment of ill."

"After dinner I took up a newspaper and read therein, that about this time of the year numbers of people were making pilgrimages to La Salette.

"'A pilgrim!' I said to myself. It fitted in with my humor. And I at once divided between pilgrims and St. Bernard dogs.

"Yet what did I know of pilgrimages? What did I know, if it came to that, of St. Bernard dogs? What was there to see? The same question applies in the other case.

"The paper informed me, a shrine, and a monastery. Well after all, St. Bernard only ended in a monastery. Salette's monastery was on a mountain. St Bernard's too. It was a difficulty; I was unsettled.

"I stood on the steps of the hotel-door and looked out to sea. My vis-á-vis (male) of the table-d'hote came out and did the same.

"Naturally enough we got into conversation.

"I had seen him before, as I thought, only once though, when on circuit, had I met with Mr. Montgomery, who was then a promising senior-junior. After a time he became Mr. Montgomery Sleppington, for a property, but still continued his practice. He married, and was now out for the vacation with his wife.

"'Pilgrimage!' said Mrs. Sleppington, 'quite a mediæval notion. How delightful.'

"I think this settled the question in my mind as to my destination. The next observation of Sleppington's settled the means of arriving at it.

"'We have a carriage and horses here, and will be happy to take you any distance. The country is charming.'

"I was afraid, I said, I should inconvenience them. 'Not at all,' she assured me, so did he.

"It was arranged, we started. I don't know, Mivins, if you are acquainted with Grenoble?" Mivins is not, and doesn't care about description, as he wants to 'get to the point.' By the way, would I mind giving him a biscuit? I accommodate him. We go on again:

"Well, we enjoyed the journey amazingly. It was quite a new sensation to me to be traveling in such company. Mr. Sleppington was a very well-informed man, and his wife a charming conversationalist. As for pilgrims, we didn't see many of them: as we subsequently found, they had preceded us. The country was all fresh to us, and if they say two's company and three's none, in this case the rule may have been proved by the exception.

"I refer for corroboration to my diary.

"'Stopping at a small hotel. Mrs. Sleppington is certainly delightful. Sleppington is busy with law papers which he carries about with him. Mrs. S. is one of those women to whom it is no trouble to talk. I wish Julia was more like Mrs. Sleppington.' (I have to explain to Mivins, who interrupts me with, "Who's Julia? Werry peculiar," that Julia's the young lady to whom I have been engaged for some time. He apologises, and I resume.) 'She understands me. She can talk upon the highest subjects and cookery. Julia doesn't know anything of cookery. She is most accomplished. Julia plays nicely, but doesn't sing. I don't think Sleppington worthy of her. I mean he's so much engrossed in his law that he cannot pay her sufficient attention. There is nothing so delightful as being in company with a seasible married woman, you can talk to her differently to ordinary misses. Of course I love Julia, and don't regret my engagement.' (I don't like Mivins' smile with his eyes shut.) 'Mrs. Sleppington is just the sort of woman one could get on with, even apart from society. Well, so's Julia, I think, but Julia wants experience. Speaking of her to Jenson, whom I met, en passant, he said, "Ah, but she's got the deuce of a temper." I denied it. I had been with them some days, I had been with them under the most trying circumstances, and she was never put out, at least, not with me, and her husband really interfered so little that she couldn't be angry with him. "Ah!" said Jenson, "she gives it him when they're alone. If you were her husband, you'd soon wish yourself somewhere else." I am glad that Jenson was obliged to go somewhere else very speedily, as if he'd stayed long I should have quarreled with him on the subject. We didn't quarrel, thank goodness, I was saved that.' (I don't think Mivins is listening. Yes he is, he says, and tries to prove it to me by repeating my last words, "quarreled with him on the subject." I beg Mivins to attend, as it is of importance, and I am, I assure him, coming rapidly to the point. I resume):

"Well, I will tell you; we stopped at Grenoble just one day too long. A special messenger came for Sleppington. He was to return to England immediately. Something most important, legally and politically, required his immediate presence. This news he announced at the breakfast-table. Mrs. Sleppington didn't faint: she didn't cry out; she didn't complain. I admired the heroic fortitude of the woman, the devotion of the wife.

"Sleppington said he didn't know what to do.

"'Go I suppose,' observed Mrs. Sleppington, giving me some more tea.

"'Yes, yes; but what are you to do? It is very hard to deprive you of the only trip abroad you've had for years.' Thoughtful, this, of Sleppington.

"'Well,' she admitted; 'it is disappointing.' She added, as an afterthought, 'But why not leave me here; you go transact your business and return?'

"Sleppington was silent. He didn't like the proposal; she would be so lonely.

"'Oh no,' she replied; 'Mr. Smythie will be here for some time longer'—talking at me—'and if he wouldn't mind looking after an old married woman like myself——'

"'Oh! I—' don't preeisely kuow what I was going to say: I think my remark would have been of a complimeutary character however.

When Sleppington interrupted me with—

"'Oh! it's very kind of you, my dear fellow,' as if I'd made the offer; 'but I can't think of bothering you.'

"Again, I don't know what I was going to say, but I fancy I only replied:

"'Oh, don't mention it,' feebly.

"'I've got it,' said Sleppington, brightening up. 'I'll only go as far as Paris, telegraph first for the clerk to meet me there with full particulars. Then, if I am required in England, I must go; if uot, I return at once. That needn't take more than three days.'

"'And I will go with you, do you mean, or remain here?' inquired Mrs. Sleppington.

"'Oh, it's no use doubling the expense; remain here.'

"In my diary I find, 'Charming couple. No jealousy on either side; no suspicion. I wish Julia were here. Good lesson for Julia.'

"Sleppington, who was a thorough man of business, was off in two hours' time. Before he went I stopped him (for I don't mind telling you, Mivins, that I had had time to refleet upou my peculiar situation,) to ask him if he was certain of returning in three days. I explained that I did not wish to appear rude, and made some apology on account of future arrangements. In fact, Mivins, I was puzzled; and though I admired Mrs. Sleppington hugely, yet somehow or another, although, previously, I would rather have had her to talk to than Julia, yet now I would have given two hundred pounds to have been compelled to escort Julia instead of Mrs. Sleppington.

"'My dear fellows,' he said—I had been his dear fellow for the last two hours since breakfast—'don't bother yourself. Nothing's certain in this world. I hope I shall be back; in fact, it's ten to one I am; but, as you've heard, it is on the cards that I may be called off. However, don't you be under apprehension'—he thought I was alluding to money matters—'whenever my wife wants anything, draw upon me for any sum. Mind, I won't'—he was very impressive here—'I won't have you spend anything on your own account. Put this all down to me. Draw on me.'

"I shook him heartily by the hand, and somehow felt as grateful to him as if he'd made me a present of a thousand pounds.

"We were both of us very hearty at parting; Mrs. Sleppington was at her window, encouraging him on his road with a smile.

"What do you mean?" asks Mivins. "Well, I felt as if I was somebody else. There was hanging about me the notion of somebody else. I can't exactly explain, it was a hazy, dazy kind of feeling; and in anything but a cheerful mood I went up stairs to our sitting-room,

"Our sitting-room. Whose sitting-room? Why, undoubtedly Sleppington's. Hitherto I have been invited there as a guest: now I came in by right, and yet it was Sleppington's. I seemed to be dreaming. His last words had been 'draw upon him.' Dwelling upon this phrase, in the absence of Mrs. Sleppington from our, I mean the, room, I became awake to its utter vagueness. How was I to draw upon him? With my cheque-book? No, evidently not. With his? Probably. He had no doubt left it with Mrs. Sleppington, and then—Yes, but in that case. she would draw on him, not I. And yet, on further consideration, how the deuce could she draw on him? She couldn't sign his name, nor, of course, could I.

"On referring to my diary, I find that my opinion at the time was—

"'It's all very well to say "draw upon me," but how?

"'Now Sleppington's gone, I feel a constraint in addressing Mrs. S., which I never experienced before. I don't like to be too much with her, the people here will think it so odd. I don't like being too much away from her, or she'll think it so unkind, and will complain to her husband. I wish to goodness I'd goue away before the special messenger came.

"'It rained this afternoon. I sat the whole time between luncheon and dinner in our—in the sitting-room. She was silent; so was I. She found fault with the country, with the weather, with the dulness of the place, which last was a hit at me. I roused myself: what could I do? Find out if there was anything lively in the evening? I asked the waiter; the landlord; everybody. Yes; there were to be some illuminations, and the peasantry had got a dance and a sort of fair, if fine. If Madame would like, he, the landlord, would order a carriage for Madame and Monsieur. It is almost impossible to explain to these people that she is not my wife. I tried it with the waiter, and I fancy the waiter was slightly shocked at what I intended to be a most correct explanation, and I left him, I am afraid, under very erroneous impression of my morality."

"Well," says Mivins, lighting "cabollero" number two, "you saw old Phigg there, who proposed you for the club last year."

"I did, Mivins; and I owe it to Phigg, confound him, that I have been shunned like a Pariah ever since my return to England—at least, by all my respectable acquaintances—and have received 'not at home' for an answer when I called in Portman Square on Julia, who, p'raps you didn't know" (he didn't,) "is Phigg's niece."

"I drove Mrs. Sleppington to the fete. We walked about and saw the illuminations. She complained of the carriage, of the horses, of the driver, of everything, and, always indirectly, of my dulness. Her wants were legion. She was always apologising for wanting, but always wanting. I refer to my diary, Mivins, to give you some idea of it.

"'2nd day with Mrs. Sleppington.—She kept me waiting for breakfast. Called from her bed-room door, would I ask for her boots. Did so. Got them. Would I get the other boots she wore yesterday. Got them. She had no bell there, and wanted some more hot water. I ran up and down stairs for her. Being dressed, she prefers dining in the salle a manger. So down we go. It is there I see Phigg. Phigg recognised me. I felt; but I avoided Phigg. I wish I hadu't; and yet it would have been so difficult to explain matters to Julia's uncle. I won't recognise him as long as he stays here, and then (as he's rather a stupid old fool) he may think that he's made a mistake. Mrs. Sleppington then asked me, "Why I didn't talk?" Well, I didn't like to give Julia's uncle as my reason; but he was, and will be, as long as we all stay in this place.'

"Fancy, Mivins, my hearing old Phigg ask the waiter 'who that was,' and seeing the garcon whisper behind his hand. Worse, my dear Mivins; fancy her insisting on my taking her out for a drive, not up the mountains and out of the way, but through the village to any notable place for tourists, where everyone saw us; and then on our return to the hotel, there was old Phigg at the door, telling young Penthorne, his partner's son, that 'he's sorry for it—sad thing—Smythie—Sleppington's wife.'

"My diary says—'4th day.—Mr. S. still absent. I have now a recognised position at Grenoble. We are pointed at thus: 'That's Smythie with Sleppington's wife.' I went up, desperately, to old Phigg. He shunned me. I will try young Penthone. He has gone. It is a delicate subject to talk to Mrs. S. upon. And yet she will suffer more than I. She is a woman of sense. I will speak to her. First to explain to Phigg. Inquire for him, He has gone. And if back to England, what will Julia say?'"

"In fact," says Mivins, what was said; I know what you said and what you thought." ("The case was strong," pleads Mivins.) I admit it.

"But," Mivins wants to know, "how did you get rid of her?"

"I'll tell you while you finish that caballero. I mentioned the report about ourselves to her as pleasantly as possible. She started up like a fury. 'What!' she said, 'did you not knock the man down?' I said, I couldn-t knock Julla's uncle down. (I didn't call him Julia's uncle, though.) I explaiued 'twas the waiter in the first place. 'Then,' she exclaimed, 'send for him, or for the landlord; I'm not going to stop to be insulted!' I attempted to pacify her. She would allude to what her husband would have done had he been here. I pointed out that had I pommelled the landlord on her behalf, that would have only made the case stronger against us. She would take no apology; I felt that by implieation I was a coward,—I was reduced to such a state of nervous desperation by this fury of a woman, that I had almost made up my mind to rush down stairs, and, for sake of peace and quietness punch the landlord's head,—wheu she said, 'No, pay our account, and we will go at once.'

"Now came the timewhen I was to see how the process of 'drawing upon' Sleppington was to be aecomplished. One thing was certain, she had no money; another thing was equally certain, that the bill must be paid; a third thing became quite certain, namely, that I must pay it. And I did. Never mind, I thought, you and I go as far as Paris together, there you'll meet your husband.

"My dear Mivins, she wouldn't hear of it. She said, I'd proposed Salette and she wouldn't leave without seeing the monastery and the shrine in the mountains.

"I reasoned; she was above reason; I argued; she was beyond argument. She stormed at me; she said her husband should hear of my conduct. No laughing matter, my dear Mivins; and finally she burst into tears—How mistaken I had been in Mrs. Sleppington! her temper was awful.

"Then she insisted on going as a pilgrim; or rather, she insisted upon making the ascent as a mounted pilgrimage, requiring me on accouut of the expense—so considerate—to walk. What pilgrims! she complaining of the donkey, of the man, of me, of everything, all the way up; and I in the worst temper I was ever in in my life, grumbling, and stumbling up the rough road.

"When we reached the monastery, the arrivals of pilgrims had been so numerous, that there was only one bed-room.

"In this place, Mivins, you must know that the Monks take charge of the males, and the Sisters of the females; and so per force Mrs. Sleppington was taken from me and put in the only vacant room. How grateful I was for my deliverance!

"It was now, Mivins, for the first time that I found she didn't speak French even as well as myself. She couldu't make her attendant understand her, and, while I was walking quietly up and down in the sort of terrace, she leant out of her window to me, storming because she couldn't get anything to eat or drink, and couldn't make anyoue attend to or understand her.

"I explained to her that the men were separated from the women, and she then denounced, luckily in English, the monks, the nuns, the bishops, the priests, and, above all, me for bringing her there.

"There and then, Mivins, I formed a resolution. Never take charge of another man's wife.

"I made up my mind to go away and leave her in the monastery, I did indeed! when luckily, Sleppington returned, and made the ascent of La Salette himself. I saw him, but not to speak to. I took my guide and donkey and went down the hill. To Grenoble—to Paris—home. Do you understand?"

"Perfectly, my dear boy," returns Mivins. "It's all humbug about your having run away with Mrs. Sleppington."

"With her! Mivins; I ran away from her."

Note.—I have, since giving Mivins this instruction, been able to explain matters to Julia, aud old Phigg has himself called upon Sleppington. Young Penthorne's mouth has been stopped, and Mivins has done the truth good service, and settled the matter with society generally.

Between us we've wiped the mud off: my friends no longer eall me "sad dog," "slyboots," and so forth; I have regained my ancient respeetability; but, for all that, I avoid the Sleppingtons.—Christmas Number of Once a Week.

Venice.—Venice is a collection of 117 islets, divided by 149 canals, connected by 380 bridges, and pierced by 2059 infinitely narrow and labyrinthine streets. Almost every foot of the city is built upon piles. Each of its 15,000 houses is washed by the sea-water, and of its 130,000 people not one ever rode upon wheels down the mainland of his city. Making a broad spiral ribbon of blue sea. Through the longest diameter of Venice, passes the Grand Canal, the most wonderful water panorama in the world—in no degree like the dull brick facing of the Flemish and Dutch city canals, but a highway to marble palaces, into which are burned the dyes of a Southern sun, and all the floridness of the Goth blossoms in their architecture. Three bridges ouly aeross this Grand Canal, two of them practical and modern; the middle bridge, famed in all lands, is the Rialto, a high archway of shops and multitudes, under which, like docile crocodiles, gondolas shoot their beaks of steel. Upon the surface of this peopled archipelago there are 294 open places or campi. Most of them were spaces to give some church perspeetive; but two thirds of the way down the city, where it narrows to almost its smallest girth, lies the only square of greater length than a sling's throw, the wondrous Piazza of San Marco. This piazza is like nothing in America. From the days of Petrarch, who loved it, it has been a marvel. It is a great oblong square, 600 feet long by 230 feet wide, paved with hewn blocks of marble, bordered on three sides by a marble palace, faced with long arcades, which show gilded cafes and splendid shops of jewelry beneath them; and on the third side, or rather at the head of it, the Cathedral of St. Mark, the patron of Vinece, rises, venerable aud plentiful of domes, the richest, if not the purest, religious edifice in the world.

Nearness of Death.—When we walk near powerful machinery we know that one single misstep and those mighty engiues will tear us to ribbons with their flying wheels, or grind us to powder in their ponderous jaws. So when we are thundering across the land in a rail car, and there is nothing but an inch of iron flange to hold us on the track. So when we are on a ship, and there is nothing between us and eternity. We imagine then that we see how close we are to the edge of the preeipiee; but we do not see it. Whether on the sea or on the land, the partition that divides us from eternity is something less than the oak plank or half an inch of iron flange. The machinery of life and death is within us. The tissues that hold the beating powers in their place are often not thicker than a sheet of paper; and if that thin partition rupture, it would be the same with us as if a cannon ball had struck us. Death is inseparably bound up with life in the very structure of our bodies. Struggle as he would to widen the space, no man can, at any time, go further from death than the thickness of a sheet of paper.

The effects of the voyage of the miniature ship, Red, White and Blue, across the ocean, are already seen, for it is announced that Prince Napoleon and the Duke of Rutland have each ordered of the builder of the little vessel the construction of exact counterparts of it. The hull of the miniature ship is a metallic life-boat.

The London Telegraph has the largest circulation of any daily newspaper in the world—155,000.

[For the Californian.]

CHEAP LABOR AND CHINAMEN.

BY PRENTICE.

INTRODUCTORY AND EXPLANATORY.—THE CHINAMAN

A CHINAMAN is a human being; perhaps a brother. I am willing to allow him both privileges.

In the Flowery Kingdom he can comfortably subsist on rice and rats for five cents per day. He is ingenious and industrious—qualities to be commended.

The worst feature pertaining to the industy and ingenuity of the Mongolian is that it is likely to prove detrimental to the welfare of the Caucasian, wherfore, it is preferable that such ingenuity and industry be retained in the Celestial Empire.

CHAPTER II.

THE DINNER.

In 1867 ensued the inauguration of the line of steamers to China and Japan.

Prior to the departure of the first vessel, a grand dinner was given, at which figured Ingots & Co., Greenbacks & Brothers, and many other individuals of great pecuniary influence.

In the usual post-prandial speeches it was argued that the prosperity of the great State of California depended upon the introduction of the Mongolian element in formidable and overwhelming numbers, whereby might be secured any desired amount of cheap labor.

A simpleton once asked a capitalist "In what consisted the prosperity of a State?" "O," it was answered, "in the existence of heavy firms with balance sheets showing a few millions per year profits, of colossal steamboat and railroad companies, and, indeed, of companies monopolizing the sale of everything eatable, drinkable and wearable. Also in the erection of palatial residences, magnificent churches and public buildings."

The welfare of two or three hundred thousand of people "on the outside" was of no particular importance. They might be needy and destitute, but what business had they to be poor, anyhow?

But to the dinner. Clergymen sat at the feast. Clergymen not long out of Boston. They, too, were inspired with the belief that the forthcoming Mongolian influx would conduce to the prosperity of the State; assist in "the development of our resources," pay off the national debt, prove the salvation of the heathen, and indirectly raise our salary.

"Should we not as brothers stretch forth our arms in greeting toward our Mongolian brethren, the countrymen of the sage Confucius? Should we not extend the hand of fellowship to our benighted fellow beings of the Occident, welcoming them to the land of Christianity, art, civilization and high and numerous taxes? Was it not well thus to bring the benighted Pagan in contact with the humanizing influence of orthodoxy with its numerous sects and contradictory creeds?"

So spake the clergyman, while outside, listening to the music and dwelling in imagination upon the luxurious feast, stood a crowd of dreary wretches who would gladly obtain employment at twenty-five dollars per month.

Old Per Centum entertained his circle with an enumeration of the blessings to be enjoyed when labor was down to twenty-five cents per day. Thus might we export cotton and woolen fabrics and successfully compete with the starved and over-worked operatives of Old and New England.

Pinchem, an enthusiastic money getter, argued in favor of the introduction of rats and puppies as articles of food among the American poor. Thus reduced, you see, to the same gastronomical standard with the Mongolian, an equalization of wages could easier be brought about, and John and Johnathan would cheerfully work side by side for as near nothing as possible.

Squeezeem, another Christian, hinted that the Mongolian practice of drowning superfluous female infants might be beneficially copied by our own native poor whose responsibilities had become unprofitably numerous.

And so passed off the dinner to the satisfaction of all present. At its close, those who could rise from their seats did so with a feeling that the prosperity of the State was established on a firm and sure foundation.

CHPATER III.

THE FUTURE.

After a prolonged absence, in New Guinea, I visited California in 1870.

The population had almost doubled, owing to the Celestial influx.

The price of labor had been successfully reduced to fifty cents per day.

Celestial labor everywhere prevailed, in mines, the factory, the workshop, on ship and on shore, on the farm and in the household.

The vernacular was considerably modified by the introduction of Chinese words, rendering the study of English grammar quite an impossibility to the ordinary intellect.

Of course the right of suffrage had been granted to the new element, a privilege, the oversight and direction of which was managed by their wealthy employers.

The prosperity of the State was indicated by the presence of magnificent mansions, splendid churches and numerous gorgeous jails, alms houses and lunatic asylums.

In his annual message, the Governor congratulated his wealthy supporters on the restoration of peace and tranquillity. The disturbances occasioned by a few thousand white laborers, who had endeavored to molest our Chinese citizens on the absurd pretence that their right to existence was materially interfered with by the low price of labor, had been successfully quelled.

The ringleaders had been hung, shot, or banished, and their deluded followers with their families were quietly and peaceably eking out a miserable existence.

As had been predicted the prosperity of the State was indicated by the presence of magnificent private residences, banking buildings and princely homes for the destitute.

A fearful mortality had prevailed among the white sewing women, caused chiefly by inanition. The rat and puppy diet interfered with their longevity.

A third of one of the adjoining counties had been purchased for a Potter's Field. It was beautifully laid out, all at the expense of the State. Indeed, none of our public works were a disgrace to the commonwealth, thanks to the introduction of cheap labor, and the indigent dead were well cared for.

Mongolization had extended even to the stage. The sterling old English melodramas were supplanted by interminiable Chinese plays, dating back several thousand years previous to the Mosaic creation.

Cramping the feet (as well as the intellect) was creeping into favor among the bon ton. Tails, a la Chiniois, were also hinted at.

AMUSEMENTS.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.—On Monday last Miss Jennie Parker, who was announced on the posters as "the dushing and beautiful sensation star," made her debut before a California audience as "Eily O'Connor" in The Colleen Bawn. Miss Parker chose an unfortunate character and an unfortunate piece in which to make her appearance as a star. Mrs. Sophie Edwin had presented an "Eily O'Connor" which gave such general satisfaction that any person attempting the character after her challenged comparison which would probably prove unfavorable to the new comer unless she was possessed of rare talent. Miss Jennie Parker having little to recommend her as an actress beyond a plump, pretty face, nice hair and a good figure failed to create a favorable impression in this part. Mrs. Harry Jackson played "Anne Chute" capitally. Harry Jackson played "Myles na Copalleen" very badly, turning the high-spirited Irishman into a drunken, slobbering, half idiotic bog-trotter, who could never have gained even the sympathy of "Eily O'Connor." Mrs. Judah was of course good in the character of "Mrs. Cregan." The "Danny Mann" of H. Edward's was pretty good, though he did not make many of the fine points. George Pauncefort played the part of "Hardress Cregan" for nearly all it was worth, and H. D. Thompson was quite at home in the character of "Corrigan." On Wednesday and Thursday, Arrah-na-Pogue with the same cast as before with the exception of Miss Jennie Parker taking the character of "Arrah Meelish," which she filled far more satisfactorily than did "Lady Don."

This afternoon Arrah-na-Pogue will be performed, and in the evening Never Too Late to Mend will be presented with all the original scenery original horse eating oats (not the original oats, but the real oats,) the trained pigeons, roosters, hens, large dogs, and other farm-yard bipeds and quadrupeds. On Monday Evening Miss Jennie Parker takes a benefit, on Wednesday, James Linen, the poet, will be the recipient of a complimentary benefit, and the military drama of The Seige of Lucknow will be presented; Mrs. Harry Jackson will appear in the character of "Jessie Brown." Those who are present on this occasion (hundreds of tickets have been already sold) will have a treat. The last New York sensation —Griffith Gaunt is in active preparation, and will be produced in magnificent style. Mr. Maguire is indefatigable in procuring novelties. A piece which has run 200 nights in London and 100 nights in New York, is placed on the stage at the Opera House at a large expense, allowed to remain there perhaps a week and then shelved to make room for the latest novelty. All the sensations of the day will be presented at the Opera House, and our local dramatists are all engaged in writing new pieces.

—

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The desire to see the Japanese in their wonderful feats and tricks, has been so unprecedently great that the Academy has not been half large enough to contain those who nightly sought admission for the present week. A further postponement of the departure of the Japanese until the sailing of another steamer has been made, that all may have an opportunity to see them. The "Japs" are wonderful! and their feats are the realization of the legendary wonders and glamour that abound in the stones of oriental legerdemain.

MR. LINEN'S BENEFIT.—On Wednesday evening next James Linen, the poet, will take a benefit at Maguire's Opera House, on which occasion The Siege of Lucknow will be presented, with Mrs. Harry Jackson in the part of the Scottish heroine, Jessie Brown. The same lady will read "The Poet's Mission," one of Mr. Linen's finest productions. The Siege of Lucknow ranks among the most powerful and attractive of modern sensation dramas, and it will be presented with an excellent cast on Wednesday night. The occasion itself, and the excellent bill offered, should draw a crowded house. We trust that the beneficiary may reap an abundant pecuniary harvest, and we have little doubt that such will be the case.

—

B'NAI BERITH ENTERTAINMENT.—The entertainment given at Platt's Hall, on Tuesday evening last, by the B'nia Berith Literary and Social Circle, was a great success. The hall was crowded. Black Eyed Susan was capitally performed by a company of amateurs. Miss Augusta Livingstone carried off the honors of the evening by her admirable impersonation of "Blue Peter," and the artistic manner in which she danced a horn-pipe. Miss Thersa Shirk played "Susan" very creditably, and Mr. Sam Leszynsky having quieted down a little since the last time he appeared in the character, presented a very good "William." Mr. A. Wiener was also good as Jacob "Twig."

—

LAST night a large and fashionable audience assembled to attest their appreciation of the talent of George Pauncefort, who took a benefit on this occasion. The performance commenced with the capitol farce of Used Up, in which Mr. Pauncefort as "Sir Charles Coldstream," was excellent, reminding many of Charles Matthews in the same character. Miss Jennie Parker, in the drama of Victorine, evinced considerable talent, and Mrs. Harry Jackson, as "Elsie," was very good.

—

THE Howson and the Martinettis have been playing their usual line of business at the Metropolitan, and have not brought out anything particularly noteworthy during the week.

—

THE ALEMANNIA BAL MASQUE.—This grand ball will be given this evening. One thousand dollars have been expended in decorating Platt's Hall for this occasion. The doors open at 7 o'clock, and the Grand March will take place at 9. Two bass bands will be in attendance. The greatest care has been expended in getting up this entertainment, and those who have obtained tickets may certainly anticipate a delightful evening's amusement.

—

COMPLIMENTARY CONCERT.—The complimentary concert tendered by many of the citizens of San Francisco to the juvenile pianists, the Misses Laemlein will take place on Wednesday evening January 23d at Platt's Hall. Great interest in these California artists has heretofore been evinced by the public, and the programme will be so fine a one that the hall will surely be crowded.

—

THE OLYMPIC CLUB'S RECEPTION, at their Rooms last evening was a very enjoyable one. The Olympians may be congratulated on the thorough success of the first entertainment they have given this season.

—

THE DRAMA IN PARIS.—The bills at the Parisian Theatres were, at last accounts, as follows:

Francais—"The Son," a comedy in four acts.
Opera Comique—"Mignon."
Odeon—"The Conspiracy of Amboise."
Italiens—"Traviata."
Imperial Duchatelet—"Cinderella."
Theatre Lyrique—"Don Juan."
Gymnase—"Our Good Villagers."
Varieties—"Man is not perfect."
Palais Royal—"Parisian Life."
Porte St. Martin—"The Parisian in London."
Gaité—"The Bell-ringer of St. Paul."
Ambigu—"The loves of Paris."
Folies Dramatique—"Relache."
Theatre Dejazet—"Our Good Villagers," a burlesque.
Bouffes Parisiennes—"The Knights of the Round Table."
Beaumarchais—"The Street Musician."
Folies Marigney—"Women of the World."
Fantasies—"The Rosieres," a comic opera.
Theatre de Prince Imperial—Equestrian performances, with the "intrepid Bonnaire" as the star.

DR. BOURNE'S MEDICINE CHEST.

"MEDICINE CHESTS always contain bitter pills and nauseous draughts; intended however, for the benefit of those who take their contents."

NUMBER FIFTEEN next week if time permits. In the meantime the sick and suffering will be receiving the benifit of the best mode of treating disease ever practice. No 10 Masonic Temple, Post street.

COAL.—At R. H. Thompson's yard, No. 818 Mission street, is kept constantly on hand all kinds of coal for family and hotel use, as well as fine coal for blacksmiths, which will be delivered free of cartage to any part of the city. Mr. Thompson is enabled from facilities at his command, to sell coal at cheaper rates than any other coal dealer in his neighborhood. Give him a trial.

[For the Californian.]

DECIEVED.

I ran to meet my lover,
When the yellow moon was West;
I ran to meet my lover,
Who swore he loved me best.

I wandered with my lover,
Till the yellow moon had set;
I wandered with my lover,
And he was fonder yet.

I lingered with my lover,
Until the stars grew dim;
I lingered with my lover,
And tender grew to him.

No more returns my lover,
When the yellow moon is West;
No more returns my lover,
And woe is in my breast.

Beshrew the fickle lover,
Be moon or East or West:
Beshrew the fickle lover,
Who swore he loved me best!

San Francisco, 1866. W. A. KENDALL.

LITERARY GLEANINGS AND GOSSIP.

[THIS department is not designed to be strictly "critical," and will not supersede our usual book reviews; nor will it be limited to notices of new publications.]

INNOVATIONS IN LANGUAGE.

In an article on Chaucer, in a late number of the Westminster Review, the writer makes some judicious and discriminating observations on the subject of the innovations and changes in language, and the introduction of new words or the use of words in a new sense, which are permissible to an author. He says:

Chaucer's influence was greater, because the language was then more susceptible of change. The Augustan poet might wonder why a liberty that was granted to Cecilius and to Plautus was denied to Virgil and to Varro, or why he was not allowed to enrich the language like Cato and Ennius.

> Quid autem
> Cæcilio Plautoque dabit Romanus ademptum
> Virgilio Varoque? Ego cur acquirere pauca,
> Si possum invideor cum lingua Catonis et Enni
> Sermonem patrium ditaverit et nova rerum
> Nomina protulerit?

But neither could Horace in his day, nor can Tennyson in ours, tamper with the language as Plautus and Chaucer did in theirs. The language of successive authors has gradually become a standard. Our vocabulary and our syntax have at last become stereotyped. Innovations in either become every day more inadmissible. In Chaucer's time the language was passing through a series of rapid changes. There were a hundred different dialects and no means of determining which was right. Those whose authority is now equally decisive over the dress of society and diction of conversation had then but recently and partially given up French. The literature by which our present written language is determined only began with Chaucer. He became to others what none had been to him—a standard. If this state of the language caused great difficulties, it also furnished great rewards. If, in selecting the most harmonious words and phrases, he had to trust to his own ear and to his own judgment, his taste was universally approved and widely imitated. He was respected by Gower, admired, or rather adored, by Occlive, Lydgate, Douglas. Spenser, and Milton; imitated by Pope, Dryden, Wordsworth and Tennyson. By the peculiar fortunes of James the First; Chaucer's influence was extended to Scotland; and, amid the countrymen of Barbour, the English poet found more fervent admirers, and more worthy rivals, than amid his own. "There is, perhaps," it has been said by the highest authority, "no author who has done so much to mould, or rather to fix, the standard of the language, as this great genius."—

The "highest authority" referred to by the reviewer is Mr. Marsh, in his lectures on the English language, a writer whose own English is considered so defective by the critical G. Washington Moon, who is kindly endeavoring through the columns of the Round Table to instruct Americans in the niceties of the language.

In regard to the causes, in addition to the changes in the language, why Chaucer is now read only by a few curious students, the reviewer says:

"The hoar of antiquity now lies thick on the ancient poet. Over his thoughts and his language the dust of six eventful centuries has been slowly settling. The society familiar to him has become strange and obscure to us. We are unable to recall, scarcely even to imagine, the vanished life of that long bygone generation—the knights, with their chivalrous love and brutal ferocity; the woman, with the ultra-feminine primness of the cloister, or the ultra-manly freedom of the age; the philosophers, with their trivial knowledge and childish speculations; the witches, astrologers, and alchymists, with their weird unnatural lore and semi-couscious imposition; the innumerable orders of clergy, with their inveterate feuds, their profane jests, and boisterous jovialty; or the people, with their rustic coarseness, their gross iguorance, and unquestioning faith. Such a phase of society seems strange to us; but though strange, neither it nor the works in which it is unfolded can ever become uninteresting."

HOW TO MAKE PRESIDENTS HARMLESS.

The New York Nation, in an article under the foregoing heading, discusses the old proposition to make the President ineligible for re-election, so often suggested as a remedy for many of the evils of our political system, and concludes that while there is much to be said in favor of it, yet the balance of the argument is the other way. "No people," says the writer, "ever made a greater display of wisdom than this people did in re-electing Lincoln, and we doubt if any incident in American history made so deep an impression on the mind of foreign observers. His death at the beginning of his second term has been of some use in showing us the danger of 'swapping horses when crossing the stream,' to use his own illustrations. It put at the helm of affairs a man of whom the country at large knew nothing; of whose real character and abilities even his own friends knew very little; who had none of the official experience or training which had made Lincoln almost twice as valuable a man in 1864 as he was in 1860; and who brought to the conduct of the Government at the most delicate crisis in our history an entirely new order of ideas and motives. We all know the result It may be said, it is true, that Mr. Johnson not would have been chosen to succeed Mr. Lincoln by a regular popular election; perhaps not. But a man as incompetent and disappointing might have been. Most people thought in 1859 they could predict how William H. Seward would behave were he at the head of the Republic in such a crisis as that through which we are now passing; but they would have been mistaken. He would, if we may judge from the part he has played during the last year, have proved simply a more learned and more polished Andrew Johnson. As long as nominating conventions are what they are—as long, as short, the task of choosing officials has to be delegated to professional politicians—the public can never tell who may turn up at the head of affairs. In nine cases out of ten it will be a man little known outside his own State, and he may be a Lincoln or he may not.'"

A "better remedy" than the adoption of the one term system, is then suggested as follows:

"The true remedy for the evils with which Congress is now seeking to deal would seem to be not to make the President ineligible for re-election, and thus deprive him of the strongest motive for behaving well, and force the people to dispense with his services, it may be, at the very moment when his experience and character are most needed, but to reduce his patronage to a minimum. It is with his patronage that a bad Persident does all his mischief; withaut the unlimited power of appointment and dismissal his powers of mischief would be very small, his powers for good as large as ever. A reform which would compel candidates for office to submit to an examination, and which, while leaving the President his power of dismissal, would compel him to do what a decent regard for puplic opinion compels European monarchs to do—assign cause, either in incompetency or misconduct, for dismissing a man—would reduce the abuses of the present system to as low a point as human nature will permit. Leave the public service in its present condition, and make the President ineligible for re-election, and you simply make it tenfold more a hotbed of intrigue and insubordination and corruption than ever. The bill reported by Mr. Edmunds seems as near an approach to perfection, perhaps, as is either practicable or desirable. Patronage—the power of constantly, and with or without cause, making and filling vacancies in the civil service—is the curse of our politics. It debauches and demoralizes everybody, from the President down to the common councilman, and converts public life into a mere game for places. If it be possible to stop it at Washington, we shall not despair of witnessing its extinction in the several States. The creation of an official class which is involved in making tenture of office dependent on good behavior is, no doubt, an evil; but it is a small evil compared with the present system, and our society has grown too busy and complicated to make it possible to administer our affairs by any but trained functionaries whose bread depends on their good behavior, and on nothing else.

As a supplement to this reform there should be another, confining the Vice President to the presidency of the Senate, and depriving him of the succession in case of the Presideut's death. The plan of the Constitution has now been thrice tried, and has twice proved a total failure. The possibility of the Vice Presideut's succeeding to the Presidency ought to be borne in mind in nominating him, but it never is, and so remote is the contingency that it is not in human nature that it should be. No man should ever be allowed to fill the presidential office who has not been chosen for it directly. No man should get into it by accident, without even having submitted his qualifications for it to a popular vote. When the President dies a new election should take place—an inconvenience, no doubt, but not likely to prove a very great one, as we see. There have been only three vacancies made by death in the office in eighty years, and an additional election every twenty years would be a small price to pay for assurance against such accideuts as Mr. Johnson.

"HOMES WITHOUT HANDS."

The Rev. J. G. Wood, the author of the delightful volume entitled as above, is a true and enthusiastic naturalist, and his descriptions of the "annual builders" are the most charming and interesting of the kind that we know of. The following is his notice of the "aard-vark:"

"The curious aard-vark of Southern Africa (Oryeteropus Capensis) resides for the most part in great holes which it scoops in the ground. The name aard-vark is Dutch, signifying earth-hog, and is given to the animal on account of its extraordinary powers of excavation, and the swine like contour of its head. The claws with which this animal works are enormous, as indeed is needful for the task which they are intended to perform. They are by no means intended merely to excavate burrows in soft or sandy soil, though they are frequently employed for that purpose; but they are designed for labors far more arduous. By means of these implements the aard-vark tears to pieces the enormous ant-hills which stud the plains of Southern Africa—edifices so strongly made as to resemble stone rather than mud, and capable of bearing the weight of many men on their summits. These marvelous dwellings are absolutely swarming with inmates; and it is for the purpose of feeding upon the tiny builders that the aard-vark plies its destructive labors. Toward evening the aard-vark issues from his burrow wherein it has lain asleep during the day, proceeds to the plains and searches for an ant-hill in full operation. With its powerful claws it tears a hole in the side of the hill, breaking up the stony walls with perfect ease, and scattering dismay among the the inmates. As the ants ruu hither and thither in consternation, their dwelling falling like a city shaken by an earthquake, the author of all this misery flings its slimy tongue among them, and sweeps them into its mouth by hundreds. * * * * Thus the aard-vark tears to pieces many a goodly edifices, and depopulates many a swarming colony, leaving a mere shell of irregular stony wall in the place of the complicated and marvelous structure which had shelterd so vast a population."

Among the birds no more noteworthy architect can be found than the diminutive tailor-bird of Ceylon. Mr. Wood says:

"The manner in which it constructs its pensile nest is very singular. Choosing a convenient leaf, generally one which hangs from the end of a slender twig, it pierces a row of holes along each edge, using its beak in the same manner that a shoemaker uses his awl, the two instruments being very similar to each other in shape, though not in material. These holes are not all regular, and in some cases there are so many of them that the bird seems to have found some special gratification in making them, just as a boy who has a new knife makes havoc on every piece of wood which he can obtain. When the holes are completed, the bird next procures its thread, which is a long fibre of some plant, generally much longer than is needed for the task which it performs. Having found its thread, the feathered tailor begins to pass it through the holes, drawing the sides of the leaf toward each other so as to form a kind of hollow cone, the point downward. Generally a single leaf is used for the purpose, but whenever the birds cannot find one which is sufficiently large, it sews two together, or even fetches another leaf and fastens it with the fibre. With the hollow thus formed the bird next deposites a quantity of soft white down like short cotton wool, and thus constructs a warm, light, and elegant nest, which is scarcely visible among the leafage of the tree, and which is safe from almost every foe, except man."

STRAUSS ON RENAN.

Doctor Strauss, whose "Life of Jesus" so startled the theological world some thirty years ago, has re-entered the field of theological warfare. After disposing of Weisse, Ewald, and others in the most summary manner, the writer says:

"Lately two books of another stamp have appeared, the little tract of Keim, and the work of Renan. Keim lays down the principle that the life of Jesus should be interpreted by the laws of history and of psychology; but the sanguine man imagines that all theology will adopt his principle, which he does not thoroughly follow out even for himself; and we lose patience with him when he talks to us of apostolic origin and the unity of the Gospel of St. Matthew; nor can he disentangle himself from miracles. Upon the whole, while he believes he has satisfied the demands of science, he is plunged in the illusions of theology. Renan, again, is misguided enough to retain the narrative portions of St. John, being, in fact, ignorant of the German works on this subject that have not been translated into French. Schenkel had wellnigh escaped us, having published his 'Charakterbild Jesn' after this survey of ours; but we descend upon him in a separate book, and we tell him, rather tartly perhaps, that in endeavoring to reconcile science and theology, he will please neither of them; that his science is an attempt to serve theology, for which theology will not thank him on account of the breadth of his admission."

FIRE INSURANCE.—We have received a phamphlet of fifteen pages entitled A Chapter on Fire Insurance, Suggested by the Disruption of the San Francisco Board of Fire Underwriters published in this city. The object of this publication is to prove the superiority of Eastern insurauce offices over our home companies. The pamphlet is published anonymously. Is is intended to serve as a cheap advertisement of the Ætna—(or Aetna)—as the anonymous pamphleteer terms it—Insurance Company and another company which he sometimes calls the "Phœnix" and at other times the "Phenix." The writer indulges in much abuse of all our home insurance companies, but makes use of no arguments which would not have applied with equal force to the Eastern companies some years ago.

BREAD AND CHEESE AND KISSES.

LOVE finding trade fail, as many trades will,
In a matter-of-fact world like this is,
Found, that if he would do any business at all
He must mix bread and cheese with his kisses.

So to it he went, quite disgusted and sad;
His doves stole the corn from the peasant;
Whilst he in the milky-way found all he'd need
To make his cheese taste nice and pleasant.

What a trade did he drive! He began to look up
As he winked at the young eager misses;
For he knew, though they asked for the bread and the cheese,
That in fact they but came for the kisses.

This was all very well for a honeymoon month,
Then the thing became really quite crazing;
For the kisses were growing quite stale on the shelf,
Whilst the bread and cheese trade was amazing.

—Christmas Number of London Society. ALFRED CROWQUILL.

THE gentleman of leisure, who was compiling a list of new magaziues, has given up in despair.

LARGE REAL ESTATE SALE—On Monday next. See John Middleton & Son's advertisement on sixteenth page.

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK II.

CHAPTER VIII.—ON THE DEFENSIVE.

THE announcement of a lady who wished to see Mrs. Brookes caused the faithful old woman no particular emotion. She rose from her chair, took off her spectacles, placed them carefully in her pocket, arranged her cap and shawl and took her way slowly to the housekeeper's room. As she crossed the hall she saw a fly standing at the open door, and the driver, a man from Page's, touched his hat to her as she passed.

"I don't know this lady," she thought. "Nobody about here takes a fly to come to Poynings."

Her visitor was seated on the heavy horse-hair sofa, which, in the winter, flanked the fire, but was now drawn close under the window through which George had entered on that memorable night, which came freshly into the memory of the old woman at that moment. As she looked sharply at the figure which rose to greet her, Mrs. Brookes felt in a moment that she was in the presence of a woman with some purpose.

The fixedness of Harriet Routh's face, the effort of a smile (for loneliness told upon her nerves now with rapidity and power), a something forced and painful in her voice, aroused an instinctive fear in Mrs. Brookes, and put her on her guard. She made a stiff bow and a movement with her body, which, when she was younger, would have been a curtsey, but was now only a duck, and asked her visitor's pleasure.

"I have called upon you, Mrs. Brookes," said Harriet, in a sweet and winning tone, "in consequence of a paragraph which I have seen in a newspaper."

It was an unfortunate beginning, for it set the old nurse instantly on her guard by arousing her suspicions, and making her resolve that the blue-eyed, sweet-spoken lady, who looked as if she had a purpose, should get nothing out of her.

"Indeed," she replied, very stiffly. "Please to sit down, ma'am."

Harriet resumed her seat, and began to speak rather quickly. Mrs. Brookes looked at her steadily, immovably, having put on her spectacles for the purpose, but gave her neither encouragement nor assistance by so much as a sound or a nod.

"I am Mrs. Routh," she said, "and a friend to Mr. George Dallas, Mrs. Carruther's son. It is on his account and for his sake I have come here."

Mrs. Brooke's black-mittened hands pressed each other closely as they lay clasped together in her lap, but she made no sign.

"I am aware of the unfortunate circumstances which keep Mr. Dallas and his mother apart," continued Harriet, who maintained a watch upon the old woman as steady as her own, but more covert; "and I am afraid he will be much distressed and alarmed if this reaches him without any preparation."

She held out a newspaper as she spoke, a newspaper she had procured at the inn at Amherst, and pointed to the paragraph which recorded the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Carruthers of Poynings and suite for the Continent: and, in addition, the regret with which "we" had learned that the departure in question had been occasioned by the dangerous illness of Mrs. Carruthers. Mrs. Brookes was immensely relieved, but not altogether reassured. She had a vague idea that the business of detection was sometimes entrusted to women, and she still had her doubts of the blue eyed, sweet spoken lady whose face indicated a purpose, without betraying it.

"Mr Dallas knows of his mother's illness," said Mrs. Brookes. "He will not hear of it first from any newspaper."

"Indeed," said Harriet. "I am glad to know that. I am much relieved. Mr. Dallas is so intimate with Mr. Routh, my husband, and we are so much attached to him, that anything which is of importance to him concerns us. I am on my way to Dover, and I thought I would turn out of it a little to inquire into this matter."

"Thank you ma'am," said Mrs. Brookes, still unsoftened. "May I ask if you have left your house in London?"

"We have for the present," replied Harriet; "indeed I don't think we shall return there."

Mrs. Brookes looked confused and distressed. "Excuse me," she said, after an awkward pause, "if I appear at all impertinent. I am George Dallas' old nurse, and more his mother's friend than her servant, and I can't be particular about other people when they are concerned. George Dallas is not as welcome here as he ought to be in his mother's house; you say you know that. If you really are Mrs. Routh, you ought to know more about him than that—more, in fact, than I do."

"Certainly," said Harriet, with unchanged sweetness of tone, and just the least gleam of color in her cheek, showing that she was approaching her object. "I do know a great deal more about George Dallas than you do, if, as I conclude from your words, nothing has been heard of him since his last visit to his mother."

She paused very slightly, but Mrs. Brookes did not utter a word.

"You are quite right to be cautious, Mrs. Brookes; in such a delicate family matter as this, caution is most essential. Poor George has been so foolish, that he has laid himself open to being harmed either by enemies or injudicious friends; but I assure you, Mrs. Brookes, I am neither. I really am Mrs. Routh, and I am quite in George's confidence, and am here solely with the purpose of saving him any trouble or anxiety I can."

"Where is he?" asked the old woman, suddenly, as if the question were forced upon her.

"He is at Amsterdam, in Holland," replied Harriet, in a frank tone, and changing her seat for one besides Mrs. Brookes, as she spoke; "here are several letters from him. See," and she drew half a dozen sheets of foreign paper closely written over, from her pocket, and put them into the old woman's hands. She beheld the letters with mingled pleasure and avoidance; they could not answer the question which tormented her, but they relieved her misgivings about her visitor. She felt assured now that she really was speaking to Mrs. Routh, and that the object of her visit was one of kindness to George. The letters were in his well-known hand; the thin paper and the postmarks satisfied her that they came from abroad. He was still out of the country, then; so far there was safety, but she must be cautious still concerning him. What if she could make Harriet the unconscious bearer of a further warning to him—a warning carefully contrived so that none but he should know its meaning, and he should understand it thoroughly? She would try. She had thought all this while she turned the letters over in her hands; then she returned them to Harriet, and said:

"Thank you ma'am. I see these are from Master George, and it's plain he has great confidence in you. He never answered a letter I sent him: it went to your house."

"All communications for him are addressed to Mr. Routh," said Harriet, "and forwarded at once."

"Well, ma'am he never told me where he had gone to, or wrote a letter but one to his mother; and when that came, she was too ill to read it, or know anything about it.."

"Indeed," said Harriet, in a tone of commiseration; she must have been taken ill just after he saw her, then?"

"She was," returned Mrs. Brookes, emphatically, "and you, ma'am, know, no doubt, why she saw him, and can understand that his conduct caused her illness."

"Not exactly that," said Harriet. "He told me all that had passed, and described his mother as full of forgiveness and hope, and he even said how well and handsome he thought her looking. George amuses us very much by constantly talking of his mother's beauty; he will be all the more distressed when he hears of her illness, now, and I really think Mrs. Brookes, it cannot be quite fair to impute it to his conduct."

"It was just that and nothing else," said the old woman; and her voice shook as she spoke, though she strove to control it. "It was indeed, ma'am, and you must tell him the truth, without softening it, or making it any better. Tell him that she nearly died of the knowledge of his conduct, and that her mind is weakened and her memory gone."

"Her memory gone!" exclaimed Harriet. "You don't mean to say it is so bad as that?"

"I do, indeed," said Mrs. Brookes. "And will you tell him exactly what I tell you. Tell him that his mother has forgotten all that led to her illness, and all the fear and suspense she underwent. Of course she was frightened at what she had to do, and in suspense until it was done; but I am sure she has not forgotten him and if he were to see her, or even be mentioned to her suddenly, it might have the worst effect. Be sure to tell him this, and that the only thing he can do to atone for the past in any way is to keep out of his mother's sight. He knows some of this already, for I wrote to him, and he knows from Mr. Carruthers that his mother has gone away."

"From Mr. Carruthers?" said Harriet, in a tone of admirably simulated surprise; "does he ever communicate with George?"

"My master is a very just man," replied Mrs. Brookes, in a stately tone, "and he would not allow his wife's son to be kept in ignorance of his mother's danger. I am sure he will send for him, wherever he may be, if there is no chance of her recovery. I don't say he would send for him sooner."

"Of course Mr. Carruthers has no idea of the cause of Mrs. Carruthers' illness?

"No, no: it was her fear of his finding out that George had been here, and what for, that brought it on; but of course, he did not suspect anything."

"It is very strange," said Harriet, musingly; "she seems to have borne all this business perfectly well at the time, and given way completely afterwards. It must have surprised you very much, Mrs. Brookes, though, no doubt, you understand your mistress' constitution."

"Yes," replied the old woman, dryly, and ignoring the beginning of the sentence, "I understand my mistress' constitution."

"I will give your message to Mr. Dallas," said Harriet, rising, "and I had better leave you our temporary address, unless, indeed, you would prefer writing to Mr. Dallas direct."

"No," said Mrs. Brookes. "I have nothing to say. When news of his mother comes from abroad, I will send it to you."

The old woman was constrained and miserable in her visitor's presence, but the hospitality of Poynings must be vindicated; and she felt, besides, that Mrs. Carruthers would, in other days, have been glad of an opportunity of being kind to anyone who had been kind to George. So she pressed Harriet to take some refreshments and to prolong her visit. But Harriet would not touch bread or wine in the house, and told Mrs. Brookes she must return to Amherst immediately, to catch the train for Dover. "I dined at the inn in the town," she said, in explanation of her refusal, "as I had to wait awhile before I could get a fly.

"I hope they made you comfortable, ma'am," said Mrs. Brookes, who had resumed, when their interview assumed a common-place complexion, her head-servant-like manner. "Page's people are obliging, and it is a respectable house."

"Very much so indeed," returned Harriet, carelessly. "The town seems a clean, dull sort of place. I had a funeral to look at while I waited for my dinner, and the waiter entertained me with the biography of the deceased."

"I had not heard of a death at Amherst," said Mrs. Brookes, primly. She did not like the flippant tone in which her visitor spoke. "The servants have not been in the town this week."

"An estimable person—one Evans, a tailor, I believe; so the waiter said," Harriet returned, still more carelessly, as she took up her parasol and railway-guide, glanced covertly at the old woman's face, and moved to the door.

Mrs. Brookes stood quite still for several seconds; then she followed Harriet, joined her at the red-baize door which opened into the hall, accompanied her to the great door, where a footman waited, took a respectful leave of her, and then shut herself up in her room, and remained invisible to the household for the remainder of the day.

As Harriet Routh drove back to Amherst, she leaned her head wearily against the uncongenial woodwork of the fly, and summed up the result of her journey,

"It is clear that nothing is to be feared now, in this direction. Mrs. Brookes will never speak. Mrs. Carruthers is in the best possible condition for our purposes, and her son has no pretext for returning to Poynings, even if the death of the tailor had not made it quite safe for him to do so."

"I will write to him," she went on in her thoughts, "just what she told me to say. Poor George! It is hard to have to make him believe that he has broken his mother's heart, and turned his mother's brain. He does not deserve it, fool as he is. He is easily persuaded, fortunately. I don't feel fit for much that is not easy now. The letter must be sent on at once, and, if I do my part well, and this woman dies, or remains abroad—and I fancy Mr. Carruthers is not the man to bring an imbecile wife back, if he can help it—there's no reason why George should come to England again for years, that I can see."

The driver of the fly pulled up for a minute, and, letting down one of the front windows, inquired whether he was to go to the inn or to the railway station. While Harriet was answering his question by desiring him to drive to the station, and looking out of the window, a young girl on horseback, a large black Newfoundland dog galloping by her horse's side, passed the fly. The driver touched his hat respectfully, and the young lady acknowledged the salute with her whip.

"That's Miss Carruthers, ma'am," said the man to Harriet, giving her the information in a manner which duly indicated the local importance of Miss Carruthers. Harriet looked back at the girl, and noted the golden gleam of her beautiful hair, the easy swaying of her graceful figure, the air of youth and refinement which characterised her.

"That's Miss Carruthers, is it?" she thought. "George has never seen her, I fancy, as he never mentioned her to me."

She had some time to wait for the train, and she went into the waiting-room.

When all the other passengers had taken their places, Harriet got into a carriage which had no other occupant, and so traveled up to London alone.

Routh was at the house when she reached the Travistock, and was surprised at her speedy return. She told him how the intelligence she had heard on her arrival at Amherst had simplified her task of investigation.

"I'll post the letter from the old fellow at once, then," said Routh; "it's only a couple of days late, and Dallas is too careless to notice that. When you write—you'd better not do it for a day or so, lest he might take it into his head to suspect you of a motive—you can tell him about our move."

Harriet acquiesced, and changed the subject to their new residence, and furnished house in Mayfair. She would go there on the morrow, she said, and arrange all their little property. Had everything been removed from South Moulton street?

Everything. Routh had seen to it himself, and had employed the boy who was always about there.

"Ay," said Harriet, dreamily, for she was thinking of the time, gone forever, when she had been happy in the home she had left without one regret or hope. "What of him?"

"Nothing that I can make out," answered Routh, irritably. "But I hate the sort of half-recollection I seem to have of him. There's something in my mind connected with him, and I cannot disentangle it."

Harriet looked up at her husband in some surprise, and turned very pale. She had a painful, an indelible remembrance connected with the first time she had seen Jim Swain. But Routh knew nothing of that; so she said nothing; she made no effort to aid his memory. She would avoid the torture when she could. Besides, she was utterly weary in body and in spirit.

Mr. Carruthers' letter reached George Dallas not exactly duly, indeed, but after a delay which would have astonished and exasperated the writer, had he known it, to the last degree.

Stewart Routh and Harriet were very much superior to George Dallas in many mental attributes, and particular in cunning; but they were incapable of understanding the young man on certain points. One of these points was his love for his mother, with its concomitants of remorse, repentance, and resolution. Not comprehending this mixed feeling, they made a serious miscalculation.

CHAPTER IX.—CLEARED UP.

The shock communicated to George Dallas by his stepfather's letter was violent. He was a strong man physically, but a sickening, weak shudder, such as might have shaken a woman, shook him as he read the few formal lines which conveyed to him so much more than their writer had known or intended. Was it all to be in vain? Was the golden time, the precious opportunity, gone by forever? Was she to die, or to die to him at least, and never to know that his repentance had been real, that the lesson had been effectual, that the reform had been inaugurated?

The terms in which Mr. Carruthers had written to his stepson were as vague as they were formal. Where was she? He did not know; he had no means of knowing. How great were her sufferings? How imminent was her danger? These points were beyond the reach of his investigation. He knew that he was to blame for his mother's illness; he saw all things now in a new and clear light, and though his was no miraculous reformation, no sudden transformation from sinner to saint, but rather an evidence of mental growth and refinement under the influence of a new order of feelings, working on a singularly pliable temperament, George Dallas was so different to what he had been, that he shrank not only with disgust, but with wonder, from the contemplation of the perverse folly which had led to such results. He had always been dissipated, worthless, and ungrateful, he thought; why had he never realised the guilt of being so before? Why, indeed? Having been blind, now he saw, having been foolish, he had become wise. The ordinary experience, after all, but which every man and woman believes in his or her case exceptional, had come to this young man, but had come laden with exceedingly bitter grief. The only image before his mind was that of his mother, long bowed down, and now broken, under the accumulated load of grief and disappointment which he had laid upon her.

George's resolution to go to England was soon taken. He must know more than Mrs. Carruthers had told him, and only at Poynings could he learn it. It never occured to him that Mrs. Brookes might have accompanied his mother abroad. His impulsive nature rarely permitted him to foresee any obstacle in the way of a design or a desire, and he acted in this instance with his usual headlong precipitation.

When George Dallas reached London, he found he would have just sufficient time to go to South Molton street and see Routh or Harriet for a few minutes, before he could catch a train for Amherst. Arrived at Routh's former residence, he was surprised to observe, as he got out of a hansom, that a card, displayed in the parlor window, announced "A drawing-room floor to let." The hall door was opened at his summons, with unusual alacrity, and in reply to his inquiry, the servant, a newly engaged one who had never seen him before, informed him that Mr. and Mrs. Routh had "left," and were to be found at Queen street, Mayfair. George stood, for a moment, irresolute in surprise, and the servant repeated the address, fancying he had not heard her. His face was toward the open door, and he turned his head sharply round, as a boy's voice said, in a peculiar pert tone which had an odd indefinite familiarity for his ear:

"Any letters for Mr. Routh to-day, Mary Jane? 'cos, if so, hand 'em over."

The speaker was Mr. James Swain, who had come up behind George Dallas unperceived, and who, when he saw the young man's face, gave an involuntary start, and dropped his saucy manner on the instant.

"Yes, there's three letters and a circ'lar for Mr. Routh," replied Mary Jane, in a sulky tone; "and missis says as she hopes as Mr. Routh will put his address in the paper or some thing, for people is always a comin' and makin' us think as they're lodgers." Then with a glance at George, which seemed to imply that he might not have been considered ineligible in that capacity, Mary Jane went to fetch the letters, and Dallas addressed Jim Swain.

"Are you going back to Mr Routh's direct?" he asked.

"Yes, sir," answered Jim. "I come every day, since they've been gone, to see after letters and messages."

"Then you can take a message for me," said George, pointing the observation with a sixpence. "Tell Mr. Routh Mr. Dallas has come to London, having heard bad news, and has gone to his mother's house. You won't forget?"

"No, sir, I won't forget," said Jim, in a tone of satisfactory assurance.

"Say I expect to get back to-morrow, and will come to see him at once. Mr. Dallas—that's my name, remember."

George then jumped into the hansom again, and was driven away to the railway station.

"Mr. Dallas," said Jim Swain to himself as he walked slowly down the street, carrying the letters confided to him by Mary Jane—"that's your name, is it? I wonder wot you've bin up to, and where you've bin up to it? I shall tell her the gent's message—not him."

The night had fallen upon the woods and fields at Poynings, and no light gleamed from the stately old house, save one ray, which shone through the open window of the housekeeper's room. By the casement sat George Dallas, his arm upon the window-sill, his head leaning against his hand, the cool fresh air of the summer night coming gratefully to his flushed and heated face. Opposite, and close to him, sat Mrs. Brookes, still wearing, though their conference had lasted many hours, the look of agitation beyond the strength to bear it which is so painful to see on the faces of the aged. All had been explained between the old woman and the prodigal son of her beloved mistress, and the worst of her fears had been dispelled. George had not the guilt of murder on his soul. The chain of circumstances was indeed as strong as ever, but the old woman did not retain the smallest fear. His word had reassured her—indeed, the first glance at his face, in the midst of the terror and surprise of their meeting, had at once and forever put her apprehensions to flight. Innocence of that, at least, was in his face, in his hurried agitated greeting, in the bewilderment with which he heard her allusion to her letter, in his total unconsciousness of the various emotionss which tore her heart among them. She saw, she foresaw, no explanation of the circumstances which had led to the fatal mistake she had made; she saw only that her boy was innocent, and the vastness, the intensity, of the relief sufficed, in the first moments of their meeting, to deprive it of the horror and bitterness with which, had she had any anticipation of such an event, she would have regarded it. But the first relief and the full explanation—all that George had to tell her, all she had to tell him—could not change the facts as regarded Mrs. Carruthers, could not alter the irrevocable, the miserable past.

When the first confusion, excitement, and incoherent mutual questioning had given way to a more settled and satisfactory conversation, Mrs. Brookes told George all that had occurred—the visit of the official gentleman from London, the servants' version of his business, the interview between Mr. Carruthers and Evans, and the suspicion and fear, only too reasonable, to which all the unfortunate circumstances had given rise.

It was with the utmost difficulty that George arrived at a clear understanding of the old woman's narrative, and came to realise how overwhelming was the presumption against him. By degrees he began to recall the circumstances which had immediately preceded and followed his clandestine visit to Poynings. He recalled the remarks he had heard at The Mercury office; he remembered that there had been some talk of a murder, and that he had paid no attention to it, but had gone away as soon as possible, and never given the matter another thought. To find himself implicated in a crime of so terrible a nature, to find that circumstances had brought him in contact with such a deed, filled him with horror and stupefaction; to know that his mother had been forced to conceive such suspicion was, even without the horrible addition of the effect produced on her, suffering far greater than any he had ever known. He felt giddy, sick, and bewildered, and could but look piteously at his faithful old friend, with a white face and wild haggard eyes.

"She believed it?" he said again and again.

"No, George, no; she only feared it, and she could not bear the fear; no wonder, for I could hardly bear it, and I am stronger than she is, and not your mother, after all. But just think, George. You bought the coat from Evans, and the man who wore that coat was seen in the company of the murdered man the last time he was seen alive. I knew there must be some dreadful mistake. I knew you never lifted your hand against any man's life, and that some one else must have got possession of the coat; but your mother said no, that you had worn it when she saw you at Amherst, and nothing could remove the impression. George, what did you do with the coat you bought at Evans'?"

"I had it down here, sure enough," answered George, "and I did wear it when she last saw me. I left it at Mr. Routh's afterwards, by mistake, and took one of his abroad with me; but this is a horrid mystery altogether. Who is the man who has been murdered? What is the motive?"

"I cannot tell you that, George," said Mrs. Brookes; "but I will give you the papers, and then you will know all, and you will understand how much she suffered."

The old woman left George alone for a few minutes, while she went to her bedroom to get the newspapers which she locked securely away at the bottom of a trunk. During her absence the young man strode about the room distractedly, trying in vain to collect his thoughts and set them down steadily to the solution of the terrible mystery which surrounded him.

"Here they are, George," said Ellen, as she entered the room and handed him a roll of newspapers. "Sit down here, by the window, and try to read them quietly. I must leave you now, and tell the servants who you are, and that you are going to stay here to-night—there must be no concealment now; thank God, it's not wanted any longer. Perhaps out of all this evil good may come, my boy."

He had sat down by the window, and was eagerly opening the roll of paper, and seeking the account of the murder. Mrs. Brookes paused by his side for a moment, laid her withered hand gently on his hair, and then left him. A moment after he started up from his chair, and cried out:

"Good God! the man was Dean!"

The shock of this discovery was extreme. Wholly unable as he had been to account for the coincidence which Mrs. Brookes' imperfect story (for, like most persons of her class, she was an unskilful narrator of facts) had unfolded to him, he had never supposed his connection with it real, and now he saw it all, and in a moment perceived the gravity of his situation. The nameless man whom he had seen so often, and yet known so slightly; concerning whom he had speculated often and carelessly; whom no one had recognised; whose singular dress the waiter at the tavern had described in his evidence; the date; all was conclusive. The man murdered was Deane. But who was the murderer? How was it that no one had recognised the body? With all his mysterious ways, in spite of the callous selfishness which had rendered him indifferent to companionship save in the mere pursuit of his pleasures, it seemed wonderful that no one should have been able to identify him.

"There's Routh, now," said George to himself, "he must have heard of the finding of the body, he must have read the description of the dress; he may have seen the man's fur coat before, though I never did. To be sure, he did not dine with us that day, but he knew where Deane dined, and with whom. What can Routh have been about?"

These and a thousand questions of a similar nature George Dallas put to himself, without the tumult in his mind. He tried to arrange the circumstances in their order of occurrence, and to think them out, but in vain; he could not do so yet; all was confusion and vague horror. He had not liked this man. Theirs had been the mere casual association of convenience and amusement—an association, perhaps, the foremost of all those which he was firmly determined never to renew; and yet he could not regard its dreadful ending with indifference. The life which had perverted George had not hardened him, and he could not readily throw off the impression created by the discovery that the man with whom he had joined in the pursuit of reckless and degrading pleasure had died a violent death within so short a time of their last meeting. When Mrs. Brookes came into the room again, the expression of the young man's face terrified her afresh.

"Ellen," he said, "this is a dreadful business, apart from my unhappy complication with it, and what it has cost my dear mother. I knew this unhappy man; he was a Mr. Deane. I dined with him at that tavern in the Strand. I did wear that coat. All the circumstances are correct, though all the inferences are false. I begin to understand it all now; but who can have murdered him, and for what motive, I cannot conceive. The most natural thing in the world was that they should suspect me, as the man that wore the coat. Mr. Evans will recognise me, no doubt, as he told Mr. Carruthers."

"No, no, George; the poor old man is dead," interrupted Mrs. Brookes.

"Dead?" said George. "Well, he seemed an honest fellow, and I am sorry for it; but it makes no difference in my position. When I communicate with the police, I will admit all he could prove."

"Must you do that, George?" asked Mrs. Brookes, wistfully. She had a natural dread of the law in the abstract.

"Of course I must, nurse; I can tell them who the unfortunate man was, and account for him up to a very late hour on the night of the seventeenth of April."

"Take care, George," said the old woman. "If you can't account for yourself afterwards, you can't clear yourself."

The observation was shrewd and sensible. George felt it so, and said, "Never mind that. I am innocent, and when the time comes I shall have no difficulty in proving myself innocent."

"You know best, George," said the old woman, with a resigned sigh; "but tell me, who was this poor man?"

"Sit down and I will tell you all about it."

[To be continued.]

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS, J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1867.

FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

WHEN Mr. Cowan recently, in the United States Senate, moved his amendment to the bill securing to negroes the right to vote in the District of Colnmbia, proposing in said amendment to extend the snffrage also to the women of the District, his purpose undoubtedly was to cast odium npon the bill. He aimed at a reductio ad absurdum of the main proposition. Accordingly, he and the other opponents of negro suffrage must have been not a little surprised to find the amendment which was offered in a spirit of ridicule, taken np and discussed with the utmost seriousness by a number of the Repnblican Senators, who far from shrinkiug from the alleged logical consequences of the principle they had laid down declared themselves ready to accept them all, consistently and nnhesitatingly. Wade of Ohio, Brown of Kansas, and Anthony of Rhode Island, voted for the amendment, and three other Senators who voted against it, expressed themselves in favor of the measnre, and explained their opposition to the amendment by saying that they were unwilliug to connect the question of Female Suffrage, with that of Negro suffrage and preferred to deal with the two measures separately. This discussion in the Senaet of the United States, taken in connection with the agitation of the same subject in England, and the views expressed by so eminent a public man as Mr. Mill, exhibits a most strikin change in public opinion within a comparativelybrief period. It is but a few years since the suggestion of the idea of Female Suffrage was regarded as purely Utopian, and no one dreamed of making it the subject of serious discussion. And yet the moment that it is taken up in a sober and practical spirit, it becomes evident that the objections urged against extending to women the right to vote —or at least to unmarried women are not so much objections to the measure itself as difficulties and inconveniences of detail in carrying it into effect. Even these difficulties are apparent rather than real and are magnified by the sense of novelty and sstrangenes with which we contemplate the idea of women taking a part in a political canvas and depositing their ballots at the polls.

As to the arrangement of the practical details, if once the justice and policy of the measnre itself are conceived, that will be a matter involving little real perplexity. The simple expedient of providing separate polling places for female voters, which might be in some large Hall, or other suitable apartment not strictly public, wonld in itself obviate half the difficulties popularly urged against the measure.

Upon the whole, we think it clear that if women themselves wish the privilege of voting, they well soon have it. The proposed reform is one of that peculiar kind that are already, half achieved when they become the subject of grave and earnest discussion. The public mind is fast becoming familiarized with the idea; those who oppose it, now condescend to assail it by argument instead of ridicnle, and it is much easier to reply to their logic than their witticisms. In the words of Senator Sumner, "it depends npon the women themselves whether they shall vote." At present, they are hy no means unanimous on the question; and in England, we are inclined to think that Jean Ingelow, who is strongly opposed to the measure as "unwomanly," has a larger following than Miss Frances Power Cobbe, who is its most zealous champion.

A Parisian Luxury.—The taste of horseflesh is increasing in Paris. There are at present in the capital seven butcheries for the sale of that commodity, and which dispose of about 40,000 pounds in weight, per week. The nnnual consumption may therefore be estimated nt 1,000 ton, or more than ten times the quantity of meat distributed to the poor in the 20 bureaux de bienfaisance. So far horseflesh has been exempt from the octori duty, and sells at from five sous to one franc, the kilo. of two pounds.

Omission.—We neglected to award Edward Bosqui & Co. the credit due for the handsome typographical appearance of M. Pierre Cauvet's Poesies in onr notice last week. The same firm are preparing to issue an elegant and beantifully illustrated subscription of Charles Warren Stoddard's Poems.

The Spanish papers mention, amoug the curious works of art in the recent exhibition nt Toledo, a complete edition of "Don Quixote," printed in microscopic characters on fifty-four cigarette papers.

"HOW NOUNS ARE ABUSED."

In a monthly magazine entitled Hours at Home, published in New York, by Charles Scribner & Co., we find an article with the above heading which is thus prefaced:

[Charles Scribner & Co. have in press a new work on the English language from the accomplished pen of Professor M. Schele De Vere, L. L. D., of the University of Virginia, entitled, "Studies in English; or, Glimpses of the Inner Life of our Language, It will be found to be a book of decided interest and value; and, in connection with the admirable works of Mr. Marsh, published by the same house, will contribute to a better nnderstanding and appreciation of our own mother-tongue. From advance sheets, and as a fair sepecimen of the book, we lay before our readers the substance of one chapter, that on the Abuse of Nouns, which will be found to be both curious and instructive.—Ed Hours at Home.]

As the publishers print this one chapter in advance "as a fair specimen of the book," Professor M. Schele De Vere, L. L. D., of the University of Virginia, is offered by his literary god-fathers, a victim to the rack of criticism, before his work is born. If this chapter, entitled "How Nonns are Abnsed," is really a fair specimen of the book, we must come to the conclusion that Studies in English: or, Glimpses at the Inner Life of our Language is intended lor the instruction of those who have bestowed very little thought on the origin of words. Dean Trench has said nearly all that is said in this chapter on the abuse of nouns, and has said it so much better that we cannot give Professor M. Schele De Vere, L. L. D., of the University of Virginia, credit for much original research. The Professor tells his readers how "triomphe" has been corrupted into "trump;" hence "trump cards,"—a remarkable piece of inrormation! Theu he startles them with the important fact that "beef-eaters" is a corruption of buffetiers, and a great many other pieces of information which we have certainly seen in print belore. The Professor says:

"Even phrases can be traced to such violent twistings of words, as the proverbial dormir comme une taupe, which has lost all reference to the mole, and is now to sleep like a top, and the faire un faux pas, to commit a blunder, which is at least provincially, to make a fox's paw!"

It is amusing to notice how far this author is willing to travel in search of a derivation. How much more probable it is that "to sleep like a top" has no refereuce to a mole at all but simply signifies what the words imply. Who has not heard of a top "going to sleep?" After nodding for a short time it settles down to sleep with a drowzy hum suggestive of comfort and rest. To sleep like a top is a good and expressive phrase, the derivation of which we need not seek in the French langunge. As to the expression "to make a fox's paw," the Professor should be aware that this is nsed as a funny perversion of the French sentence, used in the same way as Artemus Ward uses mangled English. Professor De Vere occasionally makes worse mistnkes than the above. He says:

"The Saxon name of that class of plants which contains absinth was suthwort or soothing wort; first the latter part became obscure, and gave rise to a change into soothing wood; then the first part also was forgotten, and the people now call it southernwood. A similiar now unknown word ord, meaning the first beginning, and preserved in the German ur, gave rise to the expression of ord and end, for which we substitute the more familiar sounding but unmeaning odds and ends, as topsy turvy is bnt the vulgarized form of topside the other way."

The origin of "odds and ends" is far more likely to have been "orts and ends," "orts" being the German for remnants, refuse, incorporated at an early period into the English language, and still in use in this country though seldom heard in England. If this chapter is to be taken as a fair specimen of Professor De Vere's work, we cannot congratulate the world on its being abont to make its appearance. In this specimen the Professor is generally superficial in his researches, and when he attempts to go deeper is apt to get ont of his depth. Trem.

A large nnmber of oil paintings have been sold dnring the past ten days at the auction rooms of Duncan & Co., principally, we believe, at private sale. Prices have ranged from $20 to $500 each. The fine pictnre of "Daniel," (life size.) was bought by J. W. Wiunns, Esq. The large painting of "Joseph Interpreting the Dream," and a "Market Scene" fonnd a pnrchaser in Mr. Brannan. "Peale's Fruit-piece" has been added to Mr. Lord's collection. A great number of smaller pictures of more or less merit have been purchased to adorn our California homes. The sales foot np several thousand dollars.

The Pacific Law Magazine.—We have received the first number of this periodical, which is devoted to the interests of the legal profession on this coast. Its typographical appearance is neat though susceptible of improvement, and its contents, to which we shall refer more fully next week, are varied and interesting. We trust the enterprise exhibited by the publishers of this magazine may be encouraged and rewarded.

The Consolidation Act.— We have received from T. Hart Hyatt, Jr., Attorney at Law, his compilation of the Acts of the Legislatnre having reference to the government of the city of San Francisco, including the Consolidation Act, now published by the order of the Board of Supervisors.

In England a movement is on foot to allow athletic sports on Sunday. Clergymen favor the plan.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE "ALTA" CRITIC'S IDEA AS TO HOW PHILOLOGICAL QUESTIONS ARE "SETTLED."

To the Editor of the Californian:

THE highly accomplished writer who is doing the book notices for the Alta, and who seems more remarkable for literary finish and the graces of style than for sonnd of critical discrimination, even within the legitimate domain of belles lettres, has a very singnlar idea of the mode in which philological qnestions are to be disposed of. In last Snnday's Alta he says:

"G. Washington Moore, in a late letter to the Round Table, thus settles the relative claims of 'contemporary' and 'cotemporary;'" whereupon the critic proceeds to quote from the commnnication of Mr. Moon (whom he calls "Mr. Moore,") as follows:

"As for the word '*co*temporaries,' which Mr. S. hopes may not take root, and which he says Dr. Bentley called 'a downright barbarism,' Dr. Ogilvie, one of our best lexicographers, says, in his dictionary:

"'Contemporary, see *Co*temporary, the preferable word."

"Mr. S. appears to think that 'in words compounded with the inseparable preposition con we retain the n before a consonant and expunge it before a vowel and before an h mute. Indeed? How happens it, then, that we say co-bishop, co-herald, co-gnardian, co-partner, co-worker, co-surety, co-defendant, co-lessee, co trnstee, co-tenant, co-regent, etc., etc.? Why do we say *co*habit, and not *con*habit? Why do we say *co*vet, and not *con*vet? Why do we say *co*venant, and not *con*venant? The first syllable of each of these words is from the Latin con, and the second syllable begins with a consonant. If Mr. S. should ever be on a jury, he wonld doubtless make his co-jurors conjurors; and in speaking of the co-fonnders of the great American Repnblic wonld call them confounders!"

Now I am at a loss to nnderstand why Mr. Moon's opinion on this subject, backed by snch hasty and superficial reasoning as the above, should be accepted as decisive on snch a point by any one competent to discnss the question independently, especially when that opinion is directly in the teeth of the general and established usage of the best writers on both sides of the Atlantic. It may well be that Mr. Moon, elated by his triumph over Dean Alford in his criticism of that writer's book, The Queen's English, may feel inclined to set himself np as an authority in grammar and philology from whose decisions there can be no appeal; and possibly the Alta's critic may be content to accept his ex cathedra utterances with nnquestioning docility, bnt I doubt if the literary world at large will evince the same humble and and teachable spirit.

Some little while since, Mr. Moon, flushed with his victory over the English Dean, and eager to encounter new and more illustrious antagonists, and appearing to find the field offered by his owu country too circumscribed for his ambition, extended his gaze across the Atlantic, and selected a distinguished American scholar, the Hon. Geo. P. Marsh, as the next victim of his prowess. Mr. Marsh is not only the most eminent American philologian, bnt one of his volumes is used as a text-book in the English colleges, and in his specialty, he is generally conceded to have but one eqnal among English scholars—and that one is not Mr. Washingtou Moon. Mr. Moon, however, probably thought that some glory was to he obtained by a discussion with an opponent so distinguished, and accordingly, with all the ardor of the Hibernian temperament, he rushed to the encounter. Mr. Marsh was at the time engaged in writing a series of philological papers lor the New York Nation, and the ambitious Moon commences a series of criticisms upon them in the Round Table—if indeed that can be dignified with the name of "criticism," which consisted of the kind of comment that a school master makes upon elementary efforts in composition. Nearly the whole of one of Mr. Moon's communications consisted of an attempt to show that Mr. Marsh had used a certain verb in an inadmissible sense, and two thirds of another of an argument to establish that he had employed the indefinite article "a" before a nonn commencing with "h," when he ought to have employed the indefinite article. The former attempt was an utter failnre; the latter was a distinguished success—that is, if it is admitted that such words as "hundred," "home" etc., are to be pronounced "'undred," "'ome," to which mode of pronunciation, Mr. Moon is perhaps accustomed.

Of course Mr. Marsh made no reply to this petty style of criticism; but some correspondent of the Nation, probably provoked by the complacency and dogmatism of the combattive British grammarian, took up the cudgel and adopting his own style ol pedagogic analysis, subjected Mr. Moon's communications to a critical analysis far more acnte and subtle than that gentleman himself seemed at all capable of. This new champion handled his antagonist with so much severity and so little respect, and the whole style ol his attack was so closely modelled npon that ol Mr. Marsh's assailant, that it must have proved exceedingly galling to the latter. He accordingly turned fiercely npon the new antagonist who had volunteered the task that his principal had contemptuously declined. Among the flaws in Mr. Moon's English detected by Mr. Marsh's self-constituted champion, was the use of "cotemporary" "for contemporary." It was this criticism that elicited the defence of "cotemporary," which has already been quoted, and which the book reviewer of the Alta accepts as "settling" the question.

How far the authority of the complacent and self-sufficient British philologist is in fact from "settling" the point in dispute will appear from the following considerations:

1st. Both Webster and Worcester, the greatest American authorities, are in favor of "contemporary."

2d. The great and preponderating weight of English literary authority is in favor of "contemporary." Bently, one of the greatest names in English scholarship says: "'Cotemporary' is a downright barbarism." Lord Macaulay complained bitterly of the New York firm of Harper & Brothers, because in the American edition of his history, they had substituted "cotemporary" for "contemporary." Dr. Campbell, a distinguished English writer on rhetoric says: "I prefer "contemporary' to 'cotemporary.' The general use of words compounded with the inseparable preposition con, is to retain the n before a consonant."

3d All the analogies of foreign languages are on the side of "contemporary." The Latin is contemporo, to be contemporary; the French is contemporain; the Spanish, contemporoneo.

4th. Webster, in his latest edition gives "contemporary" as the preferable mode of writing the word. Worcester does the same, adding: "This word is often less properly written "cotemporary." Dr. Bently, remarking upon the attempted innovation of "cotemporary," says: "The Latins never use co for con, except before a vowel, so that *co*temporary is a word of his (Poyle's) own *co*position, for which the learned world will *co*gratulate him."

Finally: with the exception of a few arbitrary and capricious persons like Mr. Moon, who affect eccentricity and paradox, "cotemporary" has no advocates among men pretending to scholarship. Nearly all standard English and American writers, use "contemporary." I do not believe that a single English or American literary journal of high standing uses "cotemporary;" and even the more accurate and scholarly of the daily papers, both in Great Britian and the United States, habitually write the word "contemporary."

Yet, notwithstanding this formidable array of authority, the Alta critic thinks that Mr. G. Washington Moon, has "settled" the matter in favor of "cotemporary." How entirely irrelevant and inconclusive are the analogies and reasonings of Mr. Moon in the "opinion" quoted above, and which seem to have had such convincing weight with the literary editor of the Alta, I propose to show in a future communication.

CONTEMPORARY.

REFLECTIONS OF A MISERABLE UNFORTUNATE.

CIRCUMSTANCES have caused me to regard a state of misery as the normal condition of man.

This is very unreasonable and very untrue; but it is a sort of delusive, pet theory of mine, in which I like to indulge. Indeed, I have arrived at that point in which I take a sort of Luciferian delight in being miserable.

Life with me has been one continued series of disappointments; in fact I was a disappointment to my parents immediately on being born, for they wanted a girl, and I happened unfortunately to be a boy.

Nature placed within me a sensitive and retiring disposition, one of that sort which goes off and feeds upon a fancied slight for a week, until the blood turns sour.

I could scarcely ever make the friends I wished to. My heart was warm and affectionate, but my confounded features would always frighten people away by their expression of lugubrious misery.

I came to California—no, I drifted hither—with no definite idea concerning the future. As every one else seemed to be engaged in the pursuit of fortune, I also turned my attention in that direction, just for want of other occupation.

Well, soon the idea developed itself that a large pile of gold might effect happiness, and I bent all my energies to its acquirement.

Gigantic mining enterprises suggested themselves. I worked and toiled, starved and went in rags. Anything was endurable in the present for the sake of the glittering future.

The mining enterprises, extending over a period of ten years, regularly failed. The uniformity in this respect was beautiful. Placers failed, quartz failed, copper failed, and nearly a year's lonesome prospecting in the wilds of Nevada added nothing to my store of worldly wealth, save an old saddle and a shotgun—and these souvenirs I was obliged to leave in the wilderness.

I have taken up vast tracts of land, and staked out lots in anticipation of forthcoming towns and cities; but, bless you! I do believe that had I landed in San Francisco prior to Forty-nine, the site of the metropolis of the Pacific Coast would have betaken itself in affright to Oakland or Benicia.

Did I get a situation, it was always the fag end of a situation, involving the hardest work and the poorest pay. I was always in it just at the climax of necessity.

All these things have engendered in me a morbid condition of mind, which actually often spoils present happiness by the anticipation of future misery. Very foolish and unreasonable, I grant; but then, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity and vexation of spirit."

I have friends. I have been a welcome guest at some delightful family circles; but just at the time my heart commences to cling to them they up and die, or move away, or get married, and down I go flat into the same old slough of lonesomeness and misery.

There are many other miserable people in the world beside myself. I am not parading a mere selfish grief. Other miserable people are much worse off, for they derive no enjoyment from being miserable.

There is some talk now, among progressive people, that pain and misery are necessary concomitants of the growth and development of the soul, and that we shall all come out right and bright at last. I hope so. It is a long lane, you know, which never turns.

PRENTICE.

NOTES ON HAYWARD'S

Messrs. Editors:

TAKE the Alameda ferryboat, steam over our noble bay, get into the cars at Alameda, ride to Hayward's Station and you may form an idea of the beauty of a portion of our agricultural country. You will behold comfortable farm houses and fertile farms. You will see the husbandman ploughing his broad acres and the various wives of the various husbandmen engaged in the employments peculiar to the farm. You will also see a very wet and partly submerged country whose dampness the January sun can scarcely dissipate, also potato fields and cabbage patches looking dangerous for the hoof of man or animal to tread. The country over the bay is one of the gardens of California, and Hayward's is a small, a quiet and an agricultural village. There are unfortunate people there doomed for this life at least, to the sale of groceries. There are two hotels with the necessary and inevitable hotel-keepers. And I suppose there is at Hayward's in a small compass, most of the joys and sorrows of human life. It is probable the human race die there, still to me no graveyard was apparent. That the different shades of human nature flourished there, was apparent from the variety of reception with which an inquiry of mine was met on asking for a certain man I wished to find. Party No. 1 driving a single team, deigned me no reply. Consequently there was evolved a mental note to the effect that common civility at Hayward's was scarce. Party No. 2 driving another team, thought the party inquired for might be about somewhere—didn't know exactly—thought I might find him if I looked. Well, I was looking. However, Hayward civility was proved by this to be no myth. It was peeping out. Party No 3 actually pointed out to me the desired house, and Party No. 4 proved to be the perfection of good nature and accommodation. Perseverance was indeed finally rewarded as it always is. I mean perseverance in the search for civility. The Alameda cars stop frequently. There are a number of thriving villages on the route worth stopping at. San Leandro seems to be a comfortable place to live in. The people all along the road have homes, which, by the way, seems a singular and eccentric condition to a man without any home. I am a native of the mines. In the mines we have no homes—at least real homes, and so there is something peculiarly eccentric in the conduct of people who settle down and evince an intention of spending all their earthly days in one place.

QUARTZ,

CHOLERA.

EDITOR CALIFORNIAN: The people have universally been rendered timid and fearful in relation to epidemic, or Asiatic Cholera, I think more from the furore into which medical men worked and still work themselves, as a body, than from any sufficient cause for excitement.

It is nearly thirty-five years since I became acquainted with its character by personal observation and every-day reports, viz: in 1832 when the epidemic first made its appearance in the city of New York, the populous portion of which place I did not leave during an hour until after the Board of Health officially declared the epidemic had ceased. In 1834 I again encountered it on the Ohio, on the Upper and Lower Mississippi, in the Lake Country, again in New York in 1835, and finally in New York during the epidemic of 1849. The great lesson I learned in 1832 I never forgot, which was the value of personal cleanliness and true courage or fearlessness, caused by an intelligent conviction that the disease was neither contagious or infectious. To-day I say to you and your readers that Cholera is not contagious—is not infectious, after all the experience I have had and the lapse of so many years.

During the epidemic of 1849, I was a daily visitor of two hospitals, giving one of them as many as one to three visits per day, with occasional visits to others, and on one day devoting upwards of twelve hours to a visitation of the whole of the hospitals (five) of the city. I have seen thousands of cases, of states and conditions, from the infant of less than two years to the adult of upward of sixty: from the earliest confirmed stage to the dying and the dead. I have conversed with the nurses, with (the medical pack-horses) the assistant physicians in charge, have shared with them many hours of their "cholera atmosphere," (fudge) and assert as the result of knowledge so obtained that there really is no serious cause for apprehension of danger from cholera other than panic, fright, fear, whisky, tobacco, an unclean and inactive skin and improper habits. Let your readers, who, I trust are too sensible to be affected by the one class of danger, and are free from the habits which constitute the other, have no foreboding of evil, but continue on in the even routine of their lives satisfied that such course has secured safety to millions, beside to Your's Respectfully, G. M. BOURNE.

LOVE-LETTERS.

LOVE LETTERS outgh, on theory, to be full of genius. They contain, or are supposed to contain, the young gushings of nature and of the heart. And it is very much in favor of the writers that they write in moments of exaltation, and mean what they write to be seen only by one pair of liquid eyes. At such a task one would think only a very stupid man could fail; but, on the contrary, one finds that very few men succeed. But as clever women every now and then are fascinating, and men do happen sometimes to fall in love with them, it is necessary to have some sensible views as to what a letter of the sort, directed to a competent critic, should contain. And inasmuch as, in the present condition of society and the law, nobody can be quite certain that his love-letters may not hereafter be published, either for the benefit of the newspapers or for posterity, it is important that young men should begin to give their minds to doing their epistolary duties well, and in a manner calculated to bring no disgrace upon themselves or their education. What ruins most love-letters is not the sentiment, or the unworldliness that underlies them, so much as the adherence to a kind of common form which is not by any means based upon the rules of the highest art. The love-letters of certain classes of people, wherever they turn up in the papers, are always full of little commonplaces which the writers appear to consider appropriate to the situation. They never seem able quite to make up their mind whether it is the correct thing to call the beloved object thou or you; and the second person singular and the second person plural keep blundering up against one another in a manner that must be heartrending to any young tradesman's mistress who is anything of a grammarian. There is something about the correspondence of lovers who belong to this class of life that reminds the reader of a valentine. It is the correct thing apparently among them to engage in a periodical correspondence, and the clerk or tradesman does it without a murmur; but his share in it generally consists of assurances that when he got back to his shop after leaving the lady of his affections he could not sleep a wink, but that even in the dark watches of the night he is "thine, fondly thine." The young milliner to whom it is addressed is far better pleased than these little common forms should not be left out. The love-letters of cultivated people are doubtless less grotesque; but educated people have their own common forms, which to cold and rational observers would appear possibly little less ridiculous in the long run. The poetry of the times has a good deal to say to the love-letter of the period. Girls who are tolerably well read know by heart all the routine of love making long before they ever come to be seriously in love. They have seen about it in Byron and in Tennyson, and have sung a good deal about it in connection with the moon, and with all sorts of angels and of flowers, at the piano. As soon as the fated hour of a life-long attachment comes, they settle themselves down to realize all that they have heard of, and a love which had not a good deal of moon and flowers and angels about it would not seem to them love at all. The first thing that a women likes when she is being courted is to be called something like what amateur musicians are always calling one another in duets. She is quite willing to be a bee, or a bird, or a lily: but it is de riguer that she should be either in the ornithological or the botanical line. It is all very well if the lover happens to have been a little in the duet way too. He can in this way understand the feeling, and nerve himself without much difficulty to respond to it. But if he is entirely ignorant about birds and botany, his task becomes more serious. He has the humiliation of being obliged to confine himself entirely to calling his future wife an angel or a goddess, according as he is most addicted to classical or to Christian mythology; while the mortifying thought cannot fail to strike him that both appellations are a little elevated and a little trite. If it were not, indeed, for the present postal facilities, writing love-letters might not be so exhausting to the intellect. In old times a young gentleman could only indite epistles of the kind once a week, and had plenty of leisure to get up his literary steam and to select his illustrations. If at the moment it did not occur to him what sort of plant he wished to call his fair correspondent, he had at least seven days to think about it, and to consult his dictionary. The postal system has altered all this, and a lover's imagination now has to undergo frequent and diurnal drains which it really is quite unfitted to support. Courtship has become a literary crisis in life. Men must write as long as women will read, and it is on this account that the art of love-letter writing deserves to be seriously taught, and seriously recognized. It is a sad thing to think how many attachés, clerks, and young gentlemen, are to tally ignorant of the proper rudiments of a training which is sure to become necessary to them in the daily routine of their profession.—Saturday Review.

ARTEMUS WARD IN LONDON.

ARTEMUS WARD is, as a trne humorist should be, even better than his books. What his personal influence adds to the humor of his stories is not of course always easy to analyze, but mainly, we think, this—the impression which he contrives to produce that his confusions of thought and speech are all inevitable on his own part, that his mind drifts on helplessly from one of these grotesque ideas or expressions to the next, as the creature or victim of some overruling power, which chooses his thonght and language for him, so that he is not even a party to the transaction, though he has an earnest and rather melancholy interest in the result. When he first comes on to the platform, with his long, hollow-cheeked face, and his bright, sad, interrogative eyes, we shonld expect from him, if we knew nothing about the matter, almost anything rather than cause for laughter. He might be, were he not a little too quiet and polished in manner, an eager philanthropist or religious preacher, who had one sole passion left burning in his brain—to convince the rest of the world of the duty of joining in some great crusade. Yet he has the face of a humorist nevertheless the light in the eyes, the twitch about the mouth which show, as soon as we know what he really is, that the most opposite currents of association constantly cross each other and pull simultaneonsly at the most widely separated chords of his mind.

He never smiles, but looks, on the contrary, pleading and entreating, as if he were above all things solicitous to get his thoughts really disentangled this time, when he is approaching one of his odd comparisons. When he first appears, for instance, he says, with the greatest simplicity and pathetic kind of earnestness, that he does not himself think at all highly of his entertainment, or expect much from it, that he only hopes to obtain from it a small sum of money sufficient to take him to New Zealand, for, he adds, "If I could only go to New Zealand, I should feel that I had not wholly lived in vain;" and then, as the audience laugh at this very new recipe for avoiding a completely vain life, he adds, with eagerness and a child-like sort of effusion to his audience, "I don't want to live wholly in vain," at which, of course, the laughter deepens into a hearty roar. That is a type of the whole character of his humor. He gets hold of two inconsistent and absurdly arbitrary ideas, connects them with a sort of simple fervor in his own mind, and presses them on his hearers with an air of plaintive good faith that is quite irresistible.

So a few sentences afterward, when he mentions that he would not allow a bust of himself to be taken because he could not bear the idea of the people carrying him about everywhere, making him common, and hugging him in plaster of Paris, and his audience (rather prematurely) laugh, he assumes the laugh to be sceptical, and says with a sharp, half-snappish air of innocent, argumentative irritation, "Yes, they would," —and then those who saw nothing humorous before are fully carried away now, and join in the universal chorus. All his best points are made by producing this impression—that his mind is floating inevitably along a natural current of ideas his audience see the most absurd combinations. In one of his Punch Papers, Artemus Ward's best point was remarking quite simply that the Tower is a "sweet boon," but the humor of this criticism would have been immensely enhanced by his manner. He would have said it with such accidental pathos, as if the words were the only possible ones that could have risen to his lips to describe the Tower, that the humor, real enough in the printed letter, would have convulsed his audience.

All he says seems to be thought aloud, as if it were just bubbling up new within him. And when he hits on a deep thought, and says for instance, with a sort of hesitating, perplexed candor, as though he were getting a little beyond his own depth and his audience's too—"Time passed on. You may have noticed that it usually does, that that is a sort of way Time has about it, it generally passes," a joke of no absolute merit takes a very great humor from his hesitating, anxious way of appearing to show the analysis of his own embarrassed thoughts to the people he is addressing. The character he best likes to fill is that of a sort of intellectual Hans —the model simpleton of the old German stories—in the act of confidiug himself to the public. In the German stories Hans only makes a practical fool of himself in all sorts of impossible ways. But Artemus Ward intellectualizes him—shows the inner absurdity of his own thoughts with a pathetic earnestness and candor. His mind seems to wander when he speaks of his own past with winning simplicity. With the sunny days of youth, he says, many sweet forms are associated, "especially Maria—she married another—you may notice they frequently do,"—and he brings out all such happy generalizations with a real heave of intellectual travail that convulses his hearers with good reason. Nothing is better than his eager, ardent way of propounding a truism. You cannot avoid the conviction for a moment that it has just struck him as a real truth. When he points to the summit of one of the range of mountains in Utah, and says, with an evident wish to be useful to his audience, "The highest part of this mountain is the top," or pointing to one of the horses on the prairie, "That beautiful and interesting animal is a horse, it was a long time before I discovered it," in spite of the exceeding simplicity and obviousness of the joke, which any clown in a pantomime might have made as well, he reaches the sense of humor simply by the engaging earnestness and naïveté of his speech.

Perhaps the most humorous part of Artemus Ward's lecture, however, is the natural, unresisting way in which he drifts about in search of words and phrases, often conveying a sense of difficulty and of conscious error, and then correcting himself by the use of a phrase still more ludicrous, and on which yet he seems to have been landed by an imperious necessity. Thus, when he says that he used to sing, but not well, he stumbles in the most natural way, and is a prey to melancholy that he can't hit on the proper phrase, "as a songer," he said, "I was not successful;" and then, in a depressed and self-correcting way, conscious he had gone wrong, "As a singster I was a failure. I am always saddest when I sing—and so are those who hear me." The art with which he gives the impression that he is floundering along in his choice of words, the victim of the first verbal association which strikes his memory, and yet just familiar enough with language to feel certain as to his ground and to wish to get hold of some clearer term, is beyond praise. When he lighted upon "singster" he evidently felt that he was near the mark, a partial, but not complete satisfaction lit up his face, and yet he did not pronounce it with confidence, but with a modest sort of diffidence, as if the phrase was as near as he could get.

A general effect of having to grope for his language before he can express himself, always hovers about his manner. When he says, with some pride, that he would not allow them "to sculp" him, and that "the clothes I now occupy produced a great sensation in America," there is no glimmer of a smile on his face, and a marked absence of emphasis on the grotesque words, which he slips out exactly as if he were rather anxious to divert attention from points on which he feels his ground somewhat uncertain—just as an Englishman abroad hastily slurs over his doubtful grammar to get on to idioms of which he is more certain. Then occasionally he will fall in the most natural and helpless way into a language-trap of his own setting, as where he says that in the hurry of embarking on board the steamer which took him from New York, some middle-aged ladies against whom he was hustled mistook his character wholly and said, "Base man, leave us, oh leave us!—and I left them, oh I left them!" where he appears quite unable to help throwing the second half of the sentence into the form of an antistrope of the first. It impresses one as a sheer inability to get out of the wake of the first half of the sentence, not as any wish to be amusing, that makes him interpolate the second "oh!" He seems like a man who, having taken a good run, cannot stop himself at the right point, but must run beyond it; the rythm of the elderly ladies' exhortation mastered him; he helplessly succumbs to it in explaining how he obeyed it. It is the fatalism of grammatical construction.

So again, when he finds the seventeen young Mormon widows weeping, and ask them, "Why is this thus?" he falls a victim to the perplexity and embarrassment with which the juxtaposition of "this" and "thus" has overpowered his weak brain; and goes on helplessly, "What is the cause of thisthusness?" He cannot evidently help developing at length those subtle suggestions of verbal confusion which so often strike everybody's ear with an idiotic jingle of fascination. This is closely analogous to his curious habit of floating feebly down the chain of intellectual association, however grotesque. When he tells us that the picture of the Nevada mountains is by "the ancient masters," the mere idea of the ancient masters of course suggests at once that they are dead; so he goes on, "This was the last picture they painted, and then they died." So when he points out the lion on Brigham Young's gate, he says, pointing to a very ridiculous and elongated feature in it, "Yonder lion, you will observe, has a tail. It will be continued for a few evenings longer." The humor of all this is the humor of helplessness, the humor of letting your thoughts drift idly with the most absurd association that crosses them, and never rescuing yourself by any insurrection of common sense. Artemus Ward in all his best jokes—of course, like other professional jokers, he has some poor ones at which it is wrong to smile—is, as we said before, an intellectualized form of the German village-simpleton Hans. He He yields a literal obedience to every absurd suggestion of thought and language, just as Hans does to the verbal directions of his wife or mother, and gets into intellectual absurdity just as Hans gets into practical absurdity. This, with the melancholy, earnest manner of a man completely unconscious that there is anything grotesque in what he says, conveys an effect of inimitable humor.—London Spectator.

Everyone who has seen a ballet in the Russian capital, knows that it is impossible to have anythiug more complete. And no wonder, when we learn that the Imperial theatres cost the State not less than two hundred thousand pounds a year, the greater part of which is spent for the ballet and the opera.

The loyal manuscript presented to Victor Emannel, by the Venetians, is said to be a work of art which has no superior. The initial letter of the word "sire" is made up of microscopic views of the city of Venice.

"MARK TWAIN" ON CHAMBER-MAIDS.

AGAINST all chamber-maids, of whatsoever age or nationality, I launch the curse of Bachelordom!

Because:—

They always put the pillows at the opposite end of the bed from the gas-burner, so that while you read and smoke before sleeping (as is the ancient and honored custom of bachelors) you have to hold your book aloft, in an uncomfortable position, to keep the light from dazzling your eyes.

When they find the pillows removed to the other end of the bed in the morning, they receive not the mute suggestion in a friendly spirit, but glorying in their absolute sovereignty, and unpitying your helplessness, they make the bed just as it was originally, and gloat in secret over the pang their tyranny will cause you.

Always after that, when they find you have transposed the pillows, they undo your work, and thus defy you and seek to embitter the life that God hath given you.

If they cannot get the light in an inconvenient position any other way, they move the bed.

If you pull your trunk out six inches from the wall, so that the lid will stay up when you open it, they always shove that trunk back again. They do it on purpose.

If you want the spittoon in a certain spot, where it will be handy, they don't. And so they move it.

They always put your other boots in inaccessible places. They chiefly enjoy depositing them as far under the bed as the wall will permit. It is because this compels you to get down in an undignified attitude and make wild sweeps for them in the dark with the bootjack, and swear.

They always put the match-box in some other place. They hunt up a new place for it every day, and put a bottle, or other perishable glass thing, where the box stood before. This is to cause you to break that glass thing, groping in the dark, and get yourself into trouble.

They are forever and ever moving the furniture. When you come in, in the night, you can calculate on finding the bureau where the wardrobe was in the morning. And when you go out in the morning, if you leave the slop-bucket by the door and the rocking chair by the window, when you come in at midnight, or thereabouts, you will fall over that rocking-chair and you will proceed towards the window and sit down in that slop-tub. This will disgust you. They like that.

No matter where you put anything, they are not going to let it stay there. They will take it and move it the first chance they get. It is their nature. And besides, it gives them pleasure to be mean and contrary this way. They would die if they couldn't be villains.

They always save up all the old scraps of printed rubbish you throw on the floor, and stack them up carefully on the table, and then start the fire with your valuable manuscripts. If there is any one particular old scrap that you are more down on than any other, and which you are gradually wearing your life out trying to get rid of, you may take all the pains you possibly can in that direction; but it won't be of any use, because they will always fetch that old scrap back and put it in the same old place every time. It does them good.

And they use up more hair-oil than any six men. If charged with purloining the same, they lie about it. What do they care about a hereafter? Absolutely nothing.

If you leave your key in the door for convenience sake, they will carry it down to the office and give it to the clerk. They do this under the vile pretense of trying to protect your property from thieves—but actually they do it because they want to make you tramp back down stairs after it when you come home tired, or put you to the trouble of sending a waiter for it, which waiter will expect you to pay him something. In which case I suppose the degraded creatures divide.

They keep always coming to make your bed before you get up, thus destroying your rest and inflicting agony upon you—but after you get up they don't come any more till next day.

They do all the mean things they can think of, and they do them just out of pure cussedness, and nothing else.

Chambermaids are dead to every human instinct.

I have cursed them in behalf of outraged bachelordom. They deserve it. If I can get a bill through the Legislature abolishing chambermaids, I mean to do it.—New York Weekly Review.

Antiquity of the Earth.—Chalk consists altogether of shells or the fragments of shells Scarcely more than ten inches in thickness of these were deposited in a century in the ancient seas in which they were produced; and as, in some cases, the chalk is one hundred feet thick, it must have required one hundred and twenty thousand years for its production. Flint gravels are formed by the destruction of chalk; but as the chulk cliffs are not broken down at the rate of more than one inch in a century, fallen cliffs protect the coast until they are worn away, and other circumstances tend to render the process of destruction slow. It has been calculated that the Wealden Valley, which is twenty-two miles in breadth, and was formed by the denudation of the Weald, required 150,000,000 years for its production.

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded myself very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all case, of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavin, etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywhere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo bits we can save the bites and bills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Darnes & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion. Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

BILLIARD TABLES.

JACOB STRAHLE IS DETERMINED TO FURNISH Billiard Tables cheaper, and on more reasonable terms than any other establishment on the Pacific coast, having secured repeated premiums for finish and durability of work, as well as for his latest styles of cushions. This shows conclusively that his tables are superior to any manufactured in the city. His manufactory is at 537 Sacramento street, near What Cheer House. *

JACOB SHEW & Co., No. 315 Montgomery street, near Pine, take First-Class Photographs, of all kinds, at the lowest scale of prices adopted by the Associated Photographers. Photographs retouched in the highest style of the art.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his cure. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

JOHN GORMAN,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

No. 619 Merchant street,

Above Montgomery.....(South side.)

PETTIT & CO.,

INTELLIGENCE OFFICE,

613 Kearny St., between Sacramento and Commercial, San Francisco.

VAN VLECK & KEITH,

Designers and Engravers

ON WOOD,

No. 611 Clay street, San Francisco.

WM. KEITH. D. VAN VLECK.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

No. 224 Montgomery street,

Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,

San Francisco.

B. MACKAY,

ARCHITECT,

NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, - - - Petaluma.

EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

GROCERIES AT WHOLESALE PRICES, IN LOTS TO suit family trade, at

HASKELL & BUCKELEW'S,

514 Market street.

REMOVAL!

Wightman & Hardie's

DRY GOODS AND CARPET WAREHOUSE

HAS REMOVED

To No. 220 Sansome Street,

TWO DOORS SOUTH OF CALIFORNIA.

Removal. Removal.

THE HOWE SEWING MACHINE AGENCY

HAS BEEN REMOVED TO

NEW STORE,

No. 137 KEARNY STREET, S. W. corner of Sutter.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON SEWING MACHINES,

AT THE CALIFORNIA STATE FAIR, 1866:

"To the President of the State Agricultural Society:

Your Committee on Sewing Machines beg leave to report that we have examined the Several Sewing Machines (The Grover & Baker, the Wheeler & Wilson, and the Florence,) on exhibition, and find that,

For General Family Use, The

IS THE BEST.

[Signed] J. N. ANDREWS,
THOS. C. McHALE,
L. ELKUS."

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco.

Removal to Kearny Street.

FRISBEE & SCOTT,

IMPORTERS OF

Foreign and American Music,

AND MUSIC BOOKS!

Sole Agents for the Celebrated KNABE & CO.'S PIANOS, of Baltimore, and CALENBERG & VAUPEL, of New York. These Pianos have within the last two years reached a greater sale than any other manufactured in this country.

GOTSTCHALK, STRAKOSCH, THALBERG,

And other celebrities, pronounce them SUPERIOR TO ANY OTHERS.

SALESROOM removed to 139 Kearny street below Sutter, San Francisco.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

CRANBERRY PRESERVES, 35 CENTS PER CAN, or three cans for $1, at

HASKELL & BUCKELEW'S.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, California.

STUDIES WILL BE RESUMED IN THE ABOVE INstitution on the 2d of January, 1867. The cost of Tuition and Board for the scholastic Year of from ten to eleven months will be only one hundred and seventy-five dollars ($175), and twenty-five dollars (25) for washing and mending of linen, etc. No extra charges of any kind, except for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars ($3) a month each. In case of withdrawal (except for sickness or parents leaving the country), the party will forfeit a Quarter Session, or the remaining portion of the Half Term. The Pension to be paid at least half yearly in advance; also, such sum to be deposited as will be sufficient to pay the traveling expenses of each student to his place of residence, and other contingent expenses, such as books, clothes, etc. No student will be received without such deposit. For further information application may be made to P. J. GREY, President.

CALIFORNIA

Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

A Big Thing and no Humbug.

OF THE THOUSANDS OF COMPOUNDS BEFORE the public, "RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA" for the Hair, alone, does just what it promises.

Hon. Warren Chase, the Spiritualist Lecturer, says:

"My hair and whiskers have been many years gray. RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA has restored both to their original color, black, and covered the baldness on the top of my head with a fine growth of black hair I have several friends who have used it with the same results, and I cordially recommend it as one of the few medicines that will do what its labels and circulars claim for it. WARREN CHASE."

October, 1865

Call for RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA, and for your own pleasure and comfort do not be put off with anything else, "said to be just as good."

JOHN F. SNOW,
24 Post street, San Francisco,
Agent for the Pacific Coast.

ALSO,

Coloring, Cleansing and Restoring of

FEATHERS, KID GLOVES, SILKS, FURS, WOOLENS, ETC.,

24 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny, SAN FRANCISCO.

NATURE UNVEILED,

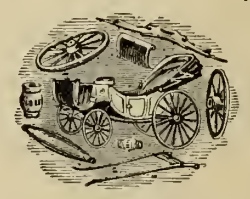
AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

Between California and Pine

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc., made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

AGENTS WANTED TO CANVASS FOR THE only official Southern History of the War. THE LOST CAUSE, by E. A. Pollard, the popular Historian of the South, and editor of the Richmond Examiner during the war. Complete in one large royal octavo volume, with

24 FINE STEEL PORTRAITS,

giving a full and authentic account of the rise and fall of the late Southern Confederacy. Written under the encouragement of Generals R. E. Lee, Johnston, Beauregard and others. The work is being liberally patronized by leading men of all classes, eager to hear

"THE OTHER SIDE,"

and thus arrive at the truth of history, which it is impossible to do from the many histories written only from a Northern stand-point.

Agents and the public are cautioned against any other work purporting to be this one. To energetic men and women a rare chance is offered to make money. Don't fail to send for circulars of this great and important work. Address

F. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded myself very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all case, of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavin, etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywhere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo bits we can save the bites and bills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Barnes & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion. Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle.

MINERS' FOUNDRY
AND MACHINE WORKS,
FIRST STREET, between Howard and Folsom,
SAN FRANCISCO.

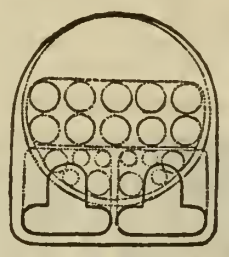
HOWLAND, ANGELL & KING,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Steam Engines,
MILL AND QUARTZ MACHINERY,
And Iron Castings of all kinds.

FULTON FOUNDRY & IRON WORKS

HINCKLEY & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
STEAM ENGINES,
Quartz, Flour and Saw Mills,
Mining Machinery, and all kinds of Iron and Brass Castings,
45, 47 AND 49 FIRST STREET
Between Market and Mission—San Francisco.

BRODIE'S IMPROVED
QUARTZ-CRUSHER.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF
HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS
Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

PIONEER WORKS.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Fire Proof Doors and Shutters,
Bank Vaults, Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc,
Corner Fremont and Market street, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of Second Hand Fire Proof Doors and Shutters.

Also, manufacture to order the California Burglar and Fire-Proof Safe, with the Burglar's Lock invented by Mr. W. C. Bussey, of Jackson, Amador county, Cal. No Key required to open this State. It is done by Mathematical Calculation. Call and examine for yourselves, at our Works.

THIS LOCK PUT ON SAFES NOW IN USE

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Slap-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOSEPH H. WEED,
V. KINGWELL.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

MASONIC TEMPLE,
Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!
Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

A. J. PLATE,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
Guns, Rifles and Pistols.
ALSO,

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS, Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, &c., &c.,
NO. 411 SANSOME STREET,
Between Commercial and Sacramento Sts., San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND
IN USE
THE ORIGINAL P. P. STEWART'S FUEL SAVING
Air-Tight Cooking Stoves,
FOR WOOD OR COAL.
IMPROVED IN 1861;
WITH NEW AND EXTRA LARGE FLUES, AND BY THE ADDITION OF THE CELEBRATED PATENT DOUBLE-SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.

Attention is Invited to the following Points of Superiority:

1. DURABILITY.—Lasting, with proper care, at least twenty years. Stoves are now in use that were set up in 1838.

2. MANUFACTURE.—Every portion of the Stove is thoroughly constructed. Each Stove is submitted to a critical test, and none leave our works unless completely and perfectly finished.

3. CAPACITY.—Baking, Boiling, Roasting, and all other culinary operations performed at the same time.

4. ECONOMY.—Saving the cost of the Stove in one year in the cost of fuel.

5. VENTILATION OF OVEN.—In the Stewart Stove alone, the front doors open directly into the oven, (protected by letters patent) securing a direct draft through the top of the oven by means of perforated holes in the doors and back flues. It will be borne in mind that, as the heated air always rises, this method of ventilation is the only one of any value whatever.

6. ENTIRE CONTROL OF HEAT.—The heat generated by the Stove may be held therein and used or thrown into the room at pleasure.

7. THE DOUBLE SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.—By which a compressing and inverting action of heat is obtained, and the oven more evenly and efficiently heated than by any other known invention.

9. HOT WATER RESERVOIR AND WARMING CLOSET.—Both useful and convenient, supplied by the waste heat and without extra fuel.

10. WATER BACK.—An arrangement for supplying hot water for the bath-room equal to any range.

 Beware of numerous imitations in the market, many of which resemble the "Stewart" only in appearance, and none of them possess any of its peculiar qualities.

See that the name of P. P. STEWART is on each Stove. None other genuine.

For sale by CALEB M. SICKLER,
422 Kearny street,
Between California and Pine, San Francisco.
Repairs for Stewart's Stoves constantly on hand.

GEO. BORDWELL,
ARCHITECT,
No. 224 Montgomery street,
Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,
San Francisco.

B. MACKAY,
ARCHITECT,
NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street, . . . Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

GROCERIES AT WHOLESALE PRICES, IN LOTS TO suit family trade, at HASKELL & BUCKELEW'S,
514 Market street.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Stell, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
D. N. & E. Walter & Co., 303 California street.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 809 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market.
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S E cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 524 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 420 Montgomery street.
Dunn & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Stuart & Chapin, 328 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOOD AND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 850 Howard street.

THE THIEF'S ADROITNESS.

"Come, let's us have another glass before we go."

I was opposed to drinking any more; but he insisted, and I yielded. We stood again in the old position, his left hand resting on the counter, my right the same, holding the glass. He put the glass to his lips, then as suddenly laid it down again, and looked me straight in the eye. In a second, the fawning thief had changed into a spiteful, quarrelsome wretch.

"I suppose you would like to know a thief's opinion of you, wouldn't you?"

As he said this, he smiled, sarcastically, and stroked his moustache.

"I am indifferent," was the only reply I made.

"I think not," he continued. "Well, you can have mine, if you want it."

"What's the use of quarreling with me? It can't do you any good."

As I said this, I emptied my glass, and coolly laid it down.

"Oh, that's the way all you fellows do. You preach peace, and pat us on the back, after you have pitched into us in the papers. But you can't come it. Let me tell you that you reporters are worse than thieves. You snivel out an apology when you meet them, get dead drunk at their expense, go back and write about them again, and for a ten or a twenty, you will suppress an article any time—"

"It's a—"

"Shut up! I know better!"

We both got excited; and he, of course, warmed up gradually during the discussion, and kept repeatedly emphasizing his assertions by a slight tap with his fingers on the collar of my coat, while he continued to glare at me with that wicked eye of his.

When matters had approached this crisis, and those in the bar-room, anticipating a collision, had given us a pretty wide berth, he stuck his two hands in his pockets, and exclaimed, in a very comical way:

"Say, where's your pin?"

I felt—it was gone. He immediately extended his hand to me, and with his usually serene face, which almost always wore a smile, even when under arrest, said:

"I was only joking, when I tantalized you. You know I couldn't mean it."

The apology was ample, and after another smile, I asked him how he managed to get the pin.

"Oh," replied the jolly crossman, "I could not touch you with the blarney-stone, and saw that there was but one way to get at you. You are both nervous and sensitive; and I knew if I got you excited with indignation, a child might take the pin. One or two sharp, quick touches with the fingers, as I emphasized my words, loosened the hold; another touch drew it out. In your excitement you neither could see nor feel. Of course, in your case, I would have to rely on an associate to get me out of the breeze I had raised, by coming up and swearing me out, and apologizing to the gentleman insulted. But, if I had a coxcomb to deal with, it would be different. He is as sensitive of a speck of dust on his clothing, as you are of a doubt of your honor. I would walk up to him with my cigar in my mouth, on the platform of a railroad-car, and say, with the blandest smile, 'Excuse me, sir, there is a bug on your neck-tie.' He would hold up his chin in horror, as I put out my hand to relieve him, and blush from the ears to the cheek-bones. A second employed in catching the imaginary bed-bug, would place the pin in the hollow of my hand, and fore-fingers and thumb would send the disgusting insect beyond sight. I would then put the 'prop' in my pocket, and draw out a cigar, which he would accept with many thanks, and for the few minutes I remained in his company, he would be remarkably friendly."

How the fingers perform the work of taking a pin out of a shirt bosom, without violence, it is not my purpose to explain; it is sufficient to say that years only of practice—time long enough to master one's own and two foreign languages—and even then, with all that practice, some never become adepts. This will not be very pleasing intelligence for the youngsters who contemplate leading a life of crime, believing that a life of theft is a life of ease.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, California.

STUDIES WILL BE RESUMED IN THE ABOVE INstitution on the 2d of January, 1867. The cost of Tuition and Board for the scholastic Year of from ten to eleven months will be only one hundred and seventy-five dollars ($175), and twenty-five dollars (25) for washing and mending of linen, etc. No extra charges of any kind, except for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars ($3) a month each. In case of withdrawal (except for sickness or parents leaving the country), the party will forfeit a Quarter Session, or the remaining portion of the Half Term. The Pension to be paid at least half yearly in advance; also, such sum to be deposited as will be sufficient to pay the traveling expenses of each student to his place of residence, and other contingent expenses, such as books, clothes, etc. No student will be received without such deposit. For further information application may be made to P. J. GREY, President.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

The following steamships will be despatched on dates as given below:

STEAMERS FOR JANUARY.

January 19th—MONTANA, Captain J. Sutton, connecting with RISING STAR, Captain Howes.

January 30th—CONSTITUTION, Captain J. M. Cavalry, connecting with NEW YORK, Captain Gray.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER
AMERICA,
WILL SAIL FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua,
From MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on FRIDAY, - - JANUARY 25, 1867,
Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship
NICARAGUA,
(2500 tons) For NEW YORK.

The MOSES TAYLOR will sail on February 15th.

For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

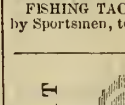
Lundborg, Dentist, 519 Montgomery St.

SPORTSMEN'S EMPORIUM.

FIRST PREPIUM FOR 1864, 1865 and 1866.

538 Washington street, below Montgomery.

ROBERT LIDDLE & CO.,



GUN AND RIFLE MAKERS, and IMPORTERS OF GUNS, RIFLES and PISTOLS. ☞ Also, Agents for HENRY'S PATENT RIFLE, and WM. GREENER'S celebrated DOUBLE GUNS.

FISHING TACKLE, and all the appurtenances required by Sportsmen, to be found here.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES AT

PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

TRUMP & BRADY,

No. 615 Market street,

In Basement of St. Lawrence House, opposite Montgomery,

STEAM AND GAS FITTING,

PLUMBING, Etc.

Gas Letters and Reflectors made to order. Ships, Stores, and Dwelling fitted up with Steam, Water and Gas Pipes, at the lowest rates.

Pumps Repaired, and all kinds of Jobbing done at the shortest notice.

All Work warranted, or no charges made.

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE

At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSING out our last year's stock of FURNITURE, etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth; and Main street, Stockton.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

THIS IS A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY, and stands above comparison with any other article for the Hair ever brought before the public.

A PERFECT

Hair Restorer AND Hair Dresser

BOTH COMBINED IN ONE.

First—It is not a Dye.
Second—Will not Color the Skin.
Third—Will restore Gray Hair to a beautiful Black, Brown, Auburn, or whatever might have been its original color, and cause it to assume its former beauty.
Fourth—Will cure all Humors and Diseases of the Scalp.
Fifth—Will remove Dandruff and Scurf from the head, and keep the hair moist and silk like in its appearance as in youthful days.
Sixth—Will promote a healthy growth.
Seventh—Will prevent it from falling off, and cause it to grow on bald heads where there is life and vitality at the roots, but where these are gone there is no hope of success.
Eighth—The best testimony that can be given will be found inside of each bottle.

Warranted to do all we claim for it, or the money refunded after using two bottles. Try it and be convinced.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Price.....One Dollar.

SIMONDS & CO., Proprietors,
Fitzwilliam, N. H.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

STOP THAT COUGHING.

SOME OF YOU CAN'T, AND WE PITY YOU. You have tried every remedy but the ONE destined, by its intrinsic merit, to supersede all similar preparations. It is not surprising you should be reluctant to try something else after the many experiments you have made of trashy compounds foisted on the public as a certain cure. but

NEWELL'S

PULMONARY SYRUP

is really the VERY BEST remedy ever compounded for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Consumption. Thousands of people in California and Oregon have been already benefited by the surprising curative powers of

NEWELL'S PULMONARY SYRUP,

and with one accord give it their unqualified approbation. We now address ourselves to all who are unacquainted with this, the greatest Panacea of the age, for the healing of all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, assuring you that has cured thousands, and it will cure you if you try it. This invaluable medicine is pleasant to the taste, soothing, healing and strengthening in its effects; entirely free from all poisonous or deleterious drugs, and perfectly harmless under all circumstances.

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

Certificates from many prominent citizens of San Francisco accompany every bottle of

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco

REDINGTON'S
Flavoring Extract

ARE MADE FROM FRESH FRUITS. Each bottle holds twice as much as any other brand in the market, consequently they are the cheapest and the best. USE NO OTHER.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Agents for the Pacific Coast

REDINGTON & CO.'S
Essence of Jamaica Ginger.

THIS VALUABLE PREPARATION, containing in a highly concentrated form all the properties of the Jamaica Ginger, has become one of the most popular domestic remedies for all diseases of the stomach and digestive organs.

As a tonic it will be found invaluable to all persons recovering from debility, whether produced by fever or otherwise, for whilst it imparts to the system all the glow and vigor that can be produced by wine or brandy, it is entirely free from the reactionary effects that follow the use of spirits of any kind.

It is also an excellent remedy for females who suffer from difficult menstruation, giving almost immediate relief to the spasms that so frequently accompany that period.

It gives immediate relief to Nausea, caused by riding in a railroad car, or by sea-sickness, or other causes.

It is also valuable as an external application for Gout Rheumatism, Neuralgia, etc.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast

I WUD NOT DYE IN WINTUR.

I wud knot dye in wintur,
When whiskie punchiz flow,
When pooty gals are skating
Ore fields of ice and snow,
When sassidge meat is phrying,
& hickery nuts is thick—
Oh! who would think of dying,
Or even getting sick?

I wud knot dye in spring-time,
And miss the turnip-greens,
And the pooty song of the little frawgs,
And the skilark's early screams.
When birds begiu theire wooing,
& taters 'gin to sprout,
When the turkeys so a gobbling,
I wud knot theu peg out.

I wud knot dye in summer,
& leave the garden sass,
The roasted lamb and buttermilk,
The cool place in the grass.
I wud knot dye in summer,
When everything's so hot,
And leave the whisky juleps:
Owe know! I'd ruther knot.

I wud knot dye iu aurtumn,
With peaches fit for eating,
When wavy corn is getting ripe,
& kandidates are treeting.
Phor these and uther reasons
I'd knot dye in the phall;
& since I've thought it over,
I would not dye at all.

A Singular Indian Tradition.—Among the Seminole Indians there is a singular tradition regarding the white man's origin and superiority. They say that when the Great Spirit made the earth he also made three men, all of whom were fair complexioned, and that, after making them, he led them to the margin of a small lake, and bade them leap in and wash, One obeyed, and came out of the water purer and fairer than before; the second hesitated a moment, during which the water, agitated by the first, had become muddled, and when he bathed he came out copper-colored; the third did not leap till the water became black with mud, and he came out with its own co'or. The Great Spirit laid before them three packages, and out of pity for his misfortune in color, gave the black man the first choice. He took hold of each of the packages, and having felt the weight, chose the heaviest; the coppor colored man then chose the next heaviest, leaving the white man the lightest. When the packages were opened the first was found to contain spades, hoes and all other implements of labor: the second enwrapped hunting, fishing and warlike apparatuses; the third gave the white man pens, ink and paper, the engines of the mind--the means of mutual, mental improvement, the social link of humanity, the foundation of the white man's superiority.

A Dreadful Sensation Story.—He had done the deed.

But little did he guess that the eye of an intelligeut potato in the next field was upon him.

The potato poured the dreadful story into the ear of the corn, which let out the secret in its (s) talk, and though I am bound to add that the corn was cut, after thus betraying confidence, the story got wind, and the cucumber was in a most distressed frame of mind in consequence.

The culprit was overtaken by justice, and several scarlet runners, and brought before a justice of the peas.

The case was investigated to the very roots, and the potato was, of course, principle witness for the prosecution.

Wouldst know, oh reader, the wretched man's guilt?

He had shed the blood of a turnip, little expecting it would turu up in evidence against him.

He was executed, of course, the mode of execution, decapitation, in order to sever the carrot ed artery.

He is now a dead beat.

New Orleans is brushing up and growing brisk.

Towne & Bacon,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
536 In this City,
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over the Pacific Fruit Market.

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?
IF YOU DO, GO TO
411 CLAY STREET,
BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.
Printing of every description done on short notice and in the best style, by
M. D. CARR & CO.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,
AND
Show Work of All Kinds,
GO TO THE
COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE
OF
FRANCIS & VALENTINE,
517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

STERETT & CUBERY,
PRINTERS,
533 Clay street, San Francisco.
B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY
We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
San Francisco.

Splendid Presents
TO SEND ABROAD.
STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS
.....OF.....
California Scenery!
A SERIES OF OVER
ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!
ILLUSTRATING
The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.
PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,
And Published by
LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
OPTICIANS,
317 & 319 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

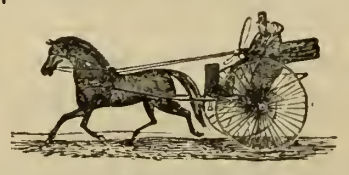
BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.
The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the
S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
With all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.
A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,
Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,
Which is entirely for the use of patrons.
THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,
Shoulder Braces, etc.,
FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,
AT
GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S
NEW YORK BRANCH
Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,
No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,
(Opposite the Russ' House,)
J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.
Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baumschcidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

WILSON & EVANS,

No. 513 Clay street,
Importers and Dealers in
FIREARMS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION,
SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Pouches, Eley's Caps, Wads, and all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing-Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Linen and Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.
WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY
NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warranted to give satisfaction.
WILSON & EVANS.

WILLIAM TRUMBULL,


Manufacturer of
Saddles, Harness and Collars,
North-west corner Davis and Commercial streets.,
SAN FRANCISCO.
A good assortment, made from the best Materials, in the highest style of Workmanship, constantly on hand.
Manufacturing and Repairing done promptly, on reasonable terms. ☞Country Trade solicited.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

AYER'S
CHERRY PECTORAL,
FOR THE RAPID CURE OF
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, HOARSENESS, CROUP, BRONCHITIS, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION, AND FOR THE RELIEF OF CONSUMPTIVE PATIENTS IN ADVANCED STAGES OF THE DISEASE.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are the cases of its cures, that almost every section of country abounds in persons publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs by its use. When once tried, its superiority over every other Expectorant is too apparent to escape observation and where its virtues are known the public no longer hesitate what antidote to employ for the distressing and dangerous affections of the pulmonary organs that are incident to our climate. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this having gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.
We can only assure the public, that its quality is carefully kept up to the best it ever has been, and that it may be relied on to do for their relief all that it has ever done.
Great numbers of clergymen, Physicians, Statesmen, and eminent personages, have lent their names to certify the unparalleled usefulness of our remedies, but space here will not permit the insertion of them. The Agents below named furnish gratis our American Almanac in which they are given; with also full descriptions of the complaints they cure.
Those who require an alterative medicine to purify the blood will find Ayer's Compound Extract Sarsaparilla the remedy to use. Try it once, and you will know its value
Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM. San Francisco,
and all Dealers

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.
LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.
RETAIL STORE,
Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

Furniture
AND Bedding!

508, 510, 518 & 528
Washington St.
LARGEST STOCK!
LATEST STYLES!
The Best Workmanship,
LOWEST PRICES!
AT
Goodwin & Co.'s
FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,
Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
SAN FRANCISCO.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE 50 CTS
A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.
PRICE 50 CENTS.
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor Sansome & Commercial streets.
Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicines, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA
YELLOW DOCK
AND IODIDE OF POTASS.
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.
Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla"
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

TIME & LABOR SAVED
BY USING
Standard Soap Company's CELEBRATED
WASHING POWDER.
This Powder is superior to all soaps or compounds for Washing and Cleaning.
It is made of pure material, and contains nothing whatever that will injure the finest fabric Equally as good for Hard or Soft Water. No Soap ever required to be used with it. One pound will make three gallons of beautiful Soft Soap. It is put up in wrappers of one pound each, and in boxes of ten pounds bulk, with Directions. Get a package from your grocer and test its virtue.
Sold by all Grocers. See and get none but STANDARD SOAP CO'S.
MANUFACTURED AT 207 COMMERCIAL STREET,
San Francisco.
☞Standard Soap Company also manufactures superior Pale, Chemical Olive and Detersive Soap, which they sell at the Lowest Market Prices.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware.
Main street, Petaluma.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

THIS COMPANY being no longer bound by the Rates of the Board of Underwriters is now ready to Insure against Loss and Damage by Fire, ON AS REASONABLE TERMS as any other responsible Company.

The Lowest Possible Rates compatible with SAFETY will be charged.

Call at this office before insuring elsewhere.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, President.
B. ROTHCHILD, Secretary.

FIREMAN'S FUND
Insurance Company.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
238 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Capital fully paid in Gold Coin.....$500,000 00
Surplus, April 30, 1866..... 154,824 57

Total Assets.....$654,824 57

REDUCTION IN RATES.

THE TARIFF OF RATES HERETOfore established by the Board of Fire Underwriters being virtually suspended, this Company are prepared to take desirable risks at such Reduced Rates as are consistent with the security of both Insurer and Insured.

D. J. STAPLES,
Vice President.
CHAS. R BOND, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pres't.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

GREAT WESTERN
Life Insurance Company.
OF NEW YORK.

STOCK and MUTUAL

The Security of the Stock Plan, with all the Advantages of the Mutual System.

POLICIES AND DIVIDENDS ARE NON-FORFEITABLE.

Thirty Days Grace for Payment of Premiums.

J. W. BRUMAGIN.
General Agent for California,
Office 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

11 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,
(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Manufacturer and Dealer in
SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,
From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.
Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

RHEUMATISM CAN BE CURED
BY USING
Healy's Rheumatic Liniment,
Which is warranted to cure the most obstinate cases of
CHRONIC OR INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.
It relaxes the muscles, removes the pain, and restores health and vigor to the system.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb 6. 1866.
MR. HEALY—Dear Sir: Having witnessed many cures effected by your Rheumatic Liniment, I take great pleasure in universally recommending it to those in search of a really good article.
Yours, &c., FRANK V. SCUDDER.

MR. FRANK HEALY: I suffered considerable rheumatic pains in both shoulders for a long time. I tried many remedies to get relief, but to no purpose. I was advised to try a bottle of "Healy's Rheumatic Liniment," which I did, and it has greatly relieved me. I am now using the second bottle, and am confident that in a few days I shall be well.
Yours, &c., R. PAGE,
316, Montgomery street.
San Francisco, Feb, 9, 1866.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 13, 1866.
TO F. HEALY: I have heard much and seen practical proofs of your Liniment, and I endorse all you claim for it. L. GOETZ,
335, 337, Pine street.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 12, 1866.
Dear Sir: I have used the bottle of Liniment you sent me, and it has done me good. Please send me another. WM. HORR,
718, Battery street

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT is for sale by all Druggists on the Pacific coast.
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Wholesale Agents, CRANE & BRIGHAM, and R. H. McDONALD & Co., SAN FRANCISCO.

MISS WOODS,
Dress and Cloak Maker,
CORNER OF CLAY AND KEARNY STREETS,
Over Hinckley's Drug Store.

MISS WOODS IS THOROUGHLY ACCOMPLISHED in the business to which she has devoted herself, and has had an experience that has made her completely familiar with all its practical details. For a long period she occupied a position with Mrs. TARBOX & COLLINS, which rendered an accurate acquaintance with the business absolutely indispensible. MISS WOODS is confident as to her ability to give satisfaction to all who will favor her with a trial

MARTIN GROSTETTA,
LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,
Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

DR. FONDA SAN FRANCISCO
EYE INFIRMARY,
PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUsively for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.
P. W. FONDA, M. D.,
Surgeon in charge Infirmary,
223 Kearny street between Bush and Sutter.

PRESERVE YOUR SIGHT.
PERFECT SPECTACLES EXactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minute employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill-suited or common Spectacles.
PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent pre-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.
Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

COME AND SEE ME!
Dr. J. Heald, Dentist,
Corner of Kearny and California streets, (entrance on California street,)
Has reduced his prices for all Dental operations, on account of the dull times, to one-half the usual prices, believing "Live and let live" a good motto.
Best Gum Teeth, set in Goodyear's Patent Rubber, Vulcanized, Full Upper or Lower Sets, $25. Plain Teeth, on the same, Upper or Lower, $15 to $20. Teeth filled with Gold, $2. All other Fillings, $1. Teeth extracted, in a superior manner, only 50 cents
☞ Every style of Dental work done in the best possible manner, and warranted as good as the best done in this city.
N. B.—Persons whose circumstances require a discount from these prices shall have a satisfactory one, so that all may have good Teeth, both ornamental and useful.

FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard
TABLE
MANUFACTORY.
P. LISENFELD,
612 BATTERY STREET,
Between Jackson and Pacific, San Francisco,
Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements.
Also BILLIARD TRIMMING of every description.
☞ All goods sold are warranted.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

LUCY J. PRINCE, Plaintiff, vs. LOUIS M. PRINCE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LOUIS M. PRINCE, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Hon. Court, dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and awarding to Plaintiff the sole custody of Louis Prince, the child of said parties, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this eighth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED]
D. P. BARSTOW, Plaintiff's Attorney. no10-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

CECILE PEBELIE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELIE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelie, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you, by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff be permitted to resume her maiden name, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[L. S.] By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, City and County of San Francisco.—In the Probate Court.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS SMITH, deceased.

Order of Publication on Application for Order of Sale.

On reading and filing the petition of Christian Schrieber, Administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the said Administrator to pay the allowance to the family, the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts.

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court at the Court Room thereof, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 4th day of February 1867, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administratior to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts.

And it is further ordered, that a copy of the foregoing order be published once a week for four weeks, in the CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper published in the city and county aforesaid. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Date l January 2d, 1867. j5 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

In the matter of the Estate of ALFRED RODMAN and ELOISE RODMON, Minors.

It appearing to this Court from the petition this day presented and filed by John C. Merrill, the Guardian of the estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, Minors, praying for an order of sale of the real estate of his said wards, that it would be beneficial to the said wards that such real estate should be sold at private sale.

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said wards, and all persons interested in said estates, appear before this Court at the Court Room thereof at the Court House in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 4th day of February, A. D., 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before said hearing of said petition in the THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
January 2d, 1867.
D. P. BARSTOW, Esq., Attorney for Guardian. j5 5t

ESTATE OF LOUIS McGLAUFLIN, DECEASED.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executrix of the Estate of Louis McGlaulin, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at her residence, No 773 Brannan street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

EMELINE McGLAUFLIN, Executrix.
San Francisco, January 5th, 1867.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Executrix. j5 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF KARL GOTTLIEB WERTH. CHUTZKY, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Karl Gottlieb Werthschutzky, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against, the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his law office, Nos. 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

J. W. BRUMAGIM,
Administrator of the Estate of Karl Gottlieb Werthschutzky, d29 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS W. SUTHERLAND, deceased.

It appearing to the said Court by the petition this day presented and filed by Alexander R. Baldwin, the Administrator of the estate of Thomas W. Sutherland, deceased, praying for an order of sale of Real Estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the Real Estate to pay the charges and expenses of administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 12th day of February A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of said day at the Court room of said Probate Court at the City Hall, in said city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated January 10th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
Of the City and County of San Francisco, }

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true, full and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 10th day of January A. D. 1867

WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHLIN, Deputy Clerk.
J. F. HUTTON, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. j12 5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

RUDOLPH STEINBACH, Plaintiff, vs. JOSEPH L REED, et als, Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, and the complaint filed in the said city and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JOSEPH L REED, CAROLINE L. REED, CHRISTIAN L. LIEN, PETER S. MCNIEL, SARAH J MCNIEL, EDWARD STRODE, NEWELL WINANTS, JOHN C. FRY, JAMES RYAN, S. CLINTON HASTINGS, Administrator of the Estate of Austin E. Smith, deceased, WILLIAM SMITH, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to compel the defendants to set forth the nature of their several claims in and to the lands and premises described in the complaint, and that adverse claims of said defendants may be determined by a decree of this Court, that it be declared and adjudged that the defendants, or either of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said lands or premises, and that they be forever debarred from asserting any claim thereto adverse to plaintiff, and that he is the owner thereof in fee, and for such other and further relief as to equity shall seem meet

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 24th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-six.

Int. Rev. Stamp. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk
Cancelled. 5cts. } By W. R. SATTERLEE, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL]
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. d22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ELIZABETH BARRETT, Plaintiff, vs. CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the sum of $30,000, being the one-half of the common property of the parties, be adjudged to belong to and be delivered to this plaintiff; and that the care, custody and education of the children of the said parties, viz: Cornelius William and Arthur Joseph, be awarded to the plaintiff; and that pending this suit, the defendant may, by order of this Court, be restrained and enjoined from selling, or in any manner disposing of the common property referred to in the complaint—that is to say, $60,000; and that defendant be ordered to pay plaintiff $250 per month for the support of herself and children, and the further sum of $1,000 as attorneys' fees for the prosecution of this action, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[SEAL.] By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
PIXLEY & SMITH, Attorneys for Plaintiff. d29 3m

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of

Asphaltum Work,

Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco.

OSACA JAPAN TEA. A FRESH LOT, IN 5 LB. boxes, just imported, by HASKELL & BUCKELEW,
514 Market street.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE, - - - PROPRIETOR AND MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON, - - - - - TREASURER.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON—
ARRAH-NA-POGUE.

SATURDAY EVENING,.....January 19th, 1867.
Charles Reade's Grand Scenic Drama,
IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND.

George Fielding, - - - George Pauncefort
Thomas Robinson, - - H. Edwards
Mr. Meadows, - - - H. D. Thompson
Josephs, - - - Mrs. Harry Jackson
Haws, - - - - G. Pardey
Peter Crawle, - - - Harry Jackson
William Fielding, - - - C. L. Graves
Susan Merton, - - - Miss Julia Corcoran

MONDAY—Benefit of
MISS JENNIE PARKER.
WEDNESDAY—Benefit of
JAMES LINEN.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:
Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - 25

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Pine street, below Montgomery.

T. MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor and Manager

THE WONDER OF THE AGE.

PROLONGATION OF THE VISIT OF PROF. RISLEY'S IMPERIAL COMPANY OF JAPENESE PERFORMERS.

The Management respectfully announces that owing to IMMENSE CROWDS being unable to obtain admission to see the Greatest Performers ever witnessed in the world, they have been re-engaged, at an enormous expense, and consequently will appear EVERY EVENING, until the departure of the Steamer of the 30th instant.

JAPANESE MATINEE—To-Day, Jan. 19th, at 2 P. M.

Dress Circle and Parquet, $1. Family Circle, 50 cents; Gallery, 25 cents. No extra charge for Reserved Seats.

MASQUERADE BALL!

THE SECOND ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION
MASQUERADE BALL
OF THE ALEMANNIA
Will take place
AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL,
ON
SATURDAY EVENING JAN. 19, 1867.

The Hall will be beautifully decorated by Messrs. A. & T. Torning.
Chris Andres' and the Second Artillery Band have been engaged for Concert and Dance Music.
Spectators' Tickets to be had of the undersigned Committee:
LOUIS HECHT, Jr., 213, 215, 217 Battery street.
S. FROHMAN, corner Jones and Post streets.
ED. GOLDSMITH, 414 Kearny street.
E. S. FREEMAN, 425 Sacramento street.
ALF. E. ECKSTEIN, Lick House.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS.

Art Gallery, Museum,

CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,

On Mission and Valencia streets.

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.
NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.
Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

"SHERMAN'S
March Through Georgia."

ADMISSION, - - - TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

THOS. NAST'S GREAT PAINTING now on Exhibition at the Fine Art Gallery of SNOW & ROOS,
219 Montgomery street, (Russ Block.)

R. A. THOMPSON,
DEALER IN
Coal and Charcoal,

816 and 818 Mission st., near the corner of Fourth,
SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. H. A. BENTON,

The ELECTRO-MAGNETIC PHYSICIAN, is now cosily fixed in his new quarters, over Congress Hall, Bush street, adjoining the Russ House, and is prepared to treat patients in all the best modes of curing. The Electro-Medicated and Hot Air Baths will do wonders in many cases, in breaking up obstructions, and if properly attended afterwards, will insure success.

MRS. G. M. NICHOLS,
FASHIONABLE MILLINERY,
No. 661 Clay street, 2 doors below Kearney,
San Francisco.

Removal.

D. J. OLIVER
Has removed from Washington street, to
HIS NEW BUILDING
ON THE
NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STREETS,
Where he offers for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.
101, 103 and 105 Front street. 110 Pine street.

WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter,
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
735 Market street,
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

WILLIAM BRODIE,
California Foundry,
FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,
San Francisco.
LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS
Of every description, made to order.
Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

W. E. BRIDGE,
BLACK HAWK,
Livery and Sales Stables,
317 PINE STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome, San Francisco.
Carriages, Buggies and Good Saddle Horses for Hire or Sale on the most Reasonable Terms.
Particular attention paid to boarding Horses.

NEW MUSIC STORE.
WAREROOMS OF CHICKERING & SON'S
Piano-Fortes.

MASON & HAMLIN'S
CABINET
ORGANS,
AMERICAN AND FIREIGN
Sheet Music,
VIOLIN AND GUITAR STRINGS,
Musical Instruments and Music Merchandise, Wholesale and Retail, at Lowest Rates.
KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,
421 Montgomery street, next door to A. Roman & Co., San Francisco.

RESIGNATION OF AGENCY
OF THE
PHŒNIX INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF HARTFORD.
San Francisco, January 8th, 1867.
L. B DELL HAS THIS DAY RESIGNED THE LOCAL Agency of the above company, and removed his office to DELL, CRANNA & CO.'S store, 511 1-2 and 513 FRONT STREET, where he is ready to effect insurance in either Home or Foreign companies, and furnish information on insurance matters free of charge. Thanking his friends and patrons for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their patronage in the future.
L. B. DELL, 511 1-2 and 513 Front street.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

RUSSELL & HOLDING'S
EXCHANGE,
622 Market street, between Montgomery and Kearny.
THE FINEST WINES AND LIQUORS ARE dispensed at the Exchange.
All the British Columbia papers on file.
N. B.—A commodious BACK ROOM for the accommodation of customers is one of the feature of the establishment ☞Families supplied, and Goods delivered Free of charge.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,
No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,
Machinist,
Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.
REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

PIANOS!

PIANOS!
AT
AT PRICES FROM $150 TO $600,
AT WALTER S. PIERCE'S PIANO ROOMS, 536 MARKET STREET, opposite Second.
N. B.—The highest cash price paid for Second-hand Pianos.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

A. ROMAN & CO.'S
JANUARY
LIST OF PUBLICATIONS:

The Drytons and the Davenants, by the Author of the "Schonberg Cotta Family."
Poems, by the Author of the "Schonberg Cotta Family."
The Book of Gems—an elegant Gift Book.
The Constitutional Convention, by J. A. Jameson.
Cameron Hall, by the author of the "Little Episcopalian."
Merchant of Berlin, a Historical Novel, by L. Muhlbach.
Bridgeman's American Gardener's Assistant—New Edition.
The Faire Gospeller, by the author of Mary Powell.
The Brewer's Family, by Mrs. Ellis.
The Parlor Stage, Charades and Proverbs, by Miss S. A. Frost.
The Brownings, a Tale of the Great Rebellion.
Palgrave's Essays on Art, 1866.
Tanner's Index of Diseases.
Finette, by Edouard Laboulaye.
A Sketch of the New Route to China and Japan.
The Book of the Hudson, by Benson J. Lossing—Handsomely illustrated. Sold only by subscription.
The Beauclercs—a Novel by Charles Clarke.
Personal Recollections of Distinguished Generals, by Wm. F. G. Shanks.
Archie Lovell—a Novel, by Mrs. Edwards.
Soldiers' Orphans, by Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.
Leslie Goldthwaithe, by Mrs. A. T. D. Whitney, author of "Faith Gartney's Girlhood."
Afloat in the Forest, by Captain Mayne Reid.
London Poems, by Robert Buchanan.
Outpost, by J. C. Austin, author of "Dora Darling."
Children of the Frontier.
Poems, by Alfred B. Street—2 vols., 12mo.
Zander on the Ophthalmoscope.
Opbthalmic Surgery, by J. Z. Lawrence and R. C. Moon.
The Toilet and Cosmetic Art, by Arnold J. Coley.
Lady's Almanac for 1867.
Massachusetts in the Rebellion, by P. C. Headly.—Sold only by subscription.
The Complete Herbalist, by Dr. O. Phelps Brown.
Alger's Doctrine of a Future Life—New Edition.
Race for Wealth—a Novel, by Mrs. J. H. Riddell.
The Sanctuary—a Story of the Civil War, by G. W. Nichols.
Country Quarters, by the Countess Blessington.
Characteristics of Christ's Teaching—J. C. Vaughan.
Poems, by Edgar A. Poe—New Edition, 12mo.
The Hulsean Lectures, by R. C. Trench.
Life of Simon Bolivar, by Dr. Felipe Larrazabal.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
Publishers, Booksellers and Stationers,
417 and 419 Montgomery street.
San Francisco

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.

MISS S. A——'S VALENTINE:

"Take this little flower; take it and think of me!
Think, in the hours of loneliness, of the one who gave it thee;
Place it within thy bosom, let it never be forgot,
But let it whisper oft to thee, "Forget me not."

MISS A. M. C——'S VALENTINE:

"The brightest smiles that ever fell
Are not so dear as thine to me;
And oh! these lines but faintly tell
The love that fills my heart for thee."

TO —— ——:

Think not this gift is idly penn'd
To pass a weary hour away;
Or that the giver in the end
Will in his friendship o'er decay!

'Tis sent in all sincere esteem,
And with the purest heartfelt prayer
That heaven's most endering beam
May guard and shield thee from all care.

MISS MARY B——N'S VALENTINE:

How dear the dream
In distant hour of ill,
Should all be changed,
To find the faithful still.

ST. VALENTINE'S ADVICE.

To the unmarried of the nation,
As they would avoid the mortification,
And shun the appellation
Of old maids and old bachelors in this generation,
To make direct application,
Without any flirtation,
To APPLETON'S station,
Where VALENTINE holds his oblation,
For an appropriate commendation,
Which will afford a gratification,
In the highest acceptation,
And be a sufficient remuneration
For the money spent on the occasion,
From the smallest to the greatest valuation.

VALENTINES in extra fine French Boxes—also in solid Rosewood and Mahogany cases. Sold with or without jewelry.
VALENTINES of every conceivable variety; Valentine Cards, Valentine Mottoes and Stationery.
THIRTY New and Original California Comics.
COMICS.....5 cents.
VALENTINE WRITERS, Comic and Sentimental.
APPLETON'S VALENTINE EXPRESS,
With ten Horses, will deliver Valentines every hour of Valentine's Day in every part of the city.
D. E. APPLETON & CO.,
508 Montgomery street.

CRANBERRY PRESERVES, 35 CENTS PER CAN, or three cans for $1, at HASKELL & BUCKELEW'S.

John Middleton & Son,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL AUCTIONEERS,
Office and Salesroom,
No. 404 Montgomery street, one door north of Sacramento.

LARGE AND IMPORTANT REDIT SALE
OF
HOMESTEAD LOTS!
AT AUCTION

MONDAY.....January 21st, 1867.
AT 12 O'CLOCK, NOON,
AT SALESROOM, 404 MONTGOMERY STREET,
BLOCKS 86 AND 111,
IN THE TREAT TRACT,
Bounded by
UTAH, NEBRASKA, VERMONT, YOLO AND PARK STREETS.

We will sell the above two Blocks—subdivided into 64 Building Lots, each 25 by 100 feet.
☞Special attention is called to these Lots, as their superior location and convenience of access render them peculiarly desirable for HOMESTEAD PURCHASERS. They lay high, and on good grade: the macadamized road to Bay View Park runs along Vermont and Park streets. A diagram, showing the subdivisions of the Blocks, will be found on the premises, which are fully posted. Maps of the property will be ready for distribution at our office in a few days.
The two Blocks are fenced.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUdicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.
Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovenamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.
The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and be put into possession, and for general relief.
And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.
Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.
Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j19 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDIcial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.
Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.
The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.
You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.
The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.
And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.
Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.
WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

DR. HAYDEN,
Dentist,
653 Clay street, between Kearny and Montgomery,
San Francisco.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 10
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 26, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

The Dykehambury Coocert, a story; The Advaotage of Se f-sufficiency; Eruptiou of Vesuvius iu 1631; "Black Sheep;" Kilauea, and a Christmas Roast; Strect Crossings; Worthless Fellows, by Prentice; Muscle and Brains; "Liou's Mouth;" Boiy Snatching; Our San Francisco Police Force; A Snub for the "Times;" Amusements, Poetry, Sketches, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"The gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is ao oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me" A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I will aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightiugale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO

Body Snatching.

THE Bulletin and Call ure agitating the Cemetery question; the former is anxious that the city should set apart a tract of land as a Cemetery, and break up the Lone Mountain Cemetery Company. It thus expresses its wish:—

"What the Bulletin desires, is, that the Board of Supervisors shall condemn Lone Mountain Cemetery for public purposes, and that the Cemetery shall remain, the monuments and graves to be protected for the future. It is by no means the wish of the public to see the Cemetery encroached upon; but if it be found necessary hereafter to establish other burying grounds when the city shall increase in population, it is their desire that the present Cemetery shall be protected from the rapacity of private claimants. Large numbers of persons who have deposited the remains of their friends in Lone Mountain Cemetery have no title whatever to the land, and it is possible for the present claimants, should the Cemetery continue in their hands, to use the ground over and over again."

The Call declares that when once the city has reclaimed the land at present used as a Cemetery by the Lone Mountain Company, the dead will very shortly have to make room for the living. It says:

"We know that thousands of people have purchased and paid for burial lots in the Cemeteries, and have their deeds for them, and that the laws of the State guarantee to them and their heirs, forever, the right to th se lots We therefore oppose the attempts of the ghouls, led on by the Bulletin, to take possessiou of and squat upon these homes of the dead."

The popular sentiment is in any event, whether the Lone Mountain Cemetery Company he dispossessed or not of this tract of land, in favor of allowing the bodies already deposited therein, to remain there undisturbed. Should the city reclaim its grant of this land for a Cemetery, there may he cause for fear that it may then proceed to order the removal of the bodies buried there to its new Cemetery. It is undoubtedly as well that all bodies should he buried "without the camp," but when a Cemetery becomes surrounded by dwellings, the public interests do not demand that the corpses of the ancestors of those who inhabit the new town which has been built round the city of the dead, shall he carted off to some spot remote from human habitations. It was no pleasant sight which was presented about a year ago, when piles of dead men's bones were built up in Yerba Buena Cemetery, ready for removal, and packing cases filled with sculls, stood awaiting claimants. The City of San Francisco is too old to allow a repetition of this scene, and too young to have much need for fear that the spacious burial ground at Lone Mountain will become dangerous to the health of its inhabitants. We fancy that most of those who witnessed the process of the removal of human remains from Yerba Buena Cemetery, were fain to wish that incremation were in vogue amongst us in place of sepulture. Many years are required to resolve the human organization into its original elements; Mother Earth devours her children slowly with the calm deliberation of a gourmet. No doubt in these days, and in the new countries, the process of incremation might he attended with many disadvantages; not everyone could have a grand funeral pyre decked with costly trappings, piled with sweet resinous gums which diffuse their fragrance, as the greedy flames devoured the useless body which we of modern days commit to the earth. Not everyone could afford a beautiful casket in which to preserve the ashes of his departed father, mother, daughter, brother or friend. No; in these days incremation might prove even more expensive than a ten or twelve years lease of a lot of ground seven feet hy four. Fuel is high in price: there might occur cases, in which all the grandeur of the ceremony would he destroyed by the use of Mount Diablo coal, from motives of economy hy the survivors of the deceased. Incremation would never become popular. The rich might practise it, hut the pauper hodies would too often be subjected to the low und brutul process of incremation by the action of quicklime. As we must have Cemeteries, let the grave be indeed "the last long home" of the dead, and whether the land used as a Cemetery at Lone Mountain remain in the hands of the Company to whom the City granted it, or revert to the City—let the public look to it, let them declare that though the City may serve a notice of ejectment on the live men composing the Company, no action of theirs shall he allowed to turn the dead out of their garves. Let the dead rest.

Song of the Frog.

(BY ONE OF 'EM.)

"Can you tell me why the poet,
Singing ever Nature's praise
To the "songsters of the marshes"
Never dedicates his lays?
Though we are the first to welcome
In the bright and sunny spring,
Making at the hour of twilight
Every marsh and meadow ring;
Vieing with the chirpiog cricket
And the plaintive whippoorwill
Till the evening reaches midnight
And the earth and air are still.
Though at first but tiny tadpoles,
Wriggling creatures weak and frail,
Sporting in a shallow mud pool,
Glorying in an inch of tail,
All unconscious of our greatness
And our future high career,
Yet we wake at last some morning
Pregnant with a great idea;
That we are most surely destined
To assume a higher form,
That the spirit of the tadpole
Shall the nobler frog adorn.
Lo! the inch of tail decreases,
Slowly vanishes away;
Lo! the tadpole of last evening
Is the full formed frog to-day.
Solve the mystery ye whose reason,
All the depths of being scan,
Ye who swear that from the monkey
Sprang the high born race of man!
'Tis the simplest of proportions,
You can solve it like a damn,
As the frog is to the tadpole,
So to monkey is the man
Sing our praises now ye poets,
Couple us with bird and lamb,
Raise us from our muddy precincts
By your glorying psalm."
'Twas while wandering late one evening
By a frog pond in a bog,
That I heard thes wondrous sayings
Of a transcendental frog.

Editorial Jealousy.

The Banner of Progress, a Spiritual paper published in this city by Benjamin Todd and W. H. Manning, and having for its editors Benjamin Todd and W. H. Manning appears to he unhappily conducted. It was arranged at the very commencement of this enterprise that the publishers should be coequal, receiving the profit or sustaining the loss attendent on it, hut that each of the editors should receive the amount of glory or shame attached to his own particular editorials. To this end it was arranged that Editor Todd should attach to each of his editorials the letter "T," and Editor Manning should affix to his the letter "M." This worked very well for two weeks, but the latest issue of the Banner of Progress proves that there is divisiou in the house of Todd and Manning. Todd's forte is tonge, Manning's is type. The latter has control of the type, hence the difficulty which appears to have arisen. This is one of the editorials which appeared in the last issue:

"Persons wishing the best pictures to he obtained in the city should go to—He succeeded in taking the most correct, and at the same time the best-looking shadow of our homely face, of any urtist that we ever tried." T

We are sorry to see this sort of thing going on. We are sure that it was M. whose homely face was taken by Mr. ———. T. is a remarkably good looking man, while M., though very homely, could never summon courage enough to confess it in print. We are sure that when T. saw that paragraph, M.'s face was immediately rendered still more unprepossessing in its appearance by a violent and spasmodic motion of T.'s fist in the direction of the aforesaid face. This comes of editors signing their editorials with their initials. The impersonal mode of conducting a paper, is by far the best.

An Original and Brilliant Scheme.

The young man who does the heavy department of the Times proposes a plan at once original, brilliant and eminently practicable, by which Jews and Christians are to be made to observe a common Sabbath. It is this: "Let a Jew and a Christian set out from the city of David for this goodly city, one traveling east and the other west, each conscientiously keeping his own day," and, to cut short a long story, when they arrive here they will find that both observe the same day as Sabbath. So far as those two men were concerned the thing would be settled. In order to carry out the plan fully, it would only be necessary for all our citizens to make the proposed trip, and for Almanac-makers to arrange it so that the week shall begin and end on the same day. N. B.—Seventh-day Baptists will travel with the Jews. Irreligious people need not apply.

A Snub for the "Times."

The Times, this week, expressed its virtuous horror at the fact that newspapers published the details of crimes and immoral actions. It declared that much harm was caused hy such pandering to the morbid appetite of the public, for such relations. The Bulletin, two days after the appearance of this strictly moral article in the young, weakly and too evidently declining Times, published among its details of Eastern news, received by Overland Telegraph, "Violent deaths in New York—A Fearful Record;" "Suicide of Capt Robert G. Wells;" "Attempted murder in Philadelphia hy a Brother;" "Fearful Accident—One man killed and three others severely injured." "Frightful Affair at Stephen's Port, Ky.;" "The Hub convulsed with Horror" (on account of a box containing three dead bodies, two with their throats cut, having been shipped as merchandise); "Horrible murder of a young girl in New Orleans"—accounts of the kidnapping of two girls, the burning of two steamers, and other horrible events which, in the opinion of the Times, should be entirely suppressed hy first class papers. The public greedily devoured this dish of horrors and were not much the worse for it. The Flag, in its last days, became religious and published full reports of the sermons preached at the different churches in this city—but it died, Let us hope, however, that its death-bed penitence was of some avail. The Times is becoming strictly moral—even more moral than mercantile—and now cries O! tempora, O! mores. O! Times, the public know your tricks and your manners.

Our San Francisco Police Force.

The London policemen would gnash their teeth with envy did they know of the superior privileges enjoyed hy our San Francisco policeman. The poor London "peelers" are simply known to fame as "A, 1" "X 3" "B, 15" and so on, and unless in the case of an extensive burglary or terrible murder the perpetrators of which they have been engaged in apprehending seldom receive honorable mention, or any mention at all in the public prints. In San Francisco we see elaborate accounts in the local columns of the daily press of the elaborate strategy evinced by that "active officer Mr. Limon," Simpkins in his capture of Ah How, who stole a chicken. If a vagrant is arrested the name of the officer who made the arrest is published. We are inclined to believe that the local reporters of the Press parade the names of the members of the police force in print as a return for "items" furnished them. One local policeman last week rushed his name into print hy arresting poor old Emperor Norton as a lunatic, and was very properly snubbed by his Chief for his officiousness. If the present Chief of Police, who seems inclined to fulfill the duties of his office in a quiet unostentatious manner, were to put a stop to this system of advertising the wonderful captures effected hy his subordinates, by adopting the numeral system and forbidding them to make use of the private names, he would accomplish a much-needed reform. The private soldier whose name appeared in the newspapers during the war—save in list of killed or wounded, had generally done something to entitle him to this honor. The pay received hy the members of the Police force should serve as sufficient encouragement for them to perform their duty, and until one of them was killed or wounded in the service of the city his name should not he blazoned forth in the public prints.

From Our Insane Contributor.

OUR insane contributor furnishes us with the following item, which we give to our readers for what it is worth:

A young friend of mine just graduated from a country school, who is now in the city negotiating an engagement as editor of the Times, desired me to inform him how the term "Bohemian" came to be applied to the better class of literary men. I promised to investigate the subject, and communicate the result of my researches to your invaluable paper. I find that the facts are these: In the seventeenth century the wits and authors of London used to meet on stated evenings at a popular restaurant known as Will's Coffee House. They were pious and sober men, und on these social occasions indulged only in tea, which one of them has celebrated as "the cup that cheers but not inebriates," and another, in some Anacreontic verses, as "the poet's friend." Their favorite brand was Bohea, and this circumstance gave rise to a witticism of Addison's, who one evening, on the company ordering a fourth cup all around, remarked that "they were all Bohemians." At first the party couldn't see it, and sat silent and gloomy until Mr. Addison, who had acquired some knowledge of geography when a boy (he wouldn't suit for a writer on the Times), explained; whereupon Mr. Dryden graciously remarked that "it was a very pleasant jest," and the company laughed heartily. Since that time writers of decided genius have been known as "Bohemians."

Couldn't Understand It.

When the curtain fell on the first part of the Japanese performance at the Academy of Music on Thursday evening last, a soldier in the second tier, who had evidently become disgusted with the unintelligible volubility of the managerial Jap., turned to his companion and said: "D—n this performance, I can't understand a word of it. Let us go around to the Opera House, where we will hear something we can understand. We will be in time for the last three acts, anyhow." And they went. The Siege of Lucknow, played at the Opera House, being a military drama, and therefore in our hero's line, he probably understood it without difficulty.

THINKING.

THROUGH the clouds of gold and purple,
Slow the sun is sinking;
Fetlock deep within the river,
Stand the cattle—drinking;
On the bridge above the mill-stream,
Rests a maiden—thinking.

Nut-brown hair that mocks the sunset,
With its golden gleaming;
Hands above her pitcher folded,
with the graceful seeming
Of an antique sculptured Naiad,
By a fountain dreaming.

As a tender thought had swayed her,
O'er the stream she's leaning,
While her red lips curve and quiver
With a sudden meaning,
And a quick nod shakes her ringlets,
All her features screening.

For there comes a sound of laughter,
And a merry cheering,
And the cattle turn their faces
To a step that's nearing—
And she waits for words low spoken,
In a tone endearing.

Low behind the western tree-tops
Now the sun is sinking;
Toward the bridge the weary cattle
Turn themselves from drinking—
Ah! they never guessed as I did,
What the maid was thinking.

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK II.

CHAPTER IX.—(Continued.)

CLEARED UP.

THEN George seated his old friend close beside him, and told her the whole story of his intercourse with Stewart Routh, of his knowledge of Deane, his last meeting with him, their dinner together, adjournment to the billiard-rooms, the money won by Dallas from Deane, and his leaving town early the next morning for Amherst.

"That was the day they found the body, was it not?" asked Mrs Brookes.

"Let me see," said George; and he again referred to the newspapers.

"Yes, it was on Friday, the eighteenth—in the evening. I was down at Amherst then.

Mrs. Brookes questioned George concerning Routh and and his wife, and told him of Harriet's visit, and all the emotion and fear which it had caused her. George was touched and grateful.

"That was like her," he said; "she is the truest of friends, a treasure among women. I wonder she did not write to me, though, when she sent on Mr. Carruthers' letter."

The observation passed unnoticed by Mrs. Brookes. Had she asked when the letter had reached George, a discovery, dangerous to the interests of Harriet and Routh, might have been made; but she had very dim notions of continental places and distances, and the time consumed in postal transmission.

"They knew this poor man; did they not know that he was the murdered person?"

"No," said George, "they had no notion of it. How shocked they will be when I tell them of it! Routh will be the best person in the world to tell me how to go about communicating with the police authorities. But now, Ellen, tell me all about my mother."

Time went over, and the night fell, and the old woman and the young man still talked together, and she tried to comfort him, and make him believe that all would be well. But George was slow to take such comfort—full of remorse and self-condemnation, of gloom and foreboding. The mercurial temperament of the young man made him a bad subject for such suspense and self-reproach, and though he had no shadow of fear of any trouble to come to him from the evidence on the inquest, there was a dull brooding sense of apprehension over him, against which he had no power, no heart to strive. So he listened to the story of his mother's illness and departure, the physicians' opinions, and Mr. Carruthers' plans for her benefit and comfort, and darker and darker fell the shadow upon his heart.

"We have had no news since they left Paris," said Mrs. Brookes, in conclusion, "but I expect to see Miss Carruthers to-morrow. She will have a letter from her uncle."

"Miss Carruthers!" said George, lifting up his head with renewed animation. "Has she not gone abroad with them?"

"No," said Mrs. Brookes; "she is staying at the Sycamores, Sir Thomas Boldero's place. Sir Thomas is her uncle on the mother's side. She rides over very often to see me, and I expect her to-morrow."

"At what hour does she generally come?" asked George.

"In the afternoon; after lunch."

"Well, I shall be in London by that time, nurse; so there is no danger of my incurring my step-father's wrath this time by an encounter with the heiress."

There was a momentary touch of bitterness in George's voice, but his slow, sad smile contradicted it.

"Ah, George!" said the old woman. "Take heart. All will be well, and the time will come when you will be welcome here."

"Perhaps so, nurse. In the mean time, you will let me know what news Miss Carruthers brings, and especially where my mother is, and their next move."

That night George Dallas slept for the first time under the roof of the old house at Poynings; but an early hour in the morning found him on his way back to town.

When Clare Carruthers, mounted on Sir Lancelot, arrived at Poynings, on the following afternoon, she was surprised to find Mrs. Brookes looking well and cheerful. The girl had brought good news. Mrs. Carruthers had borne the journey well, and it was proposed that she should leave Paris and proceed to the south of France after the interval of a week. Clare roamed over the house and gardens as usual. She was beautiful as ever, but with a new and graver beauty than of old. There was no observant eye to mark the change, no kindred spirit to note and share the girl's trouble. She was quite alone. When she returned from her ramble, and while her horse was being brought round, she went to Mrs. Brookes room to bid her good-bye. The old woman took two letters out of her desk, and said:

"Do you remember these letters, Miss Carruthers? You brought them to me when Mrs. Carruthers was first taken ill."

"Yes, I remember. What of them?" Clare answered, carelessly.

"Will you have the kindness to inclose them in a large envelope, and direct them to Mr. George Dallas for me?"

"Certainly," said Clare; but she looked a little surprised, for Mrs. Brookes wrote remarkably well for a person of her class.

"I wrote to him lately," said Mrs. Brookes, "and the letter did not reach him; so I suppose I directed it indistinctly."

Clare sat down at the table, and in a large, bold hand wrote the address which Harriet had given upon the envelope.

"You are sending Mr. Dallas these letters that he may read them, as his mother is unable?" asked Clare, to whom the forbidden subject of Mrs. Carruthers' son always offered more or less temptation.

"Yes, ma'am," replied the old woman; "I am pretty sure they come from Mr. Felton, and ought to be seen to."

"And who is Mr. Felton?" said Clare, rising and laying down her pen. "I'll post them as I pass through the village," she added.

"Mr. Felton is Mrs. Carruthers' brother," said Mrs. Brookes. "He has been in America many years, but she said something lately about his coming home."

Clare said no more, but took her leave, and went her way. She posted the packet for George Dallas at the village, and, as she rode on, her fair face bore the impress of a painful recollection. She was thinking of the morning on which she had ventured to send the warning to him who was so unworthy of the fancies she had cherished—him of whom she could not think without a shudder, of whom she hardly dared to think at all. When the post was delivered the following morning at the Sycamores, a large packet was placed before Miss Carruthers. It was directed to her, and contained two numbers of The Piccadilly, with two instalments of George's serial story, and on the fly leaf of one were the words, "From Paul Ward."

CHAPTER X.

ONCE MORE TIDED OVER.

AN air of respectability and the presence of good taste characterised the house in Queen street, Mayfair, now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Routh. These things were inseparable from a dwelling of Harriet's. She had the peculiar feminine talent for embellishing the place she lived in, however simple and small were the means at her disposal. The lodgings at South Molton street had never had the comfortless look and feeling of lodgings, and now there was apparently no lack of money to make the new home all that a house of its size and capabilities need be. Harriet moved about her present dwelling, not as she had moved about her former home, indeed, with happy alacrity, but with the same present judgment, the same critical eye; and though all she did now was done mechanically, it was done thoroughly.

Harriet was very restless on the day that was to bring George Dallas to their new residence. She had duly received his message from Jim Swain, and though the keen eye of the boy, who was singularly observant of her in every particular that came under his notice, had detected that the intelligence imparted a shock to her, she had preserved her composure wonderfully, in conveying the unwelcome news to her husband. Routh had received it with far less calmness. He felt in a moment that the delay of Harriet's projected letter, a delay prescribed by himself, had induced the return of Dallas, and, angry with himself for the blunder, he was angry with her that she had not foreseen the risk. He was often angry with Harriet now; a strange kind of dislike to her arose frequently in his base and ungrateful heart, and the old relations between them had undergone a change, unavowed by either, but felt keenly by both. The strength of character on which Routh knew he could rely to any extent, which he knew would never fail him or its owner, made him strangely afraid, in the midst of all the confidence it inspired, and he was constrained in his wife's presence, and haunted out of it.

Stewart Routh had never been a rough-spoken man; the early tradition of his education had preserved him from the external coarseness of a vagabond life, but the underlying influences of an evil temper asserted themselves at times. Thus when Harriet told him gently, and with her blue eyes bright with reassuring encouragement, that Dallas was in England, and would be with them on the morrow, he turned upon her with an angry oath. She shrank back from him for a moment, but the next, she said, gently:

"We must meet this, Stewart, like all the rest, and it can be done."

"How?" he said, rudely; "how is it to be met?"

"I will meet it, Stewart," she replied. "Trust me; you have often done so, and never had cause to regret the consequence. I am changed, I know. I have not so much quickness and readiness as I had, but I have no less courage. Remember what my influence over George Dallas was; it is still unchanged; let me use it to the utmost of my ability. If it fails, why then," she spoke very slowly, and leaned her hand heavily on his shoulder with the words, "then we have but to do what I at least have always contemplated."

Their eyes met, and they looked steadily at each other for some moments; then withdrawing his gaze from her with difficulty, Routh said, sullenly, "Very well, let it be so; you must see him first; but I suppose I shall have to see him; I can't escape that, can I?"

She looked at him with a queer glance for a moment, and the shadow of a smile just flickered over her lips. Could he escape? That was his thought, his question. Did she ever ask it for herself? But the impression, irresistible to the woman's keen perception, was only momentary. She answered the base query instantly.

"No, you cannot; the thing is impossible. But I will see him first, and alone; then if I succeed with him, no risk can come of your seeing him; if I fail, the danger must be faced."

He turned sulkily away, and leaned upon the window-frame, looking idly into the street.

"You don't know when he will be here, I suppose?" he said, presently.

"I do not; but I fancy early in the day."

"It's too bad. I am sick of this. The thing is over now Why is it always cropping up?"

He spoke to himself rather than to her; but she heard him, and the color flew over her pale face at his words. He left the room soon after, and then Harriet sat down in the weary way that had become habitual to her, and murmured:

"It is done and over; and he wonders why it is always cropping up. And I—"

Stewart Routh did not return home until late that night. Such absences had become common now, and Harriet made no comment then or ever. How she passed the hours of solitude he did not inquire, and, indeed, she could hardly have told. On this particular evening she had employed herself on the close and attentive perusal of a number of letters. They were all written by George Dallas, and comprised the whole of his correspondence with her. She read them with attentive eye and knitted brow; and when she locked the packet up in her desk again, she looked, as Mrs. Brookes had seen her, like a woman who had a purpose, and who clearly saw her way to its fulfilment.

But the next day Harriet was restless. She could do the thing that lay before her, but she wanted the time for doing it to come; she wanted to get it over. If this were weakness, then in this Harriet was weak.

Immediately after breakfast, Stewart Routh went out. Only a few words had been exchanged between him and Harriet on the subject of George's expected visit, and Harriet had gone to the drawing-room when George came. She met him with the old frank welcome which he remembered so well, and, in answer to his inquiry for Routh, said she was momentarily expecting him.

"You know what brought me back to England," George said, when he was seated, and the first greeting was over; "you got my message?"

"That bad news had reached you. Yes," replied Harriet. "I was just about to write to you. You would have had my letter to-day. I learned from the newspapers that your mother was ill, and—"

"And went to see about it for me. I know all your goodness, Mrs. Routh, and can never thank you for it half enough It is only of a piece, though, with all your goodness to me.

You have always been the best and truest of friends. My old nurse told me all about your visit. God bless you, Mrs. Routh." And George Dallas took her hand, and, for the second time in his life, kissed it.

There was a pause, a dangerous pause. Harriet felt it, for her heart was beating thickly, and her face was not under such command but that the interested eyes which were looking into it might read the traces of a deep and painful emotion.

"You have been comforted by your visit to Poynings," she said. "You have more hope and relief about your mother? Mrs. Brookes has told you all particulars."

"Yes, Mrs. Routh, I did hear all the particulars, and I also made an extraordinary and terrible discovery in connection with that illness."

"Indeed!" said Harriet, leaning towards him with the liveliest interest and concern in every feature of her face. "It is not that the illness is of a hopeless nature, I hope?"

"I trust not," he said, solemnly; "but, Mrs. Routh, my mother has been nearly killed by being obliged to suspect me of a dreadful crime."

"A dreadful crime! You, Mr. Dallas! What do you mean?"

"I mean," said Dallas, "that a murder has been committed, in which I would appear to have been implicated. I know what I am about to tell you will agitate and distress you, Mrs. Routh, and one of the most mysterious points of a mysterious subject is, that it should be my lot to tell it to you." He hesitated, then went on: "I don't know whether I ought to tell you all that I have heard. I have to consult Routh on some important matters, so that it is the more unfortunate that he is out of the way, as no time must be lost in what I have to do."

The occasion had come now, and Harriet was equal to it. It was with a smile, serious but quite unembarrassed, that she said:

"Don't depose me from the position of your confidant, George." She called him by his christian name for the first time. "You know Stewart has no secret from me. Whatever you would tell to him, tell to me. I have more time at your disposal than he has, though not more friendship. In this matter, count us as one. Indeed," she added, with a very skillful assumption of playfulness, which did not, however, alter the gravity of George's manner, "as I am your correspondent, I claim precedence by prescriptive right."

"I hardly knew how to tell you, Mrs. Routh; all the circumstances are so shocking, and so very, very strange. You and Routh have been rather surprised, have you not, by the sudden disappearance of Deane? Routh always thought him an odd, eccentric unaccountable sort of fellow, coming nobody knew whence, and likely to go nobody knew whither; but yet it has surprised you and Routh a little that, since the day we were to have dined together in the Strand, Deane has never turned up, hasn't it?"

The strength and self-contol which formed such striking features in Harriet's character were severely tried, almost beyond their limits, by the expectation of the revelation which George was about to make; but there was not a questioning tone in her voice, not a quiver on her lip, as the minutes passed by, while she won him more and more securely by her calm interest and friendliness. His growing anxiety to see Routh confirmed her in the belief that he knew all that his mother and Mrs. Brookes had known. Remembering the agony she had suffered when she and George had last talked together, and feeling that the present crisis was scarcely less momentous, she rallied all her powers—and they were considerable—and asked him boldly what it was he had to communicate to her. In a voice of the deepest solemnity, he said, taking her hand in his:

"The man who has been murdered, of whose murder my mother was led to suspect me, was Philip Deane!"

"Good God!" cried Harriet, and shrank back in her chair; covering her face with her hands.

He had reason to say that the news he had to tell her would agitate and distress her. Her whole frame crept and trembled, and a chill moisture broke out on her smooth forehead and pale shivering cheeks. George was alarmed at her distress, and she knew by the intensity of her emotion, now that the words she had been expecting were spoken, how much her nervous system had suffered in the long struggle she had fought out with such success. He tried to calm her, and loved and admired her all the more for her keen womanly feeling.

"Horrible, most horrible!" she murmured, her eyes still hidden in her shaking hands. "But how do you know? Tell me all you know."

Then George told her without omission or reservation. She listened eagerly, greedily, and as the narrative proceeded she became quite calm. George dwelt on his astonishment that Routh had not made the discovery which had forced itself upon him, but Harriet disposed of that part of the matter in a moment.

"You forget," she said, "he was not in London. When you came to me, on your return from Amherst, do you not remember I told you Stewart was away, hiding from his creditors, poor fellow? He never heard of the murder very likely; he never interests himself in such horrors. Indeed, he never mentioned anything about it to me, and of course he must have known at once that the man was Deane. The very name of the tavern in the Strand where he was to have dined himself, would have suggested the idea."

"Precisely so," said George; "that was the thing which puzzled me so completely, and made me anxious to see him."

"The strangeness of the coincidence," said Harriet, "is as remarkable as the event is horrible. It only proves how mistaken are our notions of the laws of chance. What could be more wildly improbable than that, living in the midst of London, and within constant reach of the talk and speculation about it, Stewart and I should have known nothing of the matter?"

"Very extraordinary indeed," said George; "one of those facts which would be denounced as too unnatural, if they were told in fiction. And how unfortunate! What a terrible mystery Routh might have cleared up!"

"And yet," Harriet replied, with a furtive glance at Dallas, full of keen and searching expression, "what could he have told, beyond the fact that he had known the man under the name of Deane? After all, it comes to that, and to no more, doesn't it?"

"To no more, my dear Mrs. Routh? To a great deal more. When we tell the police what we know, there will be not only an identification of the body, but an explanation of the motive."

"I don't quite understand you," said Harriet; and as she spoke, there came a click in her throat, as there had come when she and George Dallas had last spoken together.

Would it ever be over? Should her purpose ever be gained?

"Don't you?" said George, surprised, "and you so quick, too. But no wonder you are upset by this; it is so dreadful when one has known the person, is it not? But you will see in a moment that our being able to depose to the large sum of money and the jewels in the poor fellow's possession will make the motive quite plain. They have got a notion now that he was a foreigner, and that the motive was political, whereas it was of course simply a robbery. He resisted, I suppose, and was killed in the scuffle."

"Does the report read like that?" asked Harriet, faintly.

"It simply says he was stabbed," said George; "but it is plain that all the newspapers took up the political murder notion at once, and then, of course, their reports would be made to fit their theory. No doubt some ruffian did it who knew that he had a large sum about him that day. Very likely he had been traced from the city; he had been there to get some securities. I can swear to his having told me that, at all events. How very ill you look, Mrs. Routh. This ghastly story has been too much for you. I don't think you ever liked poor Deane, but no one could know of a man's coming to such an untimely end, if he was ever such a bad fellow, and not feel it, especially you. I wish I had not said anything. It would have been better for Routh to have told you this."

"No, no," said Harriet. "Indeed it is better that I should hear it from you, and you are mistaken in supposing I am so much overcome entirely on account of—on account of——"

"The murder? Yes?" asked George, looking anxiously at her.

"It is all dreadful; no one in the world can feel it to be more dreadful than I do," said Harriet, earnestly.

As she spoke she rose from her chair, pushed her hair off her forehead, and began to walk slowly up and down the room. George sat still, following her with his eyes, and noting, in all his excitement and perturbation of spirit, the change which a few weeks had made in her appearance.

"I am grieved and troubled for you, and I think more of them."

"For me, Mrs. Routh? What can happen for me in this matter that has not already happened? My mother has suffered all she can suffer. Time may or may not restore her. Surely the follies and sins of my life have been heavily punished. Nothing can undo all this misery; but nothing can be added to it either. I have only to set the mystery at rest."

"Take care, George," said Harriet, earnestly; "I am not sure of that. Let us look at the case in all its bearings. Nothing that you have to tell can contradict the evidence given at the inquest, and which directs suspicion against you. You did dine with this wretched man; you did wear the coat to which the waiter swears."

"Ah, by-the-by," said George, "that was the coat I left at your house. Where is it, Mrs. Routh? It must be produced, of course."

He did not yet perceive that she was trying to shake his determination; but she answered his question with wonderful carelessness. "The coat; oh yes, I remember. You wrote to me about it. It must be here, of course, unless it has been lost in the flitting from South Molton street. He tells me a lot of his things have gone astray."

"Well," said George, "that's easily found out. Pray go on, Mrs. Routh. You were saying——"

"I was saying, George, that when you put together all the strange coincidences in this matter which led, naturally, it must be said, to such a conclusion as that the man who wore the coat which you bought at Amherst is the criminal whom the police want to arrest—I think you would find it very difficult to prove that you are not the man!"

"Good God! You are not serious," cried George.

"I am perfectly serious," she answered. "How can you prove it? How do I, at this moment, know in a manner which I could demonstrate to legal satisfaction that you are not the man who did the deed?

George looked at her in astonishment.

"Of course I do know it—that is, I believe it, which is quite a different thing; but supposing I do not believe it, supposing my mind were made up about it, how would you propose to prove it to me? Tell me that, and then the strength of my argument, the value of my advice, will become evident to you, I think."

Still George looked at her, and his color rose. He was unaccountably embarrassed by the question. The whole thing had appeared to him as simple for him as it was terrible for Deane, when Harriet began to speak. It bore a very different aspect now.

"I—I should prove that I parted with Deane, that night, at the door of the billiard-rooms where we had been playing."

"Outside the door or inside, before witnesses or alone?" interrupted Harriet.

"Why, it certainly was outside the door, and we were alone."

"Exactly. Then your having parted with him that night is just what you cannot prove; and as you cannot prove that, you can prove nothing. Let me repeat to you your own account of that night's proceedings, and you will see that you can prove nothing to outweigh the presumptive evidence against you. You told me this wretched man had money about him which he boasted of; therefore, you knew he was a rich prey. You had no money—only a few shillings at least; you went to your lodgings that night, and left them without notice on the following morning, having paid your landlady with a ten pound note that had been in this man's possession. How can you account for that? You went to Amherst, where you remained, alone, under a feigned name, for four days; you returned to London, where, it can be proved, the occurrence was, at the time, a topic of general discussion, late at night. You went abroad the following morning, and at Amsterdam you offered certain valuable diamonds for sale. The diamonds are your mother's, you say, and formed part of a bracelet given to you by her."

"No, no," said George; "I never would explain that under any circumstances."

Harriet smiled, but the steadfast earnestness of her manner was not lessened by the smile, which was just a little contemptuous.

"That is precisely what you would be forced to explain," she contined. "Certain diamond ornaments were among the articles in the possession of the murdered man, says the newspaper report," she pointed to the passage with a steady hand. He read it, and listened in silence, his face grave and anxious.

"You must account for the diamonds which you sold at Amsterdam; how are you to prove, otherwise, that they are not those the wretched man wore when he was seen in your company?"

"I remember his studs and his ring," said George, in a low, agitated voice. "I wonder they have not been traced."

Harriet did not reply for a moment; and the click in her throat was painfully hard and audable, as she said at length:

"They would have been broken up, of course: and remember, George, they were unset diamonds you sold at Amsterdam."

George Dallas leaned his elbows on the table, and his head on his hands. He looked at Harriet, and her face changed when his gaze was removed—changed to a look of sharp, terrible anxiety, to all the intentness of one pleading in a desperate cause.

"You must tell the story of your visit to Amherst: you must tell the truth about your mother and the jewels; moreover, you must prove it. Can your mother do that for you?"

"No," said George, drearily; "but my old nurse can."

"How? Did she see you on the Friday, when you arrived at Amherst? Did she see you at all until the Monday? Could she swear you were at Amherst in the interval? And, supposing she could, what would it avail? Look here, George, this man's body was found on Friday evening, the eighteenth of April, and the presumption is that it had been a night and a day in the river. Do you see what this means?" She put her hand on his shoulder, and grasped it securely. He shrunk from her light fingers; they hurt his flesh as though they had been steel bars. She struck the newspaper lying on the table with the other hand, and said, with a desperate effort, "It means this, George: The man was found on Friday; but the deed was done on Thursday night—done, of course, after you left him; but who can prove that? He was seen alive in your company late on Thursday night, and he was never seen alive again. The hours of that night must be accounted for, George, if you are to prove yourself guiltless. How can you account for them after the time the waiter saw you leave the tavern together?"

George did not answer. She cunght her breath and went on, fixing on him a sideway look of intense anxiety.

"Can any of the people at the billiard-rooms prove at what hour you left them? Can any one at your former lodgings prove at what hour you reached home that night?"

"I don't think we left any one after us at the billiard-room but the maker," George replied. "By the way, how extraordiuary that he did not at once come forward at the inquest. He must have noticed Deane's odd appearance, and his diamond studs and things, I should think,"

"One would think so," said Harriet; "but I dare say the foreign look is commonly enough seen in such places. Still the coat must have been very conspicuous. I forget whether you said you were in the habit of going to those particular billiard-rooms."

"I did not say anything about it, Mrs. Routh, I never was there but that once. It is very odd, as you say, about Deane's coat, but the poor man hadn't it on. After we left the tavern, I said it was an odd, un-English kind of coat, and too warm, I should think, for the weather; but he said he had 'the shakes' that day—Yankee for agne, you know--and had never worn it before in this country! He carried it over his arm, I remember, the cloth side out, and threw it into a corner of the billiard-room. I dare say no one saw it."

"Had he put it on when you parted with him?" asked Harriet.

"No," said George; "he was still carrying it over his arm, and I remember now that I said to him, 'You had better button that trapper's warp of yours over all that money you've been staggering under the weight of.' 'Lightened a little, old fellow, by you,' he said, though he had paid his losses in a note, not in gold."

Harriet's face was less anxious now.

"Poor fellow!" George went on, with a slight shudder; "how dreadful it is—such light words, too, as we parted with. When he handed me the note, he asked for pen and ink, and wrote his name upon it, in full, over some initials—A. F., I think—and told me a queer story about an old lady who always endorsed her notes with her name, residence, and the date of her birth, and how he once traced a forgery by a bank-note, purporting to come from her, being devoid of those eccentric inscriptions. He was telling me the story as we went out."

George's discursive fancy had wandered from his own position to the circumstances which invested Deane's fate with additional sadness to his mind. Harriet frowned angrily at this proof of his invincibly light nature, and went on sharply:

"All this adds strength to my argument. But I asked you another question. Did anyone in the house you lodged at know at what hour you went home that night? Is anyone in a position to prove it?"

"No," said George. "I let myself in with a latch-key, and made no noise. I never did, when I could help it, there, the old woman was such a Tartar."

"Then there is not a flaw in my argument, George," she said in a sweet, solemn tone, which, from the first time he had heard it, had had an irresistable charm for the young man; "there is nothing to be gained for anyone, for any conceivable interest that you are bound to consider, for any interest, indeed, except the abstract one of the law, in telling what you know of this matter.,'

"The man's friends," remonstrated George, who, habitually submissive to her, did not recoil at the suggestion, as he would infallably have recoiled had it come from any other person; "they may not know, they may be in suspense, in misery."

"I hardly think so," said Harriet, and her blue eyes had their coldest color, and her sweet voice its subtlest inflection of scorn. "Did you ever hear him mention relative or friend? Did you ever know a man so cold, so callous, so base, so shamelessly devoid of any interest save in his own pleasure or his own gain?" Her energy quite startled George. She was looking straight before her, and her hand was raised as though she were tracing a picture as her mind produced it. "The man was a reptile, George—a cruel snake in his nature. I don't believe anyone on earth ever loved him, except his mother in his babyhood. I hope she's dead; yes, I trust she's dead! And that you should peril your safety, drag your mother's name into the police courts, arouse all the anger, stab all the pride, of your step-father, ruin, or at least greatly injure, your own prospect, by the revelations you will be forced to make, supposing (which, I confess, I think most difficult and improbable) you do prove your own innocence, seems to me utterly monstrous and irrational. Remember, you can give justice only negative assistance. If you prove that Deane was the victim, and you not the criminal, you can't tell them who the criminal is, or give them any information about Deane."

"No," said George, very quickly; "but then, you know, Routh can."

Harriet dropped her hand off his shoulder, and fell into a chair.

"You are overdone Mrs. Routh," George said, tenderly, as he took her hand in his, and resumed his old manner of deferential affection. "You have talked too long and too much about this murder, and it has been too much for you. I ought to have seen that before. We won't say another word about it, until I have consulted Routh. How shocked he will be! I will think of all you have said; but I will do nothing today. I can't even wait to see him now, for I must get down to the Mercury office by four. I must leave you now."

"You are sure you will do nothing until we have seen you again?" Harriet said, faintly. "George, let nothing induce you to mention the matter at the Mercury. Only think of the God-send a hint would be to them."

"I'll take care," said George, "I will not stir in the matter till I have talked it over thoroughly with you."

"You will stay here, George, of course," said Harriet, kindly, holding out her hand, but without rising. "We have a room at your disposal now, you know."

"Thank you, Mrs, Routh, I will; but I don't think I shall be more than a day or two in London, unless I should be detained by this sad business."

"Are you going back to Amsterdam?" asked Harriet.

"No," said George; "I am going to my mother."

"I was right," Harriet said, when she was alone, as she lay back in her chair, pale and exhausted. "I thought the one strong motive, the motive which, though late aroused, has been strong enough to save George Dallas from himself, would be powerful now. Twice his mother has helped, has saved, at his expense, his worst, his involuntary enemy. There was nothing else to work upon, but that has succeeded."

Harriet was right to a certain extent, but not quite right. Another motive had helped the end she desired to gain, and George named it to his own heart as he walked down to the Mercury office by the name of Clare Carruthers.

"You are a wonderful woman, Harry," said Routh, when Harriet had concluded the brief statement into which she condensed her report of the interview between her and George. But, though he spoke in a tone of strong admiration, and his face relaxed into a look of relief, he did not hold her in his arms and kiss her passionately now. "You are a wonderful woman, and this danger is escaped."

She smiled a little bitterly, very sadly, as she said:

"I don't know. At all events, it is once more tided over."

[To be Continued.]

AMUSEMENTS.

Maguire's Opera House.—Theatrical performances generally were but poorly attended in consequence of the rainy weather during the week. The best house was drawn on Wednesday, when Jessie Brown was played on the occasion of a benefit to James Linen, the poet. The performance commenced with the reading of one of the beneficiary's poems, entitled "The Poet's Mission" by Mrs. Harry Jackson. The play was capitally performed, Mrs. Harry Jackson adding to the laurels which she has already won during her stay in this city, by her admirable impersonation of "Jessie Brown." In the final scene--where "Jessie" hears the slogan—Mrs. Harry Jackson's acting was wonderfully impressive, and sent a thrill of painful emotion through the audience. The other characters were well played. This bill was repeated on Thursday evening. Yesterday evening Mrs. Harry Jackson, one of the most painstaking and correct actresses who has ever visited this coast, received the compliment of a benefit, which we are glad to state was well attended. The performance commenced with the reading of the poem "Mary Queen of Scotts," by Mrs. Jackson, illustrated by tableaux, vivants, and concluded with Tom Taylor's comedy of The Unequal Match. This evening Mr. John McCullough, the young tragedian who has since the removal of the unhealthy Forrest shade which stunted his intellectual growth, made rapid progress in the favor of the public, will make his re-appearance in Richard III. All who witnessed Mr. McCullough's fine impersonation of "Hamlet," will be pleased to see him in another Shaksperian character. At the Matinee Jessie Brown will be played.

On Monday evening Mr. Thomas Maguire will be the recipient of a complimentary benefit tendered to the only Theatrical Manager of the Pacific Coast by the most lately arrived star, Miss Alice Kingsbury—and the dramatic profession generally. Mr. Maguire has done much to deserve this compliment; he has been the main stay—or indeed the only stay of the dramatic profession on this coast, and should he retire, we might look long and anxiously, but in vain, for a manager who would cater so liberally to the requirements of the amusement-loving population of San Francisco, and the interior cities of Sacramento, Marysville, Grass Valley, Nevada and Virginia, in which cities he is either sole or part proprietor of the local theatres. Mr. Maguire will proceed to New York on the steamer of the 30th inst., and will, during his stay there, secure all the attractive novelties for his theatres on this coast. The entertainment on Monday night will commence with the performance of "The Star Spangled Banner," by Miss Kate Denin and the entire corps of volunteers; Mr. Henry Edwards will then read "Eugene Aram's Dream," and the performance will conclude with Fanchon, with Miss Alice Kingsbury in her great character of "The Cricket." On Tuesday evening Daly's dramatization of Griffith Gaunt, the latest sensation produced in New York, a dramatic version of Charles Reade's novel which the Round Table thought so "naughty," will be produced. To-morrow evening the doors of the Opera House will be thrown open to the public, and the house will doubtless be crowded with a fashionable and intellectual audience to listen to one of Mrs. Laura Cuppy's charming lectures.

The Laemlein Concert.—Platt's Hall was densely crowded last Wednesday evening, on the occasion of the complimentary concert to the Misses Emma and Rebecca Laemlein, two young pianists whose debut, some months ago, awakened expectations which have been more than fulfilled by their progress during the interval. Contrary to their custom at former concerts, the sisters did not, on Wednesday evening, appear in any four-hand pieces. Miss Emma gave Jaell's Reminiscences de Norma and Liszt's Fantasia on the quartet in Rigoletto, with remarkable power and facility of execution; for encores, an Andalusian Dance, and a brilliant arrangement of "Yankee Doodle." Miss Rebecca, with rather less force and rapidity than her sister, has a more delicate and musical touch; she played Liszt's arrangement of the March from Tannhauser, Chopin's March Funebre, and Gottschalk's "Banjo," besides Mason's "Silver Spring" for an encore. Both sisters were received with great enthusiasm, and were quite overwhelmed with floral tributes. The rest of the programme was excellent, though rather too long. Mr Desvachez appeared to great advantage in two compositions by Servios, for the violoncello; Mr Schlotte, with his exquisite tone and execution, gave the Cavatina from Robert, and Lindner's Overluender, for the French horn; Mr. Wunderlich, in spite of severe hoarseness, did tolerable justice to Schubert's "Wanderer;" and Miss Grey made her first appearance in public by singing, without particular effect, a song which we did not recognize, and which was not the beautiful "Caro nome," from Rigoletto, for which she was announced. Miss Brannan sang Balfe's "I'm a merry Zingara," the cavatina, "Tacea la Notte," from Il Trovatore, and (as an encore,) the ballad "Within a mile of Edinboro," with great vivacity and grace; and Mrs. Northrop was equally acceptable in her artistic rendering of "Ernani involami," and of a composition which appeared to be a medley of several concert waltzes, phrases from It Bacio, and from the waltz in Crispino, being distinctly recognizable. Mr. Gustave A. Scott, as accompanist and musical director, performed his part with his usual taste and skill. We hope the two talented sisters will afford the public an early opportunity for another hearing.

Sacred Concert.—M. and Mme. Heine, the blind violinist, and the accomplished pianist, have not been fortunate since their arrival in San Francisco. The public at large have not as fully appreciated the talent of these artistes, as they should have done. Paul Julien's concerts were well attended, and he at once became "the rage." We are forced to conclude that in some instances a South American reputation is a more favorable introduction to the musical public of San Francisco, than one acquired in England and fully endorsed in Australia. From the musical profession, in this city, a verdict has gone forth against the public with regard to its treatment of M. and Mme. Heine; the verdict is "Guilty of stupidity.' The profession, however, says: "If the public will not show their appreciation of modest merit, but requires to be dosed with 'strippers,' 'flyers' and 'double mammoth posters,' we will do what we can to save the reputation of San Francisco." Therefore at the final performance of sacred music, given by M. and Mme. Heine, at the Metropolitan Theatre, to-morrow night, Miss Emma Howson, Miss Clelia Howson, Frank A. Howson, Henrie Herberte, Messers. Swift, Nordbloom, Austin and Wunderlich of "The Twelve," Professor George T. Evans, Charley Schultze and others of the musical profession, have tendered their services. A fine programme has been arranged, comprising some of M. Heine's best performances.

Academy of Music.—On the 30th inst. the troupe of wonderful Japanese jugglers and gymnasts, who have been astonishing our citizens during the past few weeks, will proceed on their way to astonish the natives of the Atlantic States. But three more performances will be given in this city, and those who have not yet seen the strange and incomprehensible feats performed by these artistes, must make up their minds to do so at once. A Matinee will be given to-day, when little "All Right" will astonish all the young Americans present.

Favorites to Arrive.—Miss Lucy Escott, and Henry Squires will be soon on their way to this port from Australia, where they have met with great success. When they arrive, the musical people of San Francisco will be favored with a season of English opera. They come under an engagement to Manager Maguire.

Metropolitan Theatre.—The houses at this theatre have of course been thin in consequence of the rain. The Magic Pills, though not near as good as some other pantomines which have been produced, has a good deal of business but not much fun in it. The ballad of the Star of the Rhine has proved generally popular.

[For the Californian.]

"WORTHLESS FELLOWS."

BY PRENTICE.

"OH, he's one of your 'ne'er-do-wells,' a shiftless, worthless fellow."

We were engaged in the agreeable recreation of tearing to pieces the reputation of an unfortunate man. Mr. Bramble heard the words mentioned above. Mr. Bramble had previously taken no part in the conversation. He is a very quiet man. He limits himself to a certain number of words per day.

Mr. B. now commenced talking in measured, deliberate tone, that arrested the attention of the company.

Said he, "I am the champion of all 'ne'er-do-wells,' and so-called shiftless, worthless fellows. They are a much abused, persecuted, and uncomprehended race. I known it. I was once one myself. Some people call me one now. If a man don't walk in the groove the world carves out, the world turns round and calls him hard names. It makes no difference even if he can't walk. The world then says he has no business to be a cripple.

As I was saying I commenced being a 'ne'er-do-well' at an early age. When a boy I could neither cateb a ball, or hit a ball, or drive a horse as well as other boys. My father often remarked 'he didn't know what to make of that boy.' Wishing to make me useful he put me to ''tend store.'

Now there was no ''tend store' in me. I was a disgrace, a damage, and a detriment to the establishment. When sent to deliver articles purchased, I not unfrequently left them at the wrong houses—left a new broom at Mrs. A.'s where I should have left sugar, and sugar at Mrs. B's where it should have been a new broom. I distributed candy, raisins and crackers gratis among my juvenile comrades in fearful quantities. I ran away and went in bathing when trade was very brisk. I could never distinguish the difference between calico and muslin, or tell sheeting from linen, and my eccentric charges were ruinous to the business.

It being fairly proved that my absence from the store added to the profits my services were dispensed with. It was said I 'had no capacity for business.'

CHAPTER II.

At the age of twelve my parents were still disagreeably and unprofitably occupied in planning my future. I say unprofitably, since my theory is, that at that period the souls of the parents had better be possessed in peace, while the child scampers over the hills and lays the groundwork of a sound constitution.

My father talked education, law, medicine and college. I hated college. I hated students with their dyspeptic faces and white hands. I wanted to be a circus rider, or the man capable of great feats of strength, who traveled with the circus—the one who pulled against four horses, and had big stones pounded to pieces on his abdomen.

For indulging in this vagabondish inclination, my father threatened to apprentice me to a neighboring shoemaker. I secretly held against this in reserve the idea of running away and going to sea. My mother hugged constantly to her heart the hope that I might become a minister. From this I recoiled with more horror than from college or cobbling.

Up to the age of a dozen, I had been a very quiet, demure, good little boy. Retaining still the quiet and demureness, I dropped the goodness and became mischievous. I was first and foremost among a prowling band of youths, who by night wandered forth seeking, and realizing, happiness in robbing orchards, hen-roosts, and watermelon patches, unhanging gates, ringing door-bells and praticing the whole catalogue of mischief handed down from generation to generation, in our older Eastern towns.

Worse yet; at fourteen I learned drinking, smoking, swearing and other evils concomitant upon the advent of a blushing youth to the honors of manhood. I was classed by the good people, among the bad boys. All this is very sad, but it is true. The change was mainly owing to the shop experience, and the fearful prospect in the future, of college, cobbling and divinity.

Now who or what was to blame for my youthful depravity? Could it be my parents? Was it myself? Was it fate? What was it?

CHAPTER III.

My mother was left a widow, and in straitened circumstances. With all my waywardness, I had a sincere desire to be of assistance to her.

We possessed the usual wealthy uncle spoken of in novels. To him I applied, not for money, but employment. His influence was great. He advised me to seek a home in the West, to cultivate the prairie, to carve out for myself a road to fortune. A poorer man could have given the same advice. He was a kind hearted man, though. He allowed my father to be buried in his own private vault.

One morning I declared my intention of going to a certain town and learning the trade of a machinist. The people of Bonesburgh (that's my native place) rejoiced. Good, pious Bonesburghers came to me before I left, and gave me so much advice. It was good advice, too. They were so glad on account of my proposed reformation. They rejoiced also, in secret, over the anticipated security of their apple orchards and hen-roosts. Disinterested Bonesburgbers!

I spent one month in the machine shop and was discharged. They said I had no 'capacity for the business.'

The people of Bonesburgh were disagreeably surprised at my re-appearance. My return was in August, and at my coming the fancied security of the watermelon patches proved a delusion and a dream.

After playing a few month's engagement in Bonesburgh, in the character of a 'depraved and sinful youth,' I went to the city of New York. There my own exertions procured for me a situation. From time to time moral friends from Bonesburgh, on a visit to the metropolis, called on me. They diverted my attention from my duties and counseled me to a persistent tread in the paths of morality and virtue. They had never lifted a finger in my behalf, yet somehow they always left me with a faintly defined impression that my position was owing to their help. Some of them allowed me to take them to the theatre.

Well, I tried to be attentive and industrious and tread in the path of virtue. I worked bard, early and late, did the best I could to please my employers, and at the expiration of ten months had the satisfaction of hearing them tell me that I was hardly adapted to the business and had better seek some other employment. They bid me not to be discourged and then figuratively showed me the door.

The people of Bonesburgh were once more shocked at my presence. The disagreeable impression thus produced was slightly modified because I had thus far fulfilled the prophesies made of me by all sober people, to wit: 'that I should never turn out anything.'

CHAPTER IV.

For several months I was a dependant on one whose means of support were quite slender. This was itself a gnawing canker to my soul.

There were certain elders among the Bonesburghers whom I had always regarded with respect and reverence. To them I applied for employment, also for advice as to the adoption of a profession. They could suggest much and do nothing, and all this they accomplished with an expression of countenance which seemed to say that it was useless to try to do anything for such a shiftless youth. There was but one individual who would do anything for me—that was myself. So I took counsel with the wretch. I would go to the West.

I did go to the West, obtained employment in a land office, and from the first week of entering on my duties entertained as a guest, typhoid fever, which, after some two months continuanee tapered off into the 'dumb ague,' the meanest complaint in the world, which of a live human being makes an animated dead man. My one year of Western life was replete wtih ague, pills and quinine. My employers advised me to return East. In dogged despiration I packed my trunk and again 'Johnny came shaking home.'

The story of my Western suffering seemed to excite little or no sympathy. I was not a corpse, and a large portion of human sympathy seems to be kept in reserve to be showered on corpses. People were not a bit disappointed—shiftless—undecided—no perseverance—didn't believe I had been sick—homesick.

The elders shook their heads as I passed them by. The air seemed filled with reproaches. I felt as if clad in a garment of worthlessness.

Then discouragement set in. Twenty and twenty-two are prone to discouragement. It's all nonsense, you know, to get in this condition when the wheel of existence has hardly commenced turning, but it is quite natural. I talked of the heartlessness of the world—wished I was dead—wanted to be a pirate—a burglar—a stage-robber—even wanted to be a girl.

Home was home to me no longer, and next I found myself one of the crew of a clipper-ship, bound for China, for Patigonia, for the North Pole, for H——Halifax, I cared not whither. What mattered it to me where she went—so long as on board of her I could earn victuals and clothes. She finally brought up at a San Francisco wharf. I was paid half the wages due me and then the captain told me that I was hardly cut out for a sailor, and had better get into some other business.

Some other business! Would Providence kindly inform me for what purpose I was constructed? Was I indeed a useless chip accidentally shattered from the great block of humanity and doomed ever to be beat and banged about, while all the other stones were fitted into their places?

CHAPTER—V

In this very city, years ago, I again resumed my normal condition of 'hunting up some other business.' When down to the last dollar I found a situation. It was not in a bank or a mercantile establishment. It was to superintend the culinary department on a vessel bound on a mission of destruction to various members of the Saurian species on the lower coast of Californian. If you are in any doubt, it was to be cook on a whaling schooner. These things are not very pleasant to speak of, yet I know several high-toned gentlemen who were cooks in Forty-nine.

Various friends said, 'Why, you don't really mean to ship as cook, do you? It's disgraceful; you can't mean it.'

But it was either cook or starve, and so I threw my pride into the slop pail and cooked. My friends did nothing to prevent my going. Friends will permit one to do a great deal before disgracing ones self by starving to death.

I was not well qualified for the exercise even of the rude culinary art common to the sea; knew nothing of making bread or boiling beans. We had seven white men in the cabin and ten Sandwich Islanders forward. In rough weather the vessel was generally in a perpendicular position—one to which my stomach never could get accustomed. The galley was small, and my pots, pans and kettles were forever charging out of the door into the lee scuppers. For the first two months there was a general howl of execration echoed from the forecastle to cabin and cabin to forcastle against the cook—the literary cook—for somehow it had leaked out that I had 'written for the newspapers.' It needed but this to confirm and intensify the prejudice against me. More than once I overheard mutterings as to 'what the d—l sent that quill driver to sea to spoil grub for poor sailors.'

Finally it was intimated to me that I had better resign: in fact I had no 'capacity' for the culinary art.

I would not resign. My spirit was now up and in arms. Had nature even denied me the qualifications necessary to prepare food for my fellow creatures? Was I indeed so utterly worthless?

It was fearful to come down peg after peg, and on each peg find written, 'failure.'

So I held on to the cookship through thick and thin. Triumphantly was that tempest of pots and kettles weathered—weathered through many a blast consequent on the manufacture of heavy bread and salt water coffee.

CHAPTER—VI.

The mines of California had next to come in the book of experience. I was an unsuccessful miner for eight years. Of course it was said of me that I was unfit for that occupation. Partners intimated that their day's work rather overbalanced mine. In this they were correct. Still I stood in ice-cold water and swung a pick or packed boulders out of the river-bed twelve or fourteen hours a day, making up in will what I lacked in strength. And at night I would lay down so tired and exhausted that it was long ere sleep came to my pillow or rather to me, for I needed it more than the pillow.

When I look back upon this life, I wonder that I am now alive. Probably I had no 'capacity' for dying under the circumstances!

I made many other efforts before I discovered for what Providence had created me. It is sufficient for me to say that at last I found an occupation which suits me, and I flatter myself that I suit the employment. But the road was a long and tiresome one. Failure seemed written on everything. It became so common, that I expected it. I worked with a dogged perseverance, taking little heed whether I succeeded or not.

A few years since, like many another unfortunate, I would ask myself what have I accomplished in all these years of tiresome labor. I have not made a fortune—am no better off than when I started out in the world—no, not so well, since so much of the season of youth and vigor has gone forever. After thirty, you know, the years begin to count. Old age and the grave and all those disagreeable performances seem no longer a myth. I used to look around me and see others living in ease and comfort, and the lack of all these things in my own case I laid to my supposed worthlessness. I do this no longer. I've reasoned myself into a belief that it was not all profitless. It may be a delusion, but it's a very pleasing one, and I intend keeping it up as long as I can.

At seventeen I had very little patience or perseverence—could not work for anything unless I saw the end right in view. I have had since to do a great deal of work simply for bread and clothes, and when these needs are pressing I find there is end enough in view.

I have learned to bear disappointment, because I expect it, and am now only agreeably disappointed.

I have learned in part to make the most of the present in the way of enjoyment. I consider myself a gainer there over most of you who are hurrying and skurrying and fretting your life out in the chase for dollars. You base all your happiness in the future, and there you will slip up. I have learned to be moderately charitable to all humanity—a very agreeable thing, by the way, when once the thick crust of selfishness enveloping the human heart, is broken through.

Above all I never constitute myself a judge and call a man worthless, for who can know with what struggles the poor fellow is obliged to contend against the world without, and inherited defects of character within."

PRUSSIA'S new flag is to be tri-color—black, white and orange.

THE Great Eastern is to carry passengers from New York to Brest for the World's Fair.

THE DYKEHAMBURY CONCERT.

CHAPTER I.

THE parish of Dykewood was eminently a musical parish. It was about to take part in a grand amateur concert, to which everybody for miles around was expected to come, and its great desideratum had long been a good tenor. Baritones there were in plenty, and these had to be pressed into tenor service; but they were thin, for the most part, like vin ordinare: and they could not take the high notes. Now a real tenor, after the fashion of Mario or Sims Reeves, was the thing wanted; therefore, from Mr. Hugh Carton's somewhat thin brown cheek, moustaches, long hair, and general foreign appearance, it had been suggested as not impossible that he might supply the deficiency,

Mr. Carton was a stranger recently come to Dykewood—a tall, muscular man, with a rather worn brown face, and eyes that would have struck an observer as having a pitiful, haunted look in them at times. When his possessions became a reality to him, instead of appearing like a dream, from which he was afraid every moment of awaking, this wore off; but at present he could hardly believe that fortune, adverse to him from childhood, had suddenly turned upon him her pleasant smiles.

There were gardeners at work in the shrubberies and amongst the flower-beds; and as his eye fell upon them. Mr. Carton stood still with a sudden wonder at the thought that these men were his servants, and would look to him for payment. He shaded his eyes with his hand, and looked out into the west, where the sky was one blaze of gold and red. The light fell on hill and dale in fitful gleams; it touched the tree-top, and picked out bits here and there of the winding river to make it glisten like silver. The scene grew dim before Mr. Carton's eyes. He saw instead a miserable lodging under a foreign sky, where a gaunt man cowered at night over the stove, whose supply of charcoal was scanty. He saw this man rising up in the morning, sometimes hopeful, to be beaten back again from time to time, till hope was almost dead within him; then he saw this same man, but changed a little, for the better days had begun, and his genius was making its way tardily; a newspaper was in his hand, and one finger rested on an advertisement. His breath came in painful gasps, his face grew gradually paller natil—

Mr. Carton started, for one of the workmen stood before him, touching his hat, and asking instructions respecting certain trees which he thought should be cut down to improve the view. Mr. Carton could have laughed aloud at the incongruity of the thing, but he restrained himself, and gave his orders quietly.

"I might be the country squire in a farce," he said to himself; "I feel like playing at being a rich man. Pleasant play, though! Ah, I am thankful it didn't come too late."

He flung down his cigar, and walked quickly toward the house. He passed the wide stone steps, which looked so imposing, pushed open a French window, and entered a small drawing-room; at the end of which was a conservatory. A young girl lay on a couch near this window, young, but with few of the marks of youth. There was not the faintest rose-tint in the cheeks, from which suffering had driven the healthy blood; the hands that she stretched out to him were fearfully thin, and the large eyes, which filled with tender light when they saw him, seemed too large for the wasted features. Yet in a certain way she was beautiful. Hugh Carton knelt down beside the couch, and put his arm under her head gently.

"Is it pleasant, sister?" he said. "Are you happy here amongst the birds and the flowers, or do you long after bluer skies?"

"No, Hugh," replied the girl; "there was trouble under them."

"Ah, but it was growing lighter," said Hugh.

"I know it was," said the girl; "but what of that? They should have appreciated you before; they shall not have you now to make a slave of. I am glad for your sake a thousand times more than my own. It seems too good to be true."

"It does, indeed," said Hugh smilingly. "I am ready to warn my own men that sometimes I may not be able to pay them for their work. I am only thankful that all this came when it did."

"That's for my sake," said the girl, clasping his neck with a sudden, passionate movement of affection. "Hugh, how shall I ever repay you? All your life-long you have sacrificed everything for me. Many a time you thought I did not know when something had to be given up, because you would not leave me to the care of strangers. You would have got on, and been famous long ago, but for me. Tell me, is not that so?"

"Perhaps I didn't want fame, Ethel," he replied.

"Ah, but poverty would have been over then," said Ethel; "and I know, I know—

"You slaved your best years away for me," continued Ethel. "I wonder how many brothers there are in the world like mine.'

"And I wonder how many sisters are as patient and uncomplaining as mine," retorted Hugh. "We won't talk of the old days now, Ethie. I declare that I never wished to sit in the place which those two poor lads should have filled successively before me. I never thought of such a chance. When I read of the accident, and saw that advertisement for the next kin, there was pity in the shock as well as—but never mind."

"No,' said Ethel, "let it rest. I have had visitors again, Hugh. That kind old Mrs. Wynne came with her daughter. It was very good of the old lady; for though she is not exactly a cripple, like I am, it is difficult for her to get about."

"Why do they always come when I'm from home?" said Mr. Carton, and a shade passed over his face. "It looks as if there was something ogreish about me, Ethel."

"So there is," replied Ethel. "You are so silent and stern-looking, like a brigand. You never open you lips to anyone but me. But you must call upon Mrs. Wynne and little Bertie—they are your tenants, you know. Fancy your boasting tenants! Will you have a rent-day, Hugh, and a grand feast in the park, and speeches? or will you be a hard, griping landlord, and oppress everybody? See there! What's that coming up the avenue? A carriageful of ladies to call upon me, and a—what a curious-looking man!"

"It's the very fellow that bothered me about game-laws the other day," said Hugh, laughing; "as if I knew anything about game-laws! I can't stand this, Ethel. Good by.

"Indeed, no sir." said Ethel, and she caught his arm and held him fast. "You never did leave me to bear the brunt of anything yet, and you shall not begin now. Besides, consider that you'll have to return all these calls since I cannot; so stay and break the ice."

CHAPTER II.

Hugh Carton was a very singular gentleman indeed. Dykewood raised its eyebrows and didn't know what to think about him. As to his being an acquisition to the neigborhood, that seemed very dubious indeed. Dykewood had called upon the Cartons, and Mr. Carton had returned the calls. His sister won golden opinions from all; but as for Hugh, he sat for the most part in his corner staring at the landscape, with absent eyes, or pulling his long black moustache over his mouth, as if he wanted to hide a smile. Dykewood invited him to an evening party, to which Mr. Carton went, after a strong argument over the matter with his sister; and the musical young ladies were more puzzled than ever. Mrs. Grafton played her pet piece with more than usual elaboration, and her sister drew a startled and dreamy acknowledgment from him that he knew nothing of Thalberg; was not quite sure that he had ever heard the name. Then three young ladies sang a trio, and when it was over Mr. Carton did not even applaud, but sat still by little Bertrie Wynne, and positively talked to her. Poor little Bertrie did not sing or play—before company. She could not know the charm that lay hidden in that naïve confession; she was only conscious that Mr. Carton's manner grew suddenly kinder; that he had a very pleasant way of saying funny things; and it made her feel very angry afterwards to hear her companions expressing their disapproval of him in a corner, as hopelessly stupid.

"Why, he turned your music over always in the wrong place, Clare," said Miss Gralton, "before the page was half finished."

A little chuckle broke from Mr. Crane at this.

"Showed his sense," said he; "wanted it over. Not that I mean to be discourteous, my dears, at all; only didn't I tell you there was no music in him?"

"We didn't accept your verdict, though," retorted Miss Grafton, moving towards Mr. Carton's corner.

"This nonsensical heathen has been accusing you of his own want of taste, Mr. Carton," she said. "I'm sure it's a libel. I am quite sure that you must at least like music."

Hugh stammered out that he "didn't exactly know," and the young lady's face fell.

"We did so hope you would join the choir," continued Miss Grafton. "We want a tenor voice dreadfully, and you look as if you had one."

"The choir!" repeated Mr. Carton, reflectively.

"Yes, our Dykewood choir," said Miss Grafton.

"You heard us on Sunday. But a really good tenor would be such an improvement. I am sure you have a singing face, if you would only try. People very often don't know their capabilities until they begin."

There was a very curious twitching about Mr. Carton's lips as he listened to this. The speaker did not notice it, but little Bertie Wynne did, and wondered. He raised his eyes to Miss Grafton's face, and said very quietly, "You may be right. I suppose I am not too old to learn."

He was smiling outright now, and a chorus of eager negatives of such a supposition broke upon him.

"And then we are going to have an amateur concert," said Miss Grafton; "and we should be so glad of your help—at Dykehambury, you know."

"Ah!" said Mr. Carton. His face grew a shade paler, and he stretched out one hand in an aimless sort of fashion, as though searching for something. The gesture was peculiar; these people could not know how suddenly they had touched a chord in that weary, struggling past of his, and drawn forth the old instinctive movement by which he had been used in those days to draw his sister's couch toward him and feel that there was a comforter.

Mr. Carton walked home that night with little Bertie Wynne, which gave rise to many expressions of discontent, fortunately never destined to reach his ears. Bertie's servant kept a decorous distance, but there was no laughter or funny speeches now. Hugh had grown grave in the moonlight; so grave, indeed, and absent, that he would have forgotten to wish his charge good-night if she had not spoken the words first; and then he remembered, and his face grew red as he spoke the parting salute.

The last words which Mr. Carton said to his sister that night must have been very comical, to judge the amusement they created. She looked up at him with mischief sparkling in her large eyes; and twisting the corners of the mouth, about which pain had drawn many lines, she said, simply, "Sing for them, dear Hugh—do."

CHAPTER III.

"So you have given him up!" said Mr. Crane, biting his lips.

"O, of course," replied Miss Grafton. "It would never do to take a beginner amongst the Dykehambury people—they wouldn't like it."

"But you have asked him," said Mr. Crane. "Suppose he says he will sing?—and there he comes. Besides, how do you know he is a beginner?"

"I know how he turned my music over," said Miss Gralton. "But that's nonsense. I should have liked a tenor solo; but we must do without it."

When Mr. Carton made his unexpected entrance into the committee-room this question was still undecided. No one spoke to him beyond the ordinary greeting, and that was cut rather short, for they were preoccupied, and, in a musical light, he was evidently nobody. He sat listening and caressing his moustache, as usual, till the debate grew warm, and then all at once the Oracle stepped forward and broke his silence.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "I believe my voice is a tenor. I will undertake this solo that you are in trouble about. Let me see—one part of the concert is to be sacred and the other profane—I hope that doesn't mean that it is to be wicked. If I may choose, I prefer appearing in the sacred part. I will sing 'Deeper and deeper still.'"

There ran a sort of terrified gasp through the assembled ladies. Mr. Crane, who liked to be everywhere, and hear everything that went on, sacked the knob of his stick and chuckled. At last some one said feebly, "What, that grand thing!—the song John Braham made immortal?"

"Did he?" said Hugh. "I should have thought the composer had some hand in doing that. Don't you approve of my choice?"

"It was a difficult song," was the reply. "Do you know the recitative?"

"Recitative," repeated Hugh, absently; "O, to be sure. That is, of course I shall get the music, and my sister will run through it with me at home. I don't think you will want me at the rehearsals," he added, with a twinkle in his eye. "I wish you good evening."

Mr. Carton's step was more elastic than usual as he went away. Perhaps the fresh summer air and the beauty of woods and fields did him good. At any rate it was with a very bright face that he stopped at the little door in the wall which divided Mrs. Wynne's garden from his park. He opened this door, listened, and shook his head, but indulgently. Some one was playing on a piano which was not in very good tune. By and by the sound ceased, and a little figure came to the window, peeped through the muslin curtains, and saw him. Mr. Carton took off his hat, and she met him at the door.

"I thought you didn't play," he said.

"I didn't—for visitors," was the reply; "but mamma likes it. I was only trying a bit from 'Oberon.' It is such sparkling music, just as if the writer were so brimful of happiness and mirth that he didn't know what to do with himself."

"Then you couldn't fancy the man who wrote it dying slowly while he wrote?" said Mr. Carton, gravely. "What judges we are, all of us!"

"Was Weber dying when he wrote 'Oberon'?" asked Bertie.

"Yes," replied Mr. Carton, "and knew that he was. He wrote it for an English opera company, and came to England to put it on the stage. He left his wife and bairnies behind him in the far country, and worked all the harder in the hope of seeing them once again before he died. He never did, though. It's sad, isn't it? We won't talk about it. What's that puzzled face for?"

"I was wondering," said Bertie, "how you, who don't care for music, came to know all this about Weber, and to be so interested in it."

"I may know something of the life of a clever man, though crotchets and quavers were Greek to me, mayn't I?" laughed Mr. Carton. "And how can you tell that I don't care for music, eh?"

"Well, you never say anything about it," replied Bertie. "And then the choir—"

"O, the choir," said Hugh, slowly. "But then you see, in the foreign churches, at least some of them, one might get a a little spoiled for—your choir?"

"Don't call it mine," said Bertie. "They wouldn't admit me if I wanted to join it, which I do not, for I couldn't spare time as the others can."

"Why wouldn't they admit you?" he asked.

"O, I don't know," replied Bertie, with a little shrug of indifference. "I'm insignificant and a nobody, and then my voice is neither one thing nor another—not worth having, you know. I can't go up to B, nor down to wonderful depths, Mr. Carton,"

"Will you let me hear it?" said Hugh, quickly.

"Are you serious?" said Bertie, looking up, with a little flush of astonishment.

"Indeed I am," he replied. "Sing something for me."

Mr. Carton was silent for a while after the song was finished, and he looked over Bertie's music discontentedly.

"These don't suit you," he said, at last. "I wish you would let me get some mezzo-soprano things for you. I am going to send to London. Ah, by the way, I haven't told you about that. I hope I shall not disgrace myself; but I am going to sing a solo at this grand concert."

"Mr. Carton!" exclaimed Bertie.

"It's quite true," said he. "Don't look so terrified. Your amatuer performers are always indulgently allowed to blunder.

"It is not so? What o'clock is that?" he added, suddenly. "I had no idea it was so late; and Ethel will be waiting for me. That reminds me, Miss Bertie: take my thanks for all your kindness to her, and to me, through her. And now let me pay my respects to Mrs. Wynne, for I must go."

CHAPTER—IV.

Mr. Carton was a bachelor, and rich, so it would never do for Dykewood to offend him outright. He must sing his song; that was, if some happy change did not interfere to prevent it. If the Dykehambury magnates did make fun of them all, they must bear it. Mr. Crane said it would serve them right for besieging the man as soon as he came amongst them; and of course he would make a fool of himself. The ladies comforted themselves with the reflection that a failure would do him good; would make him more humble and tractable, and teach him not to make remarks about the choir. But little Bertie Wynne went about with a troubled face amongst her flowers, and told herself, with rising anger, that she hated the concert, and that nothing should ever induce her to go to it. She was thinking this one evening discontentedly, while her busy scissors snipped away here and there a dead rose from the standards, when suddenly a voice, which she knew pretty well by this time, uttered her name, and she looked up and saw Mr. Carton's brown face above the wall on which his hands rested.

"Those roses are finer than mine," he said, demurely.—"May I have one if I come for it?"

He did not wait for an answer, but raised himself to the top of the wall, and then dropped on the other side.

"It's so far round to the gate," he said, glancing at a wicket about three yards distant. "And besides, I feel very like a school boy still. I never see a wall like this without wanting to climb over it. Now for my rose."

Bertie handed him the scissors, but Hugh said, "No, cut it for me. Now put it in my button-hole; thank you. What's the matter?"

He asked this question quickly, and in a tone which had lost its lightness, for looking down at her as she obeyed his command, he saw that her face was pale, and fancied her fingers trembled.

"What a ruffian of a fellow I am!" said he. "What is it? Mrs. Wynne—"

"No, no," interrupted Bertie; mamma is all right; it isn't that. And there's nothing the matter, only— Mr. Carton, I want very mch to say someting to you, if you are sure you won't be angry."

"Angry!" said he. "We ought to be friends by this time, Miss Wynne. You are not afraid of me?"

"No," said Bertie; "but—I wanted your sister to say it, and she wouldn't. She said that I must speak to you myself—that you would not listen to her. Mr. Carton, it's about the concert."

Hugh's face changed in a moment. Subdued mirth gleamed in his eyes, and twisted the corners of his lips under the black moustache, but Bertie was not looking at him.

"You think I shall make a worse mess than the rest?" he said

Bertie did not answer: she was looking away over the woods toward the spires of Dykehambury, some miles distant.

"Mr. Carton, everybody is talking about the concert," continued Bertie. "You see, it isn't the same thing as it would be if it were confined to Dykewood and the choir. The Dykehambury Music Hall is a very grand place, and people will come from all parts—"

"For the fun of hearing what a fool I shall make of myself, eh?" said Mr. Carton. "Well, don't you perceive that by such means I shall be adding to the receipts? And as it is for a charity, one shouldn't mind being laughed at."

"But, Mr. Carton, you don't know—"

"But, Miss Wynne, you don't know how I was beset on all sides about this affair just at first," interrupted Mr. Carton. "They have begun to look coolly on me now, I am aware; so see how amiable I am to be still willing to help."

"But if you can't?" said Bertie.

"A man never knows what he can do till he tries," replied Mr. Carton.

"Why, you don't even attend the rehearsals," said Bertie.

There was an involuntary movement of Mr. Carton's hands towards his ears. "No," said he, "I do not; and I haven't got the song yet."

Bertie turned a horror-stricken face toward him.

"Do you know that the concert is fixed for Wednesday?" she asked.

"Yes," replied Hugh. "I expected to get my packet by post this morning, but it didn't come. I wonder if I remembered to put the address?" he added, with a spirit of mischief he could not control.

"Mr. Carton," said Bertrie, "don't do it."

Hugh's air of light raillery changed altogether at those pleading words. He bent down and took the two nervous little hands in his, and his face was very grave.

"You don't like me to be made fun of," said he. "You are unhappy—that is, anxious, on my account, Bertie?"

"Yes—and Ethel's," added Bertie, quickly. She hardly knew what made her add that. Perhaps it was something in his face which she had never seen before; or it might have been the consciousness that he had called her by her name for the first time. If she had looked at him then she would have seen that a debate was going on in his mind, but she did not. He was silent for some minutes, still holding her hands; then dropping them, he turned away, and said, coldly, "I shall hope to see you at the concert, nevertheless, Miss Wynne; don't disappoint me."

The words fell chill on Bertie's heart, and she took a step toward him.

"You are angry," she said. "I have offended you."

"No. Good night," he replied.

Mr. Carton never looked back once, but went out by the gate this time, soberly enough, and walked away along the park. And Bertie stayed amongst the roses, thinking she had done a foolish thing; wishing that vainest of all wishes, for the past back again, till it grew late, till the moon came out, and she went into the house with the heart-ache.

CHAPTER—V

The clocks in the great square of Dykehambury were striking seven, and one solitary gentleman was wandering about the orchestra of the music-hall.

The organ stood ready open, and this gentleman went up to it and examined the stops; but he could have done nothing further if he had desired it, since there was no one to blow for him. From the organ he turned to the grand piano, struck a few chords, and broke off with a gesture of amusement. It was the air the variations of which he had so unceremoniously cut short for Miss Grafton. Then this solitary gentleman espied in one corner a violin with its bow stuck invitingly across it. A strange expression stole over his face at the sight of this. He took off his gloves and went up to it softly, looking round him as if he had been going to do some guilty thing. He had only time to adjust the instrument caressingly in its place, and to draw from it one long chord, when another step came up the stairs, and the conductor stood before him. Hugh Carton positively blushed as he put down his prize with reluctant fingers. He glanced with a comical deprecation at the new-comer, who knew no better than other people what were the powers of this bold solist, and said, half smiling, "Who knows? I might play as well as sing, if I tried."

He then selected his corner in the orchestra, and took his seat. He did not care about all the fuss and bustle of the green-room, and he sat, indolently watching the chorus-singers take their places, the arrangement of harps and music-stands, and the gradual filling of the hall down below, till the conductor came forward with his baton, and the overture began. No one who looked at him would have thought that Hugh heard anything. He never moved a muscle of his face, never looked up even when the first soprano solo brought forth an encore, so clamorous, that it had to be complied with. He was perfectly passive and immovable until his own turn came, when he stepped forward and took up his music.

Even Hugh himself could not help being conscious of the subdued rustle which swept through the hall at his appearance,—a rustle of excited anticipation; a sort of self-gratulatory preparation to be critical. He knew that there were smiles more cynical than pleasant on some of the faces, and that opera-glasses were being levelled at him. His blood might have flowed a little more quickly in his veins, perhaps, as he looked down upon the audience below him. but that was all. He could not see, though perhaps he guessed intuitively, that Bertie Wynne had her head bent down, and her hands pressed tightly together in an agony of suspense for him; for Bertie had retracted her decision not to be present. She had found it impossible to stay away; and she will never forget the moment when the first few notes of Hugh's recitative broke on her ear, and the little rustle in the hall sunk suddenly into breathless stillness. Bertie's head was raised, and the flush of nervous dread left her face. She had never heard anything like this before; it was very possible that Dykehambury never had either.

The silence remained unbroken for some moments after the song was finished, and then the applause broke out in a deafening clamor, that would not cease until Mr. Carton come back, spoke a word to the accompanyist, and substituted "Angels ever bright and fair."

The rest of the concert was hopeless confusion to Bertie Wynne. In the interval she heard dimly the exclamation of astonishment and delight that passed from lip to lip around her; she even recognized the harsh chuckle of Mr. Crane, as he asked old Mrs. Grafton what she thought of the choir after that; and she was vaguely watchful of that one figure sitting silent and grave in the orchestra, never moving, never seeming to notice anything that went on, and to all appearance profoundly unconscious of the commotion which his wonderful voice had stirred up in the hall. She knew little more until she found herself in Mrs. Grafton's carriage, and saw Hugh at the window petitioning for a seat. He did not say much when he got in. The stars were bright, and the air of the summer night was very sweet after the close music-hall. Perhaps altogether there had been no passage in Bertie's quiet life so wonderful as this drive home from Dykehambury. At the little gate in the wall they both got out, and Bertie's chaperon drove away, with a caution to Mr. Carton to see her safe into the house. Hugh took off his hat to the retreating carriage significantly, and stood in the gateway, looking down at the little figure all in white beside him.

"Well?" he said, smiling.

"Mr. Carton, I never heard anything so beautiful in my life," said Bertie. "Why didn't you tell us?"

"Tell you what?" he asked; "that I once made a living by singing in public? I never said that I knew nothing of music. It was taken for granted; and, excuse me, your Dykewood people are rather supercilious; they amused me a little. One only, out of all, did not sneer, but took a part that would have been doubly kind if I had been the presumptious fool they thought me. Do you think I did not know the sort of 'lead him on, it will be fun,' that possessed all Dykewood—you expected? Yet one evening I was sorely tempted to tell. Do you remember?"

"I think so," said Bertie, as she made a step toward the house; but he stopped her.

"One moment," said Hugh. "Something else dates from that same evening. My pulses are riotously quick; I can't go home till they are quieter. I began to hope then, Bertie, that evening, that I might give my little friend and counsellor a dearer title. It's very sweet to hope. You won't forbid it? Don't you care for me after all?"

"I am not fit," said Bertie.

"You are my pearl of price that I meant to win for myself, if I could," said Hugh. "Listen: no; thus, with your hand in mine, that I may feel if you shrink from me. My father married an Italian opera-singer, and was cut off with a shilling for doing so. Do you think the worse of me for my mother's sake?"

"No," replied Bertie.

"I have been next door to a pauper," he continued. I have done the hardest manuel labor. Finally, I have been a public singer myself. Do you think the worse of me for all this?"

Involuntarily Bertie crept a little closer to him, which was answer sufficient.

"If those silent woods and lawns could speak, they would tell how you have haunted them with your ghostly presence. Come and make it real for me. I shall come to-morrow, and the next day, and every day until you will let me take you home. These things creep out, don't they, Bertie? To-morrow all Dykewood will know what came of the Dykehambury concert."

"They will say that I am not good enough for you," returned Bertie.

Mr. Carton's answer was unimportant. He waited until the hall door had closed after Bertie, stayed a little while longer, looking up at the light in her window, and then went off to walk up and down in the starlight, and wonder that Fortune was so good to him, just as he used to wonder in the old days at the strange grudge she seemed to bear him.

For the Paris Exhibition.—A limited liability company, called the "Society of the Charterers of the Great Eastern," has been formed in Paris, with a capital of $500,000, to charter the steamship Great Eastern. An effective board, including several Americans, have taken the management. A contract for repairs and fittings has been made with a Liverpool firm, under engagement to have the work done by the 5th of March. The Great Eastern will then sail for New York, and is expected to leave this port for Brest direct about the 1st of April next. The great ship will have accommodations for about twenty-five hundred passengers, and will afford a good opportunity for those who intend to visit the Paris Exhibition. It is the intention of the company to issue excursion tickets to Paris and return at a reduced rate.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1867.

MUSCLE AND BRAINS.

WERE this article written in one of the old countries in Europe, instead of in one of the youngest States in the New World, "Muscle and Brains" would seem an incorrect heading. "Brains and Muscle" would appear better to European eyes.

who is seated at the head of the organization callled "man,"

The brain is the motive power of the muscles, the monarch who communicates his sovereign will by electric wires pervading the frame, to any member of the composite whole which he governs. There are wise kings and foolish kings; kings fit to rule, not only their own domains, but also capable of governing adjacent territories or kingdoms, and holding their rulers as vassals by reason of their superiority; and, again, there are kings who are incompetent to rule over a kingdom of two or three hundred inhabitants. So, also, there are wise brains and foolish brains. There is a brain which holds the brains of other men in subjection—sometimes willingly and sometimes forced—and again, there is a brain which is dull, stupid, idiotic; a brain which even the members placed by Nature under its control, obey with no alacrity. Such a brain may be unseated—dethroned—with advantage to the men ruled by noble brains.

In the United States the Republican system would appear very often to have extended to the frame of man. King Brain is in many instances scoffed at, and lowered in the esteem of brains, subjugated by the baser members.

In all new countries muscle is exalted, while Brain, except so much as may be required to serve as a motive power for the muscles, is systematically degraded. The reason is manifest. Muscles are required first to hew down trees, build houses, till the soil and prepare this "new portion" of the earth for the habitation of men accustomed to live in cities. Often many years are occupied in such works as these in which muscle claims supremacy. The great deeds of the first generation—the muscular generation—are pointed out, in land formerly barren, now fertile, rocks torn to pieces in the search for gold, shafts sunk in the bowels of the earth and other such achievements. During this period, Brain is like Blind Sampson grinding in the mill of the Philistines, and Sampson is considered by the Philistines as doing worthy work—far better work than making riddles to exercise Philistine brains.

California is almost out of its infancy, much of its gold has been dug, its forests have been felled, its fields have been tilled, soon, let us hope that muscle may be dethroned from the situation which it has usurped. Honor to labor, honor to "the hard fisted sons of Toil!" These phrases sound well enough in monarchical countries, where the working man has to be satisfied with the empty words. In this new country, however, there is little fear but that the "hard fisted sons of Toil" will make money enough, and get honor enough, (especially at election time,) the fear is that Brain may be degraded, that men who are possessed of immortal faculties may be forced to throw away the immortal part of them and depend for their existence on the faculties and contrivances which Nature has bestowed on the brutes. Let not muscle be too much glorified. Let the poet who cheers the hardy "Sons of Toil" with Heaven-sent songs share with one of the aforesaid "Sons of Toil" the fruits of his labor though he has not either ploughed or sown with them. He has done his part.

THE "DRAMAEIC CHRONICLE" JOLLIFICATION.—All the editorial force of the CALIFORNIAN, as well as of the other papers of San Francisco, put in an appearance at the Dramatic Chronicle office, 606 Montgomery street, on Wednesday, January 16th, on which occasion Charles de Young & Co., entertained the members of the Press and their friends generally, with much Champagne and etceteras, in celebration of the commencement of the fifth volume. By an oversight this fact was allowed to remain unmentioned last week. The Daily Dramaéic Chronicle, in many things, sets an example to its larger and older contemporaries, and the energy displayed by its proprietors must insure success.

EXCHANGE OF CARDS.—An amusing story is told regarding the review of "Ecce Homo" which lately appeared in Macmillan's Magazine. The anonymous author of the book conveyed through the publisher his thanks to the reviewer, accompanied with the expression of his wish to know who he was; and received for reply that, as he had no objections to tell his name, he proposed that they should exchange cards.

[For the Californian.]

KILAUEA, AND A CHRISTMAS ROAST.

A MODERN MIRACLE OF FAITH THAT MOVED A MOUNTAIN.

"Out of the jaws of death
Out of the mouth of hell."

OF Christmas roasts, my Madaline, there are two sorts. That of the flesh of fowl, white and with delicate, soft fibres, savory and toothsome enough—and of the whiter, quivering and blood-moistened flesh of humans—discussing the former, listen to a discussion of the latter. * * * *

We quitted the Volcano House, my two guides and I, with a fine mist sifting into our faces, and many indications of a stormy night. Yet our ghostly pilgrimage was not to be frustrated by such trifles; our else unprofitable holiday was to be shown some distinction, and with this end in view we climbed over the precipice and swung beneath the brooding brows of the cliff, so entering upon our part of the spectacle, while the sulphurous blue and yellow footlights flickered a thousand feet below us. A series of illuminated tableaux followed our descent into to the crater, and lent us a satisfactory sense of adventure.

6. P. M.—We three, of a color now, clinging one to another for comfort, grope in the gloomy darkness across the desert of lava.

8. P. M.—The lake is reached and our tent of bushes pitched close upon its Plutonic shores. No one but ourselves may know of the desolation that surrounded us we approached hither. Yet the bottomless pits were bridged for us, and many a chasm sealed against us. Why was this? Could any demon have guided us thither to our deaths, sparing us some intermediate horror, for the unutterable agony of the climax? Fortunately the knowledge of our ultimate situations is unknown to us. How wise is Providence!

10. P. M.—The journey across the immence iron floor being tedious and fatiguing I seek shelter in the bowers of shrubs erected by the natives, and endeavor to refresh myself with some few moments of sleep. From time to time I awaken suddenly with a tremor in my limbs I cannot account for—a little faint also, with a weight resting heavily upon my chest. Small potions of proof brandy afford no permanent relief; I lie dozing in the unearthly gloom of this monstrous cell, a solitude that is peopled with phenomena innumerable, indescribable and nameless, yet so intangible, and airy, I can only imagine this wonderful amphitheatre, this colisium not made with hands, a ruin in the earth's waste places, the sacked temple of solitude.

Now and then the curious guttural chant of my guides, still worshiping their mongrel crew of divinities and holding Pale, she who dwells in the midst of flame, and ashes, as chiefess, startles me.

At intervals their wild songs steal in upon my reverie as goblin intrindes. Till midnight we indulge in this peculiar entertainment, speaking little, observing less: simply existing in an unholy atmosphere, awaiting some mysterious denouement.

Just after 1. A. M., a slight tremor of the earth throws us into consternation. Yet it is of common occurrence here, and in no wise calculated to alarm us—still, the consciousness of boding evils drive us to distrust, and our fears are upon the alert.

The liquor flask being empty, we throw it upon the crust of the molten lake. For a moment it lies upon the blackened surface, just turning from side to side as an apple in a hot oven, but as the surface of the furnace cracks across and begins to lift itself for the perpendicular immersion, it slides into the flaming fluid, and with a sharp snap, sinks rapidly.

2 A. M.—The atmosphere has become so close we debate seriously the plausibility of returning to the house on the cliff. A sky of inky blackness and no torches left to light us, prevents this venture. We came prepared to stop till morning, and so are without means of egress. It might be a quarter of three or a little later, when our ears are deafened with the noise resembling the bellowing of innumerable sea monsters; the tumults of battle fill the immense theatre with the horrors of annihilation. Thick sulphurous gasses rise in whirlwinds of yellow steam. At this moment one of the natives springs headlong into the lake of lava, and is instantly enveloped in a pale sheet of fire, that shrivels him like a dry leaf, and swallows him into the waves. I hear no sound from his lips—indeed had he quaked with the awful roar of the enraged lion, his breath would have wasted to a whisper in the thunderous discharges of this terrific artillery. It seems as the dissolution of the elements. I have no thought of escape, but with unaccountable presence of mind hastely draw a large cloak of oiled silk close about my head and shoulders, and fall flat upon the thin shelf of lava-rock, that supports me above the pool of fire. Once more the earth shakes and trembles, and the sea is swallowed up with a shriek that seems to "crack Heaven's dome" and I find my shell of earth lifted upon a wave of seething lava, a myriad slender claws of violet flame clinging and clutching about its edge, as though some monster were seeking to devour me.

Then cycles and cycles of agony as I toss upon this waste of fire. How often I pray for death I know not; it is my constant utterance, my very breath is prayer. I wrestle with the angel of death till he bless me: I wrestle till out of the shining sky—I seem roofed in arch after arch of gold, and every cloud is filled with the gorgeous glitter of a million sparks. I drift in a boistrous sea of blazing billows under a shower of stars—yet out of that shining sky a white dove flies and hushes me with its wings, wet, thank God, wet with rains—in that dew my fate is sealed, my faith finds footing and is centered upon the rock. That Heavenly dove brings peace, and hope descends upon me with that spirit holy.

I am not all alone, close beside me crouches my native boy in mute frenzy. I strive to awaken him; through the thin glaze of my silken mask I see him lying as one dead, while all about us I behold the world as in the first day of creation—"Let there be light and there was light"—but without form and void, only the ineffable lustre of pure light.

My fortunate cloak of silk in several folds shelters my eyes from the too intense glare, had it not been for this they had shrivelled in their sockets before now. I cannot tell how long we are thus tantalized. We seem to drift from side to side without aim, one current sweeping us forward with frightful velocity till another crosses it, when we spin in sickening circles or whirl about, banging upon the horrible rim of some pit of hell. Yet this seems almost a relief, for down there is shadow and some relief from the scorching glare about us—even the dreadful chasm is a comfort to us.

Seeing my companion surviving, I hail his returning reason as another good omen and strive to urge him toward me, I being upon a slight elevation of the little island, and he just below me, with no support or shelter if the ark should be turned violently by the waves.

He looks at me with a bewildered stare and will not join me. Again I beseech him to endeavor to save himself, but at this moment our last frail hold on life is snapped as we strike violently upon some rock of adamant that has survived the war of the elements, and the broken fragments settle in the fluid that supports us. I remember how I saw the huge cakes of hardened lava elevate themselves for their final plunge and instinctively climb to the higher edge of our shell of safety. When turning to my fellow voyager, I see—O, God! that writhing form drop suddenly into the waves. A shrill cry that stabs me through and through, an arm waving like the palm in the wild gales of the sea, one look that photographed its unutterable agony of supplication on my memory for all eternity—and I am alone.

Now the frail shell strives with me, it casts itself against the rock to shatter and go to pieces. It seeks to throw me off, quivering and reeling I swing and whirl in the vortex. It is a battle for life now, and the odds were mine till the thin raft that holds me, rises on the crest of one immense billow of liquid heat—and—God! I can not longer hold upon the white rim of my flotilla. It sears my flesh and gnaws into nerve and bone till the glowing mass falls over to my death.

If it had swallowed me—if it had rolled over against my death-chamber—how could I tell you of it now? Those that found me—or what was left of me after that terrible tide had receded—there on the bank where I had been cast can tell you all. If the small hand of Madaline did pen this for me, it is because my own right arm is a dead limb, worthy to be cut off and cast away. If tears come now as I think of my strange delivery, of that awful night and this merry morning, it may be the sad eyes are not wholly spoiled and blinded. If Madaline may no longer brush back the locks of youth, so brown and silky, she will adjust tenderly the knit cap that shelters the bare, bold forehead, and the great scars are covered. Then Madaline cares not for fringing lashes, and a lacking eyebrow or two are easily forgiven.

What is easier than my sitting chair that extends and stretches itself for my lying down, and is broad armed and worthy to be called table, also.

Who would have limbs for leaping or eyes for seeing, has not my Madaline for life, and love which is better than life—while time shall be?

And the secret of my strength in weakness is faith—the faith that casts out fear, and is mighty to move mountains.

Yet some are dangerously trustful. They put their faith in the listening ear that hears willingly the young ravens cry. In the quick love of Him, by whom no sparrow falleth unattended.

Do they forget the utter helplessness of the small fledglings, or remember how the elder bird is driven forth on swift wings to look about her? Their call restrains not ever, the sharp wind, nor brings to light the seed and morsel on which they feed.

Now is this Christmas Roast most savory and good, while Madaline may feed me, and the thought of the sad past shall not destroy me with so great a present pleasure. Being thus closely shorn still are the winds tempered to me as the unscathed heart in this ruined body joins prayers with Madaline to tell you.

PERIGNIS.

SEMME'S paper, in Mobile, like the private Alabama, has gone under.

[For the Californian.]

THE BUILDER.

A builder once planned him a house for his rest,
A house for his joys 'mid the passage of years,
Such an one as all mortals are striving to gain,
That we often are building with toiling and tears.

"Ah! when," quoth the builder, "this dwelling is done,
I'll rest 'neath its roof-tree in happy content;
And still he toiled on for the good was to come,
And gave up his days on this labor intent.

The toiler waxed old and his sinews grew weak,
Yet the walls were unfinished, still something remained,
To make this fair structure fully complete,
A crown to his life and a blessing attained."

Said the builder, "my task is quite near its end,
And soon I shall reap the fruits of my life,
To-morrow I'll rest, and begin to enjoy,
Just rewards of my wisdom, and labor, and strife."

Old Time passing by caught the words from his lips,
And swung wide his scythe—'twas trenchant and keen.
And asked where his harvest was all hoarded up,
Or good fruits of toiling were garnered or seen.

Youth Time, "you are striving for uncertain things,
Preparing to live, yet pray tell me when?
The house you are building through ages may last,
But man's years are counted by three score and ten.

Were it not better far to strive for the joy
You plant in the hope you may live to reap,
Than build up frail temples my fingers destroy,
Which you do not use, and never shall keep?"

And Time passed along, and the builder that heard,
Laid aside his worn garments, whose texture was clay,
And walking with Time to the lands spread before,
Left others to reap where he sped away. X—X.

[For the Californian.]

MY SHIP HAS COME FROM SEA.

LONG, long my ship has helplessly been drifting
Upon tempestuous seas,
No steersman at her helm, and never lifting
A white sail to the breeze.

For on the crew, and chiefly on the Master,
There is a fearful spell,
Floating them on to danger and disaster—
Drifting them on to hell!

Awake, O Master, from thy lethal slumbers!
Resume the ship's control!
Shake off the direful spell that so encumbers
And overwhelms thy soul!

Bring back my ship from off the stormy waters
On which she toils in vain!
Bring back to me and to my wife and daughters
Our happiness again!

* * * * * * * *

At last—O Lord, I thank thee for this presage
Of thy great love divine!
This day—O blessed!—I have received a message;
My ship is coming!—Mine!—

Far o'er the wave I see her white sails flashing
Bright in the noonday sun;
I fancy I can hear the ripples plashing,
As she moves grandly on·

Swiftly, with graceful and majestic motion,
She cleaves the foaming sea.
Bearing from the far dreary waste of ocean
Old hopes and loves to me.

Hasten, O ship, with joy for me full freighted,
From off the treacherous main!
Full long in anguish I have watched and waited
Till thou return again.

Now through the Golden Gate she proudly passes,
And still pursues her way
Where the stout fortress of the Alcatraces
Grimly o'erlooks the bay.

And on, with flag at peak and pennants flying
She keeps her glad career,
Till, her dread voyage over, she is lying
At rest beside her pier.

Welcome, O ship! Henceforth shall care and sadness
Be strangers unto me,
My misery now is turned to joy and gladness—
My ship has come from sea!

JOHN CLERK.

WHEN?

Something in either heart unspoken
Only a glance of the tell-tale eyes—
Of Love's dear secret a startling token,
Given by a witness that never lies!

Then we parted, his brave ship sailing
Over the breakers, thro' mist and rain;
Autumn winds round the black cliffs wailing,
Night's wild longing—day's weary pain.

Winter is past, but my heart is breaking,
Summer is coming over the sea;
All things living to new life waking—
When will my lover come back to me?

CHICAGO has a population of 264,000 inhabitants, as near as can be ascertained.

[For the Californian.]

STREET CROSSINGS.

EDITORS OF CALIFORNIAN — Sirs: There seems to be a total ignorance or neglect, or both, of the laws and customs concerning street crossings. I do not recollect ever to have read them or to have heard them stated. Yet they may exist in some recognised and available form, and if so, anyone who would collate and make them public, would confer a general benefit. It is very trite to say that our comfort depends most upon small things, and to preach upon that text would make an endless sermon. Yet how many of us practieally ignore the maxim. I just escape a row or a fight by the skin of my teeth, almost every morning on the crossings, coming down town, because somebody don't know or don't care what propriety and politeness demands of him in crossing the street. Now this is one of the things I won't give up—especially in the morning—when some of my friends think that I am just the least bit in the world cross. So I walk firmly and stubbornly right into the face and arms of any comer who does not follow what I deem the true rule about crossing, nor will I budge one inch to the right or the left. I think it would be cowardly to do so, and of bad example to Mr. Public. At any rate I won't do it, and run all risk in carrying out my rule, even when it would be less trouble to intermit it.

Now I will give you some rules which I think are founded on good analogies and in common sense and ordinary politeness. If anybody can find good objections to any of them or suggest better ones, I hope he will do so. A little discussion in the papers would attract attention to this subject—would probably result in settling down to the right of the matter of street crossings.

RULES FOR PEDESTRIANS.

RULE 1st.—Each keeps to the right, except as modified by rules following.

RULE 2d.—The one who first steps upon the crossing has the right to keep his track to the other side of the street.

RULE 3d.—He who sees one already on one track on the opposite side, should take the other track.

RULE 4th.—Each is supposed to walk at the ordinary, reasonable gait.

RULE 5th.—If it should happen that two meet in the middle, for the reason that one has walked faster than the usual gait, that one should yield.

RULE 6th.—If from any disturbing circumstanees, (such as that the proper track is taken by another, etc.,) Rule 1st is violated then, the gait having been substantially the same, he should yield who is nearer the starting point—ie is not yet half way over.

RULE 7th.—If two are crossing at the same time from the same side, Rule 1st may be violated; ie, one may take the right and the other the left. So, if for any cause the proper track is blocked up, the other may be taken.

RULE 8th.—If two persons in company, take at the same time the two traeks, walking abreast and meet one from the other side, no matter at what point, one of them, (the politer one) should yield to the person coming from the other side.

RULE 9th.—If two, strangers to each other, take at the same time two tracks—as above in Rule 8th, then that one who is nearest the starting point, as in Rule 6th, should yield to the comer.

RULE 10th.—If a gentleman and lady are crossing as in Rule 8th, then the gentleman should yield to the comer—step behind the lady,

RULE 11th.—If a comer meets a gentleman and lady, as in Rule 10th, being on the same track with the lady, he should step on to the opposite track at the same moment that her attendant steps behind her.

RULE 12th.—A lady crossing alone should "take the right except in the cases excepted;" but the gentleman meeting her should in all cases yield.

RULE 13th.—As between ladies the same rules apply as between men.

I do not think of any more. The above are to be modified as kindness and politeness may demand in cases of children, the sick, infirm, aged persons, etc., etc. T. W. F.

A LADY, who keeps her eyes open, says she has examined all the latest fashion reports, and visited all the principal millinery stores to pick out a winter bonnet. She reports, as the result of her examinations, that there are now eighty-six different styles of bonuets, all fashionable, but that there is not one of them that a sensible lady, who wishes to guard herself against cold and neuralgia, would wish to wear; but then they all wear them, for "one might as well be out of the world as out of the fashion," you know.

THE ALEMANNIA BALL.—Platt's Hall presented a most brilliant appearance last Saturday night, when the Annual Masked Ball of the Alemannia took place. The floor was thronged with dancers in every imaginable variety of costume, while a fashionable assemblage of spectators crowded the galleries. The ball was a most sucessful one in every particular, and the next entertainment of the Alemannia will be looked forward to with pleasurable anticipation, by all who were present at Platt's Hall on Saturday night.

THE MOORISH GOLD.

BY JEAN INGELOW.

ALONG while ago, says the legend, when the dominion of the Moors was beginning to decline in Spain, it was rumored on a certain day, in Toledo, that the Christians were coming down in great force to besiege the city, and had vowed that they would desecrate the Mosque, and despoil it of its gold and jewels—that they would fight their way over the bridge of the Tagus, and bear away the choicest of its treasures from the great Alcazar of Toledo.

But a few days before these tidings arrived, a marvelous stupor had come upon the Moorish masters of the city; some said it was the heat, but they never cared for the heat before, since they came from a hotter region. They walked about, it is true, but it was slowly, and if any man crossed over the street, he held his hand to his forehead and sighed. A few were so faint that they lay down to rest on the steps of the Alcazar; they thought the scent of the pomegranate flowers oppressed them, though none had complained of this scent before. Others believed that it was a thin vapor which rose up in the heat from the glassy bosom of the Tagus, and spread out like steam above the highest roofs, making the sun look red and fiery.

In spite of this, says the legend, they set about defending themselves; and the danger being imminent, they shipped great store of costly merchandise, with jewels and gold, and coined money, on board their vessels, which lay in the Tagus, and sent them off, to the number of five, with orders to drop down the river, double the Cape St. Vincent, and sail up the Gaudalquiver, that their precious lading might be given over into the keeping of the Moorish King of Seville.

But alas, says the legend, of those five fair vessels, not one ever cast anchor before the walls of Seville, for a great wind took them, scattered and drove them northward as soon as they were clear of the Tagus, and it is supposed that four of the five foundered with their crews and their lading, for they were never heard of more.

It was supposed, so says the legend, but the Moorish masters of Toledo had little time to fret themselves for their sunken treasure, since that same week the plague appeared, and while the Christians were harassing them without, they lay in the still heat and perished in the streets by hundreds and by thousands within.

One vessel was left, and day after day in the wind and the storm she drove still further northward, and that strange lethargy had crept on board with the sailors, though now there was neither any heat, nor scent of pomegranate flowers, to plead as a reason for it. And now the cliffs of a great island were visible, and they said to themselves that they should never behold the sunny country of Spain any more, but be cast ashore at the end of the earth, in the kingdom of William the Norman.

Still the north wind raged, and the foaming billows broke—that was a long and fearful gale; some of the sailors died at the oar, but it was neither hunger nor toil that killed them; and when at last the wind dropped suddenly, and the vessel drifted on to a sandy shore, only three men sprang out from her. There were but three survivors, for the plague had come on board with them and their treasure.

These three men sprang ashore; they landed one coffer filled with gold, precious stones, and coined money. It was as much as their failing strength could do. The islanders fell back from them, for they had seen the dark faces of the dead Moors as they lay in the plague-stricken vessel. They did not molest the sailors, but let them sit alone on the shore bemoaning their fate till night came on, and their vessel at high tide drifted out again to sea, while these three desolate men took up the coffer and went inland, up and up, among the Cumberland hills.

It was as much as they could carry, but no one cared to help. They wandered about among the mountains, and the last time they were seen, it was apparent that they had hidden their treasure in some cavern, or sunk it in the earth, or heaved a stone upon it, for the coffer was gone. Soon after, the men disappeared also; but whether they perished among the rocks, or died of the plague, none could tell; but though many and many a cavern has been searched, and many a stone displaced, from that day to this, says the legend, no man has ever set eyes upon the glittering Moorish gold.

PROJECTED DEPARTURE.—Professor George T. Evans, who has for so many years held a high position in the musical profession in this city, has received the offer of a highly lucrative engagement in New York, and will probably start for the East during the early part of next month. Professor Evans has for so long a time been identified with the progress of music in this State, that it is to be presumed, that his brothers in the art—and the public—will join in an expression of their appreciation of his efforts, and speed him on his way by giving him a benefit at an early day.

YALE has seven hundred students, forty-four professors and tutors,, and a demonstrator.

THE ADVANTAGE OF SELF-SUFFICIENCY.

IN these days we hear much speculation as to what ought to be the concrete object of a man's worship. For my part I think he has not far to seek. I recommend him to worship neither father nor mother, nor silver nor gold, nor yet woman. Let him worship himself; and that he may do this heartfully and efficiently, my advice to him is carefully to cultivate a reasonable amount of self-ignorance.

Who was the shallow thinking blockhead who first gave tongue to the popular fallacy as to the value of self-knowledge? Infinitely wiser was the Scotchman, whose daily prayer was for a good conceit of himself. Thrice happy is the man, the dimness of whose intellectual vision has never inflicted on his self-love the mortification of feeling that he has on any occasion been prosy, obstinate, or illogical; that others were most justly entitled to laugh at him, and that most assuredly they are not likely to neglect to avail themselves of their privilege.

If it has ever occurred to you, having regard to the sublime self-ignorance of every man and woman with whom you are acquainted, to speculate curiously as to the possibility of that "I," that veritable Ego, which has for so many years been the object of its own veneration and tender solicitude, being worthy, on a general estimate of its attributes, of having that epithet applied to it which it has, in its day, so liberally applied to others, and being in fact "an ass"—if such, I say, has been your unwholesome habit, let me entreat you to give it up. Cease for an instant to speculate upon the possibility of your being all unknown to yourself, as prosy as Tomkins, as ill-bred as Jones, as illogical as White, as irritable as Black. This kind of thing will never do in this world. It may be well for a man that he should have sufficient clearness of intellect to have a reasonable perception of his own moral blunders, provided his general self-esteem be robust enough not to be seriously impaired by the sight. But it behoves us to be careful. Doses of self-knowledge must be taken as cautiously as drops of morphia; an over-dose may poison. Don't we all know how many men, making money and reputation, living happily on the best terms with themselves, to whom a few extra grains of self-knowledge would infallibly prove fatal, and reduce to incompetence? To have ability and to know the fact may be an excellent and very effective thing, but to have profound self-reliance without any ground whatever, is often even more effective.

Infinitely subtle is the essence of this profound self-faith which one sees and envies in some men. How charming must it be to feel convinced that all one says and does is said and done as well as, nay better than, anyone else can say or do it! The moral power which enables a man to bully the world is not unfrequently bestowed by impartial nature as compensation for her frugality in other mental gifts; and a noble compensation it is. No effort of the will can generate the quality —or would not I have had it long ago!—nature alone can give it.

Visiting 'Change last winter in the town of Sillerton, in company of my friend Smart, who is a habitué of 'Change there, I felt my arm suddenly touched by my companion, who then asked me in a more reverential and awe-struck tone than I ever heard from him in church—"if I saw that man there —that man with the black frock coat, dark-grey trousers, and gold-headed cane." I replied that I noted the individual in question. "That," my friend then continued, in an awful whisper as though an archangel was in the room—"that is Joseph Brown. He is the richest man in Sillerton. Nobody knows what he is worth. I met him at dinner—sat next him in fact—one day last week." I gazed reverentially upon the great man, to the gratification of my friend.

Now, where a man has that which he knows to be the object of veneration to those around him, that he should possess the composure of genuine self-satisfaction is very intelligible. I should have been infinitely surprised had I found the great Joseph Brown weak in style or fussy in manner. He knows and feels that he is, as it were, a sun—the centre of a great system—diffusing light and heat to the many planets which revolve round him; these in their turn shedding a modified splendor upon the minor satellites which revolve round them.

No wonder, therefore, if Dives is calm and confident. But the puzzling phenomenon occurs when you see a man perfectly self-reliant upon literally nothing at all; when you see him not only attempting with perfect belief in his own power a work which another of ten times his special ability is too modest to try, but, in spite of ludicrous failure, persuading himself and nine-tenths of the world that he has done it admirably, and so reaping the substantial rewards of success. Instead of those men being "fools" who "rush in where angels fear to tread," I suspect they are really the wise ones of their species. They have fathomed the almost fathomless depth of the gullibility of mankind. Here is the secret of their faith, which after all rests on truth. They have a real living belief in the fact—and a mighty fact it is to work upon —that on points which do not visibly and directly affect their worldly interests, the multitude neither has any opinion nor the capacity to form one; but it will give its gold and applause to him who can speak the longest, loudest, and most confidently. Then the voice of the multitude gives such material weight to him who gets it in his favor, that even those who see through the imposition are obliged to feign belief—to read his books, buy his wine or his pills, under the pains and penalties of being held unconventional—severely to be punished as enacting treason against the solidarity of humanity.

You are thoroughly persuaded, most likely, that you are a very fair public speaker indeed. Cultivate this faith by all means. Do not trouble yourself with studying the laws of eloquence, as it is just possible that a fuller knowledge of them might unhinge you a little. So long as you are true to your faith, it will enable you after dinner to propose the health of the ladies or of the chairman in a way which will do you credit. No one will pause to reflect as to whether or not you are talking nonsense. A dim suspicion that you are, may perhaps be floating in the minds of a few sceptics. But so long as you don't think so yourself, you are quite safe. The most intrinsically excellent joke, if timidly uttered, will raise but a forced smile, while the worst—how bad that may be, heaven only knows—if it only flow forth merrily, doubting not of a good reception, will be welcomed with applause. The secret of eloquence is to have an audience that believes in you.

To my brother then I would say, "Know thyself wisely, but not too well;" that is if it is your ambition to do much, and the present generation has been led by its teachers to look with favor only on the man who does. Attend then to my maxims, you man, who wish to do—and howsoever great a blockhead you may be, fear not—with self-reliance you are safe. In fact, the self-sufficient blockhead, as regards practical effectiveness, has many advantages over the self-reliant clever man. Everyone makes room for audacious stupidity. Cover it with ridicule, what does it care? It never feels it, never sees it. You make way in a crowd for a chimney-sweep or a coal-heaver, should he insist on taking the wall of you. If you come into collision, you are both aware that he will blacken you, while at the point of contract you will relieve him of a little grime.

THE ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS IN 1631.

TO a geologist staying at Naples, Vesuvius is naturally the chief object of attraction. In 1631 this mount had practically been at rest for more than three centuries. The alleged eruption of 1500 and 1568 were probably nothing more than the shocks of an earthquake, and the volcano itself was generally considered to be extinct. Even the hollows in the crater, which up to the beginning of the sixteenth century had been resorted to by persons suffering under certain complaints for the sake of the hot vapors they exhaled, had closed up, and the crater presented the aspect of a vast amphitheatre covered with a dense vegetation. In circumference it measured a mile and a quarter, while its depth was not much less than a mile; and wherever the ray of the sun could reach, its sides were carpeted with herbage and strawberry plants, among which appeared at intervals lofty oaks and elms. The herdsmen led their cattle to pasture there, the peasants resorted thither for firewood and charcoal, and in its deepest recesses the wild boar made his occasional lair.

It is no wonder, therefore, that a population among whom even the tradition of an eruption had almost died out should have been blind to the natural warnings which even in the serene and cloudless days which marked the first half of December, 1631, gave some indication of the coming danger. Subterranean noises were heard, but they were attributed by the devout to the groans of the lost spirits to whose dwelling Vesuvius was believed to serve as a portal, and by the matter of fact to the struggles of an imprisoned stream seeking to makes its way to the surface. Probably, too, these noises, as well as the uneasy cries of cattle and the harsh screams of various birds, were largely magnified after the event. But we may wonder that more alarm was not excited by the discovery, five days before the eruption, that the bottom of the crater had risen almost to a level with its rim, while the vegetation had been almost destroyed, partly by the disturbance of the soil, and partly by the intrusion of large masses of bituminous mud. About sunrise, on Tuesday the 16th of December, the country people coming into market at Naples saw a sudden cloud of smoke rise above Vesuvius. The alarm was soon spread, and every point in the city which commanded a view of the mountain was speedily crowded with anxious gazers. Marked out against the clear morning sky was a compact mass of reddened smoke, which rose in majestic column till it reached the lower clouds, and then spread itself out in the form of a huge pine tree, which obscured the whole sky, except where it was relieved by the reflection of the darting flames which began to show themselves through the smoke. In the villages at the foot of the mountain the danger was more imminent, and the terror proportionately greater. At Torre Annunziata, the Prince and Princess Botera were the first to fly half-dressed from the place.

At Torre del Greco the inhabitants were not so well advised. At the first sight of the eruption, Cardinel Buoncompagno, who was staying there for his health, left the town and hurried to Naples. The Governor, Antonio di Luna, promptly took the same course, carrying with him twelve prisoners in chains. A great crowd of people followed him along the road in a state of frantic terror, while others rushed to the churches, to pray for mercy or to wait for death. When the fugitives reached Naples they found no entrance. The bridge nearest the city was guarded by soldiers, on the plea of fear of the plague. As soon as the Viceroy heard of this inhuman measure he had the troops withdrawn, but not before a considerable number of the unfortunate Torresians had returned home in despair.

At Naples the Viceroy had been actively exerting himself throughout the day. He dispatched a Commission to visit the scene of the eruption, and report whether the smoke would bring any contagion into the city. The afternoon was taken up with a religious procession which had been ordered by Cardinal Buoncompagno immediately on his return. The terror of the people was hourly increased by the darknes, the occasional convulsions of the earth, the peculiar sound emitted by the volcano, which was compared to the roaring of a hundred furnaces, and the constant reports so closely resembling the discharge of cannon that the commandants of some distant fortresses on the coast believed that there was a fight going on at sea. As the night approached, the wind changed, and a cloud of fine mineral ashes began to fall upon the city. At eight o'clock at night the Sanitary Commission returned to Naples. They had ventured as close to the mountain as the rain of cinders and red-hot stones would allow, and they came back with the news that the city was threatened with more immediate dangers than those of pestilence or contagion. Thereupon the Viceroy ordered the Governor of Torre del Greco to return at once to his duties, and dispatched a Spanish officer to Vesuvius, to watch the progress of the eruption. The horrors of the night which followed can hardly be adequately conceived. The rain of ashes descended without intermission, almost blinding those on whom it fell; every few minutes came a rumbling of the earth, which drove the inhabitants in terror from their houses, fearful lest they should be buried under the ruins; and the very darkness was made more terrible by the glare of the distant flames.

All this was but the prelude to the still greater distress of Wednesday, December 17th. About nine in the morning a huge mass of water burst from the side of Vesuvius and descended in three separate torrents upon the country lying to the north and west, and shortly afterward a similar inundation devastated the district between the mountain and the sea. An hour later the ashes had ceased to fall, but only to give the Neapolitans a clearer view of a vast mass of fire which descended from two separate sources toward the sea, at a rate of nearly a league an hour, swallowing in its resistless passage fields and woods and houses, animals and men. By noon the space between the mountain and the shore had been traversed, and through the darkness the watchers at Naples could see the still burning trees that had been carried into the waves, and gave the sea the appearance of being studded with the craters of submarine volcanoes.

In the meantime Don Antonio di Luna had returned to Torre del Greco early in the morning. He found the townspeople determinted to fly, but uncertain whether to turn their steps toward Naples or Castellamare. The Governor attempted to quiet the disorder that prevailed, but the precise orders given by him are differently reported. At all events much time was lost, and at eleven o'clock, when the lava was seen advancing on the town, nothing had yet been done. Stimulated into sudden action by this discovery, the Governor hastily assembled about a thousand persons, and made for the gate of the town leading toward Naples. They had nearly reached the gate when the lava burst across the street, and divided the band of fugitives in two parts. Those at the head of the column, which had already passed the dangerous spot, threw themselves into the Church of the Franciscans, and were saved. The Governor, and about, 150 others, who were in the rear, turned, and tried to escape in the opposite direction. It was too late. The lava overwhelmed them, together with about 500 persons who had preferred to await in two other churches the fate which they thought it useless to struggle against. The deserted Torre Annunziata shared in the same destruction, and across the whole space between the two towns passed other torrents, measuring in one case about 1,500 yards across, with a depth in some places of from twenty to thirty feet.

The worst was now over, and though Vesuvius continued in a state of active eruption throughout the winter, the great destruction had been already wrought. The inundations of the 16th, and the lava of the 17th, had overthrown more than forty towns and villages, and killed about 4,000 persons. At Torre del Greco six churches and more than two-thirds of the houses were destroyed. At Torre Annunziata only about fifteen houses were left standing. All the villages for miles around Vesuvious shwed similar traces of the visitation.

The latest Paris crinolino is in the shape of a coat-tail.

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the ekin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for and take none but LYON'S, bearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervation, listlessness, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaints they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedentary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spavin, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Strains, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westbrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky. and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off and turning gray, and promotes its growth upon prematurely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.

E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no other.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

DR. H. A. BENTON,

The ELECTRO-MAGNETIC PHYSICIAN, is now cosily fixed in his new quarters, over Congress Hall, Bush street, adjoining the Russ House, and is prepared to treat patients in all the best modes of curing. The Electro-Medicated and Hot Air Baths will do wonders in many cases, in breaking up obstructions, and if properly attended afterwards, will insure success.

BILLIARD TABLES.

JACOB STRAHLE IS DETERMINED TO FURNISH Billiard Tables cheaper, and on more reasonable terms than any other establishment on the Pacific coast, having secured repeated premiums for finish and durability of work, as well as for his latest styles of cushions. This shows conclusively that his tables are superior to any manufactured in the city. His manufactory is at 537 Sacramento street, near What Cheer House. *

JACOB SHEW & Co., No. 315 Montgomery street, near Pine, take First-Class Photographs, of all kinds, at the lowest scale of prices adopted by the Associated Photographers. Photographs retouched in the highest style of the art.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

JOHN GORMAN,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

No. 619 Merchant street,

Above Montgomery.....(South side.)

VAN VLECK & KEITH,

Designers and Engravers

ON WOOD,

No. 611 Clay street, San Francisco.

WM. KEITH. D. VAN VLECK.

MRS. G. M. NICHOLS,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY,

No. 661 Clay street, 2 doors below Kearney,

San Francisco.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,

Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

REMOVAL!

Wightman & Hardie's

DRY GOODS AND CARPET WAREHOUSE

HAS REMOVED

To No. 220 Sansome Street,

TWO DOORS SOUTH OF CALIFORNIA.

Removal.

D. J. OLIVER

Has removed from Washington street, to

HIS NEW BUILDING

ON THE

NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STREETS,

Where he offers for sale

THE LARGEST STOCK OF

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

101, 103 and 105 Front street. 110 Pine street.

Removal. Removal.

THE HOWE SEWING MACHINE AGENCY

HAS BEEN REMOVED TO

NEW STORE,

No. 137 KEARNY STREET, S. W. corner of Sutter.

PRESERVE YOUR SIGHT.

PERFECT SPECTACLES EXactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minute employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill-suited or common Spectacles.

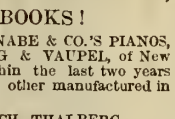
PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent pre-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.

Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Removal to Kearny Street.

FRISBEE & SCOTT,

IMPORTERS OF



Foreign and American Music,

AND MUSIC BOOKS!

Sole Agents for the Celebrated KNABE & CO.'S PIANOS, of Baltimore, and CALENBERG & VAUPEL, of New York. These Pianos have within the last two years reached a greater sale than any other manufactured in this country.

GOTSCHALK, STRAKOSCH, THALBERG,

And other celebrities, pronounce them SUPERIOR TO ANY OTHERS.

SALESROOM removed to 139 Kearny street below Sutter, San Francisco.

W. E. BRIDGE,

BLACK HAWK,

Livery and Sales Stables,

317 PINE STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome, San Francisco.

Carriages, Buggies and Good Saddle Horses for Hire or Sale on the most Reasonable Terms.

Particular attention paid to boarding Horses.

RUSSELL & HOLDING'S

EXCHANGE,

622 Market street, between Montgomery and Kearny.

THE FINEST WINES AND LIQUORS ARE dispensed at the Exchange.

All the British Columbia papers on file.

N. B.—A commodious BACK ROOM for the accommodation of customers is one of the feature of the establishment ☞Families supplied, and Goods delivered Free of charge.

WM. WORTHINGTON,

House and Sign Painter,

Dealer in

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,

735 Market street,

Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

R. A. THOMPSON,

DEALER IN

Coal and Charcoal,

816 and 818 Mission st., near the corner of Fourth,

SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. HAYDEN,

Dentist,

653 Clay street, between Kearny and Montgomery,

San Francisco.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON SEWING MACHINES,

AT THE CALIFORNIA STATE FAIR, 1866:

"To the President of the State Agricultural Society:

Your Committee on Sewing Machines beg leave to report that we have examined the Several Sewing Machines (The Grover & Baker, the Wheeler & Wilson, and the Florence,) on exhibition, and find that,

For General Family Use, The

IS THE BEST.

[Signed] J. N. ANDREWS,
THOS. C. McHALE,
L. ELKUS."

A Big Thing and no Humbug.

OF THE THOUSANDS OF COMPOUNDS BEFORE the public, "RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA' for the Hair, alone, does just what it promises.

Hon. Warren Chase, the Spiritualist Lecturer, says:

"My hair and whiskers have been many years gray. RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA has restored both to their original color, black, and covered the baldness on the top of my head with a fine growth of black hair I have several friends who have used it with the same results, and I cordially recommend it as one of the few medicines that will do what its labels and circulars claim for it. WARREN CHASE."

October, 1865

Call for RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA, and for your own pleasure and comfort do not be put off with anything else, "said to be just as good."

JOHN F. SNOW,
24 Post street, San Francisco,
Agent for the Pacific Coast.

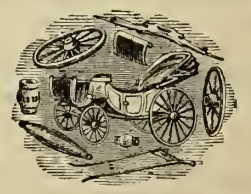
ALSO,

Coloring, Cleansing and Restoring of

FEATHERS, KID GLOVES, SILKS, FURS, WOOLENS, ETC.,

24 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny, SAN FRANCISCO.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco.

FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,

612 BATTERY STREET,

Between Jackson and Pacific, San Francisco,

Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements. Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description.

☞ All goods sold are warranted.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

611 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

BREAD AND MILK.

The incident I am about to relate I received from the lips of the principal actor when he was a venerable and most interesting gentleman. It is a story of his wayward boyhood, which he loved to tell because it reflected honor on a mother whom he delighted to honor.

One morning, Johnny (for that was his real name) came to the breakfast table and boldly said he would not eat bread and milk that morning.

"Very well, Johnny," answered his mother, quietly, and without raising her voice. "I'll set it on the high shelf. You can run off to school.

This run consisted of a long piece of road and then a long tramp through a wood, which gave Johnny ample time to call up all his spunk and to strengthen his determination not to give in.

Accordingly on his return he was already to assert the dignity of boyhood, and when he drew up to the table and saw the bowl of bread and milk set before him, he felt nerved to any desperate course, and decided to die rather than eat it.

"Very well, Johnny," was the mother's calm remark. "I'll set it on the high shelf till you want it," and a decided wave of the hand sent him from the table, and in due time he was bidden by an authority which he could not resist, to run off to school.

That run was not so spirited as the morning one had been. He felt "dreadful hollow," and had no relish for his usual sport of pretending to be chased by a bear, climbing, in fancied terror, a tree, running out on its horizontal branches and dropping to the ground only to gain another tree and accomplish the same feat of dexterity.

On the contrary, he felt a little like giving up, as he knew his mother never would, and admitted to himself that he should be glad of that bowl of bread and milk, and when he came dragging home at night, and the bowl was lifted down from the high shelf without a word of threatening or reproach, he pretty well understood the force of calm and persistant authority.

An Indiana Bride—A delicate little damsel of 250 lbs avordupois got married last week and went on a bridal tour to Marshalltown. The happy couple stopped at the Marshall house, and were assigned by the host to the bridal chamber of that hotel. The bedstead was bran new, and mounted on powerful castors. Very early the blushing bride hied her to the couch of love, and unrobing carefully, languidly threw her fairy form on the elegant new bed. Crack, squeak, squeak, cr-a-sh it went, and down came the "bride of an evening," breathless and scared upon the hard floor. The young husband, who waited outside with palpitating heart, rushed to his "itty darlin's" rescue in time to hear her exclaim: "Confound the cussed thing, it wouldn't hold a skeeter."

One morning, during the late war, an officer riding through the woods of North Alabama, was attracted by a tall, lank Alabamian, who seemed to be using his best endeavors to reach the top of a large hickory tree. Scarcely had he gained the summit, when, rapidly descending, he started up another one a few yards further off. This strange proceeding was continued at least a dozen times, the countryman climbing and descending one tree after another for nearly a quarter of a mile. The officer, at length overtaking him, inquired the cause of his eccentric gyrations. "Wall, stranger," he answered, "I was lyin' asleep under yon hickory, when a darned squirrel dropped a shellbark into my eye, I'm goin' to worry him. I'm goin' to worry him till he leaves the settlement, if I die in the attempt."

A feast of the imagination—When your stomach is empty and your pocket ditto, to sit down and read a cookery book.

Few men get their life-labor accomplished without some sore heartaches.

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
536 In this City,
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

MASONIC TEMPLE,
Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.
TO THE SICK!
Cures Without Medicines.
Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.
10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

A. J. PLATE,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
Guns, Rifles and Pistols.
Also,

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS, Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, &c., &c.,
NO. 411 SANSOME STREET,
Between Commercial and Sacramento Sts., San Francisco.
☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES AT PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

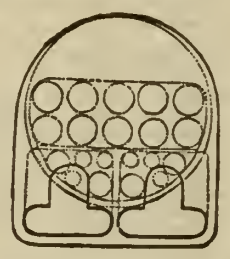
ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,
San Francisco, California.
STUDIES WILL BE RESUMED IN THE ABOVE INstitution on the 2d of January, 1867. The cost of Tuition and Board for the scholastic Year of from ten to eleven months will be only one hundred and seventy-five dollars ($175), and twenty-five dollars (25) for washing and mending of linen, etc. No extra charges of any kind, except for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars ($3) a month each. In case of withdrawal (except for sickness or parents leaving the country), the party will forfeit a Quarter Session, or the remaining portion of the Half Term. The Pension to be paid at least half yearly in advance; also, such sum to be deposited as will be sufficient to pay the traveling expenses of each student to his place of residence, and other contingent expenses, such as books, clothes, etc. No student will be received without such deposit. For further information application may be made to P. J. GREY, President.

WILLIAM BRODIE,
California Foundry,
FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,
San Francisco.
LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS
Of every description, made to order.
Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

TRUMP & BRADY,
No. 615 Market street,
In Basement of St. Lawrence House, opposite Montgomery,
STEAM AND GAS FITTING,
PLUMBING, Etc.
Gas Letters and Reflectors made to order. Ships, Stores, and Dwelling fitted up with Steam, Water and Gas Pipes, at the lowest rates.
Pumps Repaired, and all kinds of Jobbing done at the shortest notice.
All Work warranted, or no charges made.

MINERS' FOUNDRY
AND MACHINE WORKS,
FIRST STREET, between Howard and Folsom,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HOWLAND, ANGELL & KING,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Steam Engines,
MILL AND QUARTZ MACHINERY,
And Iron Castings of all kinds.

FULTON FOUNDRY & IRON WORKS
HINCKLEY & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
STEAM ENGINES,
Quartz, Flour and Saw Mills,
Mining Machinery, and all kinds of Iron and Brass Castings,
45, 47 AND 49 FIRST STREET
Between Market and Mission—San Francisco.
BRODIE'S IMPROVED
QUARTZ-CRUSHER.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.


Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.
MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF
HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS
Manufactured.
The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.
All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.
D. CAMERON.

PIONEER WORKS.
KITTREDGE & LEAVITT,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Fire Proof Doors and Shutters,
Bank Vaults, Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc,
Corner Fremont and Market street, San Francisco.
Constantly on hand a large assortment of Second Hand Fire Proof Doors and Shutters.
Also, manufacture to order the California Burglar and Fire-Proof Safe, with the Burglar's Lock invented by Mr. W. C. Bussey, of Jackson, Amador county, Cal. No Key required to open this Safe. It is done by Mathematical Calculation. Call and examine for yourselves, at our Works,
THIS LOCK PUT ON SAFES NOW IN USE

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.
All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.
Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.
JOSEPH H. WEED,
V. KINGWELL.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Stell, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Shermau, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market.
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts. 206 Front, cor Cal.
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 220 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnmyr & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmanu's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Sguarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldhush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery.

WOOD AND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

LINES TO A SKELETON.

Fifty years ago, the London Morning Chronicle published a poem entitled "Lines on a Skeleton," which excited much attention. Every effort, even to the offering of a reward of fifty guineas, was vainly made to discover the author. All that ever transpired was that the poem, in a fair clerkly hand, was found near a skeleton of remarkable beauty of form and color, in the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, Lincoln's Inn, London, and that the curate of the museum had sent them to Mr. Perry, editor and proprietor of the Morning Chronicle.

Behold this ruin! 'Twas a skull,
Once of ethereal spirit full;
This narrow cell was life's retreat,
This space was thought's mysterious seat,
What beauteous vision filled this spot!
What dreams of pleasure long forgot!
Nor hope, nor joy, love, nor fear,
Have left one trace of record here.

Beneath this mouldering canopy
Once shone the bright and busy eye;
But start not at the dismal void;
If social love that eye employed—
If with no lawless fire it gleamed,
But through the dew of kindness beamed—
That eye shall be forever bright,
When stars and sun are sunk in night.

Within this hollow cavern hung
The ready, swift and tuneful tongue.
If falsehood's honey it disdained,
And where it could not praise, was chained;
If hold in virtue's course it spoke,
Yet gentle concord never broke,
This silent tongue shall plead for thee
When time unveils eternity.

Say, did those fingers delve the mine?
Or with it envied rubies shine?
To hew the rock or wear the gem
Can little now avail to them?
But if the page of truth they sought,
Or comfort to the mourner brought,
These hands a richer meed shall claim
Than all that wait on wealth or fame.

Avails it whether, bare or shod,
These feet the depths of duty trod?
If from the halls of ease they fled
To seek Affliction's humble shed?
If Grandeur's guilty bride they spurn'd,
And honor to Virtue's cot return'd,
These feet with angel's wings shall vie,
And tread the palace of the sky.

They have a curious specimen of human nature in North Carolina. Everybody remembers the celebrated "Cousin Sally Dillard case," and here is one recently reported which, is not far behind it. The writer gives it under the head of LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

Action for work and labor done in cutting a ditch on defendant's land. Plea: "Payment and set off, in bacon and corn meal."

"Plaintiff's son on the stand—Recollects the ditching perfectly, but seems to forget all about the bacon.

"You say your daddy did all this work? Do you know what he got for it?" inquired the attorney for the defendant.

"He got nothing for it, as I ever heard on that's what he never got," answered the witness.

"Didn't your daddy get corn and bacon from the defendant in pay for ditching?"

"Never heard of his getting no corn nor bacon."

"What did your daddy and family live on last Summer?"

"Vittles, mostly."

"What sort of victuals?"

"Well, meat and bread, and sometimes whisky."

"Well, where did you get that meat and bread?"

"Well, first from one an then from another."

"Did he not get some of it from the defendant?"

"He mought."

"I know that he mought, but did he, that's the questisn."

"Well he mought, and then, you know, he moughtn't."

With considerable excitement and in tones of thunder—

"Answer the question, and no more of this trifling with your oath. Did your daddy or did he not get corn and bacon from the defendant for ditching?"

"Well, now he mought; it didn't occur zactly, you know."

Here his honor interposed, and with a stern judical frown addressed the witness thuswise—

"Witness, you must answer the question, or the court will be compelled to deal severely with you. Can you say yes or no?"

"I recon."

"Well, then, answer yes or no. Did or did not your daddy get corn or bacon from the defendant at the time referred to?" inquired the court.

Witness, now fully aroused, and conscious of his danger—

"Well, Judge, I can't edzactly remember, you know, seeing as how it is all dun been gone and eat up, but," planting himself firmly, as one determined to out with it, "to the best of my reckerleckshun, if my memory serves me right he mought." Verdict accordingly.

California Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connectiug with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B M. HARTSHORNE, President.

Pacific Mail Steamship Co.'s Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

The following steamships will be despatched on dates as given below:

STEAMRES FOR JANUARY.

January 30th—CONSTITUTION, Captain J. M. Cavalry, connecting with NEW YORK, Captain Gray.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

Opposition to New York

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER
AMERICA,
WILL SAIL FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua,
From MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on FRIDAY, - - JANUARY 25, 1867,
Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship
NICARAGUA,
(2500 tons) For NEW YORK.

The MOSES TAYLOR will sail on February 15th.

For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco

Preserve Your Sight.

PERFECT SPECTACLES exactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minute employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill suited or common Spectacles.

PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent pre-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.

Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Italian Manufactory

FIRST PREMIUM 1857 — 1858 — 1864 — 1865

OF

MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,
PASTE & FARINA.
(706 Sansome St. 706)
SAN FRANCISCO.
BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & Co.

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE

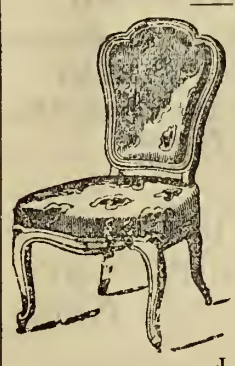
At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO.



WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth; and Main street, Stockton.

Great Triumph!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

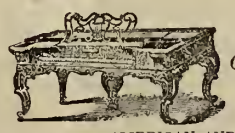
M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

New Music Store.

WAREROOMS OF CHICKERING & SON'S

Piano-Fortes.



MASON & HAMLIN'S

CABINET ORGANS,

AMERICAN AND FIREIGN

Sheet Music,

VIOLIN AND GUITAR STRINGS,

Musical Instruments and Music Merchandise, Wholesale and Retail, at Lowest Rates.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO,
421 Montgomery street, next door to A. Roman & Co.,
San Francisco.

Woodward's Gardens,

Art Gallery, Museum,

CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,

On Mission and Valencia streets.

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS.

Martha Washington Hair Restorer.

THIS IS A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY, and stands above comparison with any other article for the Hair ever brought before the public.

A PERFECT

Hair Restorer and Hair Dresser

BOTH COMBINED IN ONE.

First—It is not a Dye.
Second—Will not Color the Skin.
Third—Will restore Gray Hair to a beautiful Black, Brown, Auburn, or whatever might have been its original color, and cause it to assume its former beauty.
Fourth—Will cure all Humors and Diseases of the Scalp.
Fifth—Will remove Dandruff and Scurf from the head, and keep the hair moist and silk like in its appearance as in youthful days.
Sixth—Will promote a healthy growth.
Seventh—Will prevent it from falling off, and cause it to grow on bald heads where there is life and vitality at the roots, but where these are gone there is no hope of success.
Eighth—The best testimony that can be given will be found inside of each bottle.

Warranted to do all we claim for it, or the money refunded after using two bottles. Try it and be convinced.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Price.....One Dollar.

SIMONDS & CO., Proprietors,
Fitzwilliam, N. H.
REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

Stop That Coughing.

SOME OF YOU CAN'T, AND WE PITY YOU. You have tried every remedy but the ONE destined, by its intrinsic merit, to supersede all similar preparations It is not surprising you should be reluctant to try something else after the many experiments you have made of trashy compounds foisted on the public as a certain cure. but

NEWELL'S

PULMONARY SYRUP

is really the VERY BEST remedy ever compounded or the cure of Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Consumption. Thousands of people in California and Oregon have been already benefited by the surprising curative powers of

NEWELL'S PULMONARY SYRUP,

and with one accord give it their unqualified approbation. We now address ourselves to all who are unacquainted with this, the greatest Panacea of the age, for the healing of all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, assuring you that has cured thousands, and it will cure you if you try it. This invaluable medicine is pleasant to the taste, soothing, healing and strengthening in its effects; entirely free from all poisonous or deleterious drugs, and perfectly harmless under all circumstances.

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

Certificates from many prominent citizens of San Francisco accompany every bottle of

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco

Redington's Flavoring Extract

ARE MADE FROM FRESH FRUITS. Each bottle holds twice as much as any other brand in the market, consequently they are the cheapest and the best. USE NO OTHER.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Agents for the Pacific Coast

Redington & Co.'s Essence of Jamaica Ginger.

THIS VALUABLE PREPARATION, containing in a highly concentrated form all the properties of the Jamaica Ginger, has become one of the most popular domestic remedies for all diseases of the stomach and digestive organs.

As a tonic it will be found invaluable to all persons recovering from debility, whether produced by fever or otherwise, for whilst it imparts to the system all the glow and vigor that can be produced by wine or brandy, it is entirely free from the reactionary effects that follow the use of spirits of any kind.

It is also an excellent remedy for females who suffer from difficult menstruation, giving almost immediate relief to the spasms that so frequently accompany that period.

It gives immediate relief to Nausea, caused by riding in a railroad car, or by sea-sickness, or other causes.

It is also valuable as an external application for Gout Rheumatism, Neuralgia, etc.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast

THE SHOWMAN'S SICK CHILD.

A DOCTOR'S DILEMMA.

Dr. Lemoine is one of the most courtly and affable of Paris physicians. A few days ago he was called upon by an athletic, ruddy personage, who certainly seemed in no individual need of the distinguished doctor's advice; the latter, too, in kind effort to reassure his embarrassed visitor, addressed him with his usual politeness and condescension.

"Monsieur, I am the proprietor of a menagerie," said the square-shouldered man, "and one of my children is sick——"

"Exactly, my friend. Of what nature is the disease?"

"He ran a splinter into his thigh; it is very ugly monsieur, but I am rich enough to pay well."

"Very well, my man," replied the doctor unable to suppress a smile at the simplicity of his visitor, "we will talk of that after awhile. Tell me explicitly what is the matter with your child."

"Monsieur, the splinter has festered in his thigh, and he will let no one touch it; he is headstrong—for all he is very gentle. It will be necessary, I know, to perform a slight operation—but he is so violent and headstrong about it."

"Leave his violence to me. How old is he?"

"Four years only. But I am afraid he will bite or scratch you if you attempt to touch it. You must administer chloroform."

"Not at all, my good man. Your child cannot be very dangerous in the exercise of his temper if he is only four years old."

"But he is very large for his age——"

"No, no; I will go with you to see your boy. It were folly to administer chloroform in such a case."

"But, monsieur, you do not know him so well as I," continued the man, importunately. "I pray, I beseech you to take the chloroform all the same, in case you should need it."

To dispel the anxieties of the nervous athlete, Dr. Lemoine carried with him the required anæsthetic, and, after a short course in a voiture arrived at the house of the beast-tamer. Entering the room adjoining the exhibition arena, which was half kitchen and half stable, the doctor looked around for the suffering patient.

"I have put him up stairs, doctor, where the poor fellow would be undisturbed by the performances. Ascend with me, please."

They mounted and entered the room, the showman closed the door behind him and locked it. The doctor, turning in surprise at this strange proceeding, was saluted with a low growl from the extreme corner of the room, and descried a full grown lion slowly approching them, with an unquestionably wicked and menacing snarl upon his countenance! The dompteur (beast-tamer) grew pale; and when he addressed some soothing brute language to the animal, his voice trembled. The doctor was not only ghastly pale, but was covered with a cold sweat.

"For God's sake, doctor, be quick!" whispered the beast-tamer, hoarsely; "he is ugly to-day!"

Still showing his white teeth, the lion slowly crouched in that attitude which the physician had so often observed the same species assume, preparatory to a spring, in the menagerie, of the Jardin des Plants. He had need then of self-possession, and, collecting all his energies, he dashed some chloroform which he held, in the animal's face. The latter recoiled, and in a second after began to droop under the effects of the drug. This enabled a still further administration of it, till he was finally stretched powerless before them. The operation required was then made upon the wound.

Neither doctor nor showman spoke a word until they had descended the steps, and stood safely in the room below.

"Monsieur," said the dompteur, "you have saved, by your wonderful presence of mind, a life whose value is incalculable to me. Permit me to give you your fee." And he handed the other a hundred franc note.

"Thank you, Mons. Dompteur," replied the physician, receiving the satisfactory fee, "and when you again have need of my services for a similar case, I pray you——"

"I will certainly call you in."

"No, no—to summon some other member of the profession."

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

DO

YOU

WANT ANY

Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

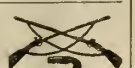
No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc, Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc

WILSON & EVANS,



No. 513 Clay street,

Importers and Dealers in

FIREARM O EVERY DESCRIPTION,

SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Ponches, Eley's Caps, Wads, and all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing-Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Linen and Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.

WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY

NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warranted to give satisfaction.

WILSON & EVANS.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

No. 224 Montgomery street,

Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,

San Francisco.

B. MACKAY,

ARCHITECT,

NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.

H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel.

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND

IN USE

THE ORIGINAL P. P. STEWART'S, FUEL SAVING

Air-Tight Cooking Stoves,

FOR WOOD OR COAL.

IMPROVED IN 1861;

WITH NEW AND EXTRA LARGE FLUES, AND BY THE ADDITION OF THE CELEBRATED PATENT DOUBLE-SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.

Attention is Invited to the following Points of Superiority:

1. DURABILITY.—Lasting, with proper care, at least twenty years. Stoves are now in use that were set up in 1838.

2. MANUFACTURE.—Every portion of the Stove is thoroughly constructed. Each Stove is submitted to a critical test, and none leave our works unless completely and perfectly finished.

3. CAPACITY.—Baking, Boiling, Roasting, and all other culinary operations performed at the same time.

4. ECONOMY.—Saving the cost of the Stove in one year in the cost of fuel.

5. VENTILATION OF OVEN.—In the Stewart Stove alone, the front doors open directly into the oven, (protected by letters patent) securing a direct draft through the top of the oven by means of perforated holes in the doors and back flues. It will be borne in mind that, as the heated air always rises, this method of ventilation is the only one of any value whatever.

6. ENTIRE CONTROL OF HEAT.—The heat generated by the Stove may be held therein and used or thrown into the room at pleasure.

7. THE DOUBLE SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.—By which a compressing and inverting action of heat is obtained, and the oven more evenly and efficiently heated than by any other known invention.

9. HOT WATER RESERVOIR AND WARMING CLOSET.—Both useful and convenient, supplied by the waste heat and without extra fuel.

10. WATER BACK.—An arrangement for supplying hot water for the bath-room equal to any range.

 Beware of numerous imitations in the market, many of which resemble the "Stewart" only in appearance, and none of them possess any of its peculiar qualities.

See that the name of P. P. STEWART is on each Stove. None other genuine.

For sale by CALEB M. SICKLER,

422 Kearny street,

Between California and Pine, San Francisco.

Repairs for Stewart's Stoves constantly on hand.

Splendid Presents

TO SEND ABROAD.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS

.....OF.....

California Scenery!

A SERIES OF OVER

ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!

ILLUSTRATING

The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.

PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,

And Published by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 & 319 Montgomery Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, - - - Petaluma.

EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

GROCERIES AT WHOLESALE PRICES, IN LOTS TO suit family trade, at

HASKELL & BUCKELEW'S,

514 Market street.

N. P. COLE & CO.,

WHOLESALE

Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM

PRICE 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.

PRICE 50 CENTS.

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,

Cor Sansome & Commercial streets.

Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicides, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE OF POTASS.

THE

Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,

N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

TIME & LABOR SAVED BY USING

Standard Soap Company's

CELEBRATED

WASHING POWDER.

This Powder is superior to all soaps or compounds for Washing and Cleaning.

It is made of pure material, and contains nothing whatever that will injure the finest fabric. Equally as good for Hard or Soft Water. No Soap ever required to be used with it. One pound will make three gallons of beautiful Soft Soap. It is put up in wrappers of one pound each, and in boxes of ten pounds bulk, with Directions. Get a package from your grocer and test its virtue.

Sold by all Grocers. See and get none but STANDARD SOAP CO'S.

MANUFACTURED AT 207 COMMERCIAL STREET, San Francisco.

☞ Standard Soap Company also manufactures superior Pale, Chemical Olive and Detersive Soap, which they sell at the Lowest Market Prices.

WILLIAM TRUMBULL,

Manufacturer of

Saddles, Harness and Collars,

North-west corner Davis and Commercial streets.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

A good assortment, made from the best Materials, in the highest style of Workmanship, constantly on hand.

Manufacturing and Repairing done promptly, on reasonable terms. ☞ Country Trade solicited.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,

Practical Card and Seal Engraver,

AND PLATE PRINTER,

No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware.

Main street, Petaluma.

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,

238 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Capital fully paid in Gold Coin.....$500,000 00
Surplus, April 30, 1866..... 154,824 57

Total Assets.....$654,824 57

REDUCTION IN RATES.

THE TARIFF OF RATES HERETOfore established by the Board of Fire Underwriters being virtually suspended, this Company are prepared to take desirable risks at such Reduced Rates as are consistent with the security of both Insurer and Insured.

D. J. STAPLES,
Vice President.

CHAS. R BOND, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.

OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL

Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

GREAT WESTERN

Life Insurance Company.

OF NEW YORK.

STOCK and MUTUAL

The Security of the Stock Plan, with all the Advantages of the Mutual System.

POLICIES AND DIVIDENDS ARE NON-FORFEITABLE.

Thirty Days Grace for Payment of Premiums.

J. W. BRUMAGIN.
General Agent for California,
Office 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

DR. FONDA SAN FRANCISCO

EYE INFIRMARY,

PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUsively for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.

P. W. FONDA, M. D.,
Surgeon in charge Infirmary,
223 Kearny street between Bush and Sutter.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,

(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)

NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,

From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.

Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of

Asphaltum Work,

Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,

LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

OSACSA JAPAN TEA. A FRESH LOT, IN 5 LB. boxes, just imported, by HASKELL & BUCKELEW,
514 Market street.

RHEUMATISM CAN BE CURED

BY USING

Healy's Rheumatic Liniment,

Which is warranted to cure the most obstinate cases of CHRONIC OR INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.

It relaxes the muscles, removes the pain, and restores health and vigor to the system.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb 6, 1866.

MR. HEALY—Dear Sir: Having witnessed many cures effected by your Rheumatic Liniment, I take great pleasure in universally recommending it to those in search of a really good article.

Yours, &c., FRANK V. SCUDDER.

MR. FRANK HEALY: I suffered considerable rheumatic pains in both shoulders for a long time. I tried many remedies to get relief, but to no purpose. I was advised to try a bottle of "Healy's Rheumatic Liniment," which I did, and it has greatly relieved me. I am now using the second bottle, and am confident that in a few days I shall be well.

Yours, &c., R. PAGE,
316, Montgomery street.
San Francisco, Feb, 9, 1866.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 13, 1866.

To F. HEALY: I have heard much and seen practical proofs of your Liniment, and I endorse all you claim for it. L. GOETZ,
335, 337, Pine street.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 12, 1866.

Dear Sir: I have used the bottle of Liniment you sent me, and it has done me good. Please send me another. WM. HORR,
718, Battery street

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT is for sale by all Druggists on the Pacific coast.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Wholesale Agents, CRANE & BRIGHAM, and R. H. McDONALD & Co., SAN FRANCISCO.

AGENTS WANTED TO CANVASS FOR THE only official Southern History of the War. THE LOST CAUSE, by E. A. Pollard, the popular Historian of the South, and editor of the Richmond Examiner during the war. Complete in one large royal octavo volume, with

24 FINE STEEL PORTRAITS,

giving a full and authentic account of the rise and fall of the late Southern Confederacy. Written under the encouragement of Generals R. E. Lee, Johnston, Beauregard and others. The work is being liberally patronized by leading men of all classes, eager to hear

"THE OTHER SIDE,"

and thus arrive at the truth of history, which it is impossible to do from the many histories written only from a Northern stand-point.

'Agents and the public are cautioned against any other work purporting to be this one. To energetic men and women a rare chance is offered to make money. Don't fail to send for circulars of this great and important work. Adddress

F. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS W. SUTHERLAND, deceased.

It appearing to the said Court by the petition this day presented and filed by Alexander R. Baldwin, the Administrator of the estate of Thomas W. Sutherland, deceased, praying for an order of sale of Real Estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the Real Estate to pay the charges and expenses of administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 12th day of February A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of said day at the Court room of said Probate Court at the City Hall, in said city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated January 10th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK
Of the City and County of San Francisco, } ss.

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true, full and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 10th day of January A. D. 1867

WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
J. F. HUTTON, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. j12 5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

LUCY J. PRINCE, Plaintiff, vs. LOUIS M PRINCE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LOUIS M. PRINCE, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; other wise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Hon. Court, dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and awarding to Plaintiff the sole custody of Louis Prince, the child of said parties, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this eighth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.]
D. P. BARSTOW, Plaintiff's Attorney. no10-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

CECILE PEBELIE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELIE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelie, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you, by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff be permitted to resume her maiden name, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[L. S.] By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, City and County of San Francisco.—In the Probate Court.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS SMITH, deceased.

Order of Publication on Application for Order of Sale.

On reading and filing the petition of Christian Schrieber, Administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the said Administrator to pay the allowance to the family, the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts.

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court at the Court Room thereof, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 4th day of February 1867, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administratior to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts.

And it is further ordered, that a copy of the foregoing order be published once a week for four weeks, in the CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper published in the city and county aforesaid. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated January 2d, 1867. j5 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

In the matter of the Estate of ALFRED RODMAN and ELOISE RODMON, Minors.

It appearing to this Court from the petition this day presented and filed by John C. Merrill, the Guardian of the estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, Minors, praying for an order of sale of the real estate of his said wards, that it would be beneficial to the said wards that such real estate should be sold at private sale.

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said wards, and all persons interested in said estates, appear before this Court at the Court Room thereof at the Court House in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 4th day of February, A. D., 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before said hearing of said petition in the THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

January 2d, 1867.
D. P. BARSTOW, Esq., Attorney for Guardian. j5 5t

ESTATE OF LOUIS McGLAUFLIN, DECEASED.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executrix of the Estate of Louis McGlauflin, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at her residence, No 773 Brannan street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

EMELINE McGLAUFLIN, Executrix.
San Francisco, January 5th, 1867.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Executrix. j5 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF KARL GOTTLIEB WERTHSCHUTZKY, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of Karl Gottlieb Wertbschutzky, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against, the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his law office, Nos. 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

J. W. BRUMAGIM,
Administrator of the Estate of Karl Gottlieb Werthschutzky, d29 5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

RUDOLPH STEINBACH, Plaintiff, vs. JOSEPH L REED, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, and the complaint filed in the said city and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JOSEPH L. REED, CAROLINE L. REED, CHRISTIAN L LIEN, PETER S. McNIEL, SARAH J McNIEL, EDWARD STRODE, NEWELL WINANTS, JOHN C. FRY, JAMES RYAN, S. CLINTON HASTINGS, Administrator of the Estate of Austin E. Smith, deceased, WILLIAM SMITH, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days, otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to compel the defendants to set forth the nature of their several claims in and to the lands and premises described in the complaint, and that adverse claims of said defendants may be determined by a decree of this Court, that it be declared and adjudged that the defendants, or either of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said lands or premises, and that they be forever debarred from asserting any claim thereto adverse to plaintiff, and that he is the owner thereof in fee, and for such other and further relief as to equity shall seem meet.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 24th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-six. WM LOEWY, Clerk

[SEAL.] By W. R. SATTERLEE, Deputy Clerk.
Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. d22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ELIZABETH BARRETT, Plaintiff, vs. CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the sum of $30,000, being the one half of the common property of the parties, be adjudged to belong to and be delivered to this plaintiff; and that the care, custody and education of the children of the said parties, viz: Cornelius William and Arthur Joseph, be awarded to the plaintiff; and that pending this suit, the defendant may, by order of this Court, be restrained and enjoined from selling, or in any manner disposing of the common property referred to in the complaint—that is to say, $60,000; and that defendant be ordered to pay plaintiff $250 per month for the support of herself and children, and the further sum of $1,000 as attorneys' fees for the prosecution of this action, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[SEAL.] By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
PIXLEY & SMITH, Attorneys for Plaintiff. d29 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUdicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovenamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers, incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchasor at said sale, and be put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j19 3m

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE, - - Sole Proprietor and Manager
CHAS. TIBBETTS, - - - Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES, - - - - Stage Manager
W. STEVENSON, - - - - - Treasurer

MONDAY EVENING.....JANUARY 28,
COMPLIMENTARY BENEFIT
TO
THOMAS MAGUIRE, Esq.,
(Prior to his departure for New York)
Tendered by
ALICE KINGSBURY,
MISS KATE DENIN,
And Every Member of the Profession.

The performance will commence with the
STAR SPANGLED BANNER.
By Miss Denin and the entire Corps of Volunteers.

After which
EUGENE ARAM'S DREAM,
Will be recited by Henry Edwards.

The whole to conclude with the ever popular
FANCHON.

Fanchon, Alice Kingsbury. Barbeand, D. C. Anderson
Landry, John McCullough. Didies, - Mr. Barry
Fauet - - - - - - Mrs. Jackson

THIS (SATURDAY) AFTERNOON,
JESSIE BROWN.

SATURDAY EVENING,.....January 26th,
JOHN McCULLOUGH
Will make his first appearance in eight weeks, as RICHARD III.

TUESDAY EVENING—GRIFFITH GAUNT.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - - 25

MAGUIRE'S ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Pine street, below Montgomery.

T. MAGUIRE,.....Sole Proprietor and Manager

THE WONDER OF THE AGE.

THE THREE LAST PERFORMANCES OF PROF. RISLEY'S IMPERIAL COMPANY OF JAPANESE PERFORMERS.

Will be the JAPANESE MATINEE—To-Day, Jan. 26th, at 2 P M., this Evening's performance, and for Prof. RISLEY'S BENEFIT, on Monday Evening, Jan. 28.

Dress Circle and Parquet, $1. Family Circle, 50 cents; Gallery, 25 cents. No extra charge for Reserved Seats.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.

SUNDAY EVENING, - - - JAN. 27.

M. and Mme. Heine

Beg to announce their FINAL PERFORMANCE OF SACRED MUSIC!
Assisted by
MISS E. HOWSON, MISS C. HOWSON.
HENRI HERBERTE, PROF. G. T. EVANS,
Members of "THE TWELVE,"
AND A FULL ORCHESTRA.
Conducted by MR. CHARLES SCHULTZ.

The whole of the Vocal and Instrumental Musicians have kindly volunteered their services for this occasion.

PROGRAMME—PART I.

Overture, - - - - - - Orchestra
O, rest in the Lord (Mendelssohnn) - - Miss E. Howson
Solo Violin, Concerto, (Spohr.) - - - M. J. Heine
Solo Piano—Ne Plus Ultra, (Woelfl) - Mme. A. Heine
Overture, - - - - - - Orchestra

PART II.

Quartette, - - by the members of "The Twelve."
Aria—Mendelssohnn's "Greeting," - Miss E. Howson
Solo Piano—La Carillion, (Jael), - - Mrs. Ada Heine
Be thou faithful unto death, (St. Paul) Mendelssohnn,
Henri Herberte. (Violincello Obligatio by Mr. Frank Howson).
Solo, Violin—Solo de Concert (Sainton) M. J. Heine
Duet—Quisest homo, (Rossini) Miss E. & C. Howson
Overture, - - - - - - Orchestra

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - One Dollar
Parquette, - - 50 Cents. Gallery, - - 25 Cents
No extra charge for Reserved Seats.
Doors open at 7 o'clock. The curtain rises at 8 o'clock.

PLATT'S MUSIC HALL.

FOUR REPRESENTATIONS ONLY.

MATINEE THIS AFTERNOON, (January 26th,)
FOR LADIES AND CHILDREN,
And on the Evenings of SATURDAY, MONDAY, AND TUESDAY.

BLAISDELL BROTHERS,
SWISS BELL RINGERS,
IN THEIR SELECT COSTUME CONCERTS.

TEN PLAYERS PLAYING 549 BELLS. The largest weighing 12 pounds, the smallest four ounces.
The old original Troupe—organized twenty years ago in Lancashire, England. Their first appearance in two years, with a full Company of Bell Players, and all their Solo Artists.

Tickets, - - - - - - - - Fifty Cents
Children to the Matinee, Twenty-Five Cents.

"SHERMAN'S March Through Georgia."

ADMISSION, - - - TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

THOS. NAST'S GREAT PAINTING now on Exhibition at the Fine Art Gallery of SNOW & ROOS,
219 Montgomery street, (Russ Block.)

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

JANUARY
LIST OF PUBLICATIONS:

The Drytons and the Davenants, by the Author of the "Schonberg Cotta Family."
Poems, by the Author of the "Schonberg Cotta Family."
The Book of Gems—an elegant Gift Book.
The Constitutional Convention, by J. A. Jameson.
Cameron Hall, by the author of the "Little Episcopalian."
Merchant of Berlin, a Historical Novel, by L. Muhlbach.
Bridgeman's American Gardener's Assistant—New Edition.
The Faire Gospeller, by the author of Mary Powell.
The Brewer's Family, by Mrs. Ellis.
The Parlor Stage, Charades and Proverbs, by Miss S. A. Frost.
The Brownings, a Tale of the Great Rebellion.
Palgrave's Essays on Art, 1866.
Tanner's Index of Diseases.
Finette, by Edonard Lahoulaye.
A Sketch of the New Route to China and Japan.
The Book of the Hudson, by Benson J. Lossing—Handsomely illustrated. Sold only by subscription.
The Beauclercs—a Novel by Charles Clarke.
Personal Recollections of Distinguished Generals, by Wm F. G. Shanks.
Archie Lovell—a Novel, by Mrs. Edwards.
Soldiers' Orphans, by Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.
Leslie Goldthwaithe, by Mrs. A. T. D. Whitney, author of "Faith Gartney's Girlhood."
Afloat in the Forest, by Caotnin Mayne Reid.
London Poems, by Robert Buchanan.
Outpost, by J. C. Austin, author of "Dora Darling."
Children of the Frontier.
Poems, by Alfred B. Street—2 vols., 12mo.
Zander on the Ophthalmoscope.
Ophthalmic Surgery, by J. Z. Lawrence and R. C Moon.
The Toilet and Cosmetic Art, by Arnold J. Coley.
Lady's Almanac for 1867.
Massachusetts in the Rebellion, by P. C. Headly.—Sold only by subscription.
The Complete Herbalist, by Dr. O. Phelps Brown.
Alger's Doctrine of a Future Life—New Edition.
Race for Wealth—a Novel, by Mrs. J. H. Riddell.
The Sanctuary—a Story of the Civil War, by G. W. Nichols.
Country Quarters, by the Countess Blessington.
Characteristics of Christ's Teaching—J. C. Vaughan.
Poems, by Edgar A. Poe—New Edition, 12mo.
The Hulsean Lectures, by R. C. Trench.
Life of Simon Bolivar, by Dr. Felipe Larrazabal.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
Publishers, Booksellers and Stationers,
417 and 419 Montgomery street,
San Francisco.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.

MISS S. A——'S VALENTINE:

"Take this little flower; take it and think of me!
Think, in the hours of loneliness, of the one who gave it thee;
Place it within thy bosom, let it never be forgot,
But let it whisper oft to thee, "Forget me not."

MISS A. M. C——'S VALENTINE:

"The brightest smiles that ever fell
Are not so dear as thine to me;
And oh! these lines but faintly tell
The love that fills my heart for thee."

TO —— ——:

Think not this gift is idly penn'd
To pass a weary hour away;
Or that the giver in the end
Will in his friendship e'er decay!

'Tis sent in all sincere esteem,
And with the purest heartfelt prayer
That heaven's most enduring beam
May guard and shield thee from all care.

MISS MARY B——N'S VALENTINE:

How dear the dream
In distant hour of ill,
Should all be changed,
To find the faithful still.

ST. VALENTINE'S ADVICE.

To the unmarried of the nation,
As they would avoid the mortification,
And shun the appellation
Of old maids and old bachelors in this generation,
To make direct application,
Without any flirtation,
To APPLETON'S station,
Where VALENTINE holds his oblation,
For an appropriate communication,
Which will afford a gratification,
In the highest acceptation,
And be a sufficient remuneration
For the money spent on the occasion,
From the smallest to the greatest valuation.

VALENTINES in extra fine French Boxes—also in solid Rosewood and Mahogany cases. Sold with or without jewelry.

VALENTINES of every conceivable variety; Valentine Cards, Valentine Mottoes and Stationery.

THIRTY New and Original California Comics.
COMICS.....5 cents.

VALENTINE WRITERS, Comic and Sentimental.

APPLETON'S VALENTINE EXPRESS,
With ten Horses, will deliver Valentines every hour of Valentine's Day in every part of the city.

D. E. APPLETON & CO.,
508 Montgomery street.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

Fireman's Fund
INSURANCE COMPANY.

ABSTRACT from Statement for Year ending Dec. 31, 1866:

Capital stock, all paid up, - - $500,000 00
Surplus, - - - - - - 181,139 39
——— $681,139 39

ASSETS.

Loans on Real Estate, - - $471,404 00
Loans on Personal Property, - 79,685 92
Real Estate owned by Company, 78,768 30
Cash on hand and in Bank, - 26 817 36
Other Securities, - - - 27,138 45
——— $683,784 97

LIABILITIES.

Amount of personal accounts, $973 73
Dividends unpaid, - - 1,671 85
——— 2,645 58
——— $681,139 39

Am't of losses paid during the year, $57,290 12
Amount of losses unsettled, - 5,339 40
——— $62,629 52
Dividend declared for 1866 $87,500 00

THE FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE COMPANY beg leave to call the attention of the public to their ANNUAL STATEMENT, feeling satisfied that a careful examination of the same will convenience people of its stability, and induce many to patronize the Company.

The greatest amount taken on any one risk is $50,000, and when any risk is considered too great a portion is reinsured in responsible Companies.

Desirable risks taken at REDUCED RATES.

Losses paid in United States Coin.

W. B. BOURN, President.
D. J. STAPLES,
Vice-President and Executive Officer.
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

SAN FRANCISCO

Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,
Manufacturers of
MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,
Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.
ALSO,
Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,
Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.
DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of
WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,
A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at as less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.
Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES
H. CASEBOLT.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,
Architects,
328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS to Messrs. Stam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Cogbill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blunn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

Occidental Restaurant.

J. E. SORBIER & CO., - - PROPRIETORS,
536 Washington street,
A few doors below Montgomery.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS—ESTATE OF GEORGE HAMILTON THOMPSON, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of GEORGE HAMILTON THOMPSON, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the U. S. Surveyor General's office, Pioneer Hall, Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.
Dated at San Francisco, January 25th, 1867.
G. HOWARD THOMPSON,
Administrator of Estate of George Hamilton Thompson, deceased, j26 5t

CLEANSE THE BLOOD.

WITH CORRUPT, DISordered or vitiated Blood, you are sick all over. It may burst out in Pimples, or Sores, or in some active disease, or it may merely keep you listless, depressed and good for nothing. But you cannot have good health while your blood is impure. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA purges out these impurities and stimulates the organs of life into vigorous action, restoring the healthful disease. Hence it rapidly cures a variety of complaints which are caused by impurity of the blood, such as Scrofula, or Kings' Evil, Tumors, Ulcers, Sores, Eruptions, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose, or Erysipelas, Tetter, or Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Cancer or Cancerous Tumors, Sore Eyes, Female Diseases, such as Retention, Irregularity, Suppression, Whites, Sterility, also Syphilis or Venereal Diseases. Liver Complaints, and Heart Diseases. Try AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and see for yourself the surprising activity with which it cleanses the blood and cures these disorders.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound "Sarsaparilla," and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. We think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. We can only assure the sick, that we offer them the best alterative which we know how to produce, and we have reason to believe, it is by far the most effectual purifier of the blood yet discovered by any body.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is so universally known to surpass every other remedy for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease, that it is useless here to recount the evidence of its virtues. The world knows them.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers

Removal to Kearny Street.

FRISBEE & SCOTT,
IMPORTERS OF
Foreign and American Music,
AND MUSIC BOOKS!

Sole Agents for the Celebrated KNABE & CO.'S PIANOS, of Baltimore, and CALENBERG & VAUPEL, of New York. These Pianos have within the last two years reached a greater sale than any other manufactured in this country.

GOTSCHALK, STRAKOSCH, THALBERG,
And other celebrities, pronounce them SUPERIOR TO ANY OTHERS.

SALESROOM removed to 139 Kearny street below Sutter, San Francisco.

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

Removal. Removal.

THE HOWE SEWING MACHINE AGENCY
HAS BEEN REMOVED TO
NEW STORE,
No. 137 KEARNY STREET, S. W. corner of Sutter.

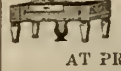
RESIGNATION OF AGENCY
OF THE
PHŒNIX INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF HARTFORD.

San Francisco, January 8th, 1867.

L. B. DELL, HAS THIS DAY RESIGNED THE LOCAL Agency of the above company, and removed his office to DELL, CRANNA & CO.'S store, 511 1-2 and 513 FRONT STREET, where he is ready to effect insurance in either Home or Foreign companies, and furnish information on insurance matters free of charge. Thanking his friends and patrons for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their patronage in the future.

L. B. DELL, 511 1-2 and 513 Front street.

PIANOS!



PIANOS!
AT
AT PRICES FROM $150 TO $600,
AT WALTER S. PIERCE'S PIANO ROOMS, 536 MARKET STREET, opposite Second.

N. B.—The highest cash price paid for Second-hand Pianos

WONDERS OF WONDERS!
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street, - - - Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

GROCERIES AT WHOLESALE PRICES, IN LOTS TO suit family trade, at HASKELL & BUCKELEW'S,
514 Market street.

CRANBERRY PRESERVES, 35 CENTS PER CAN, or three cans for $1, at
HASKELL & BUCKELEW'S

OSACA JAPAN TEA. A FRESH LOT, IN 5 LB. boxes, just imported, by HASKELL & BUCKELEW,
514 Market street.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 11
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 2, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

Some Thoughts on Death, by Charles Warren Stoddard; The Social Advantages of Living in a Wooden House, by "Trem;" Concerning Boarding-Houses; A Bird-Breakfast, by C. H. Webb; A Higher Culture; The "Gay Science;" How I lost my Whiskers; "Black Sheep;" The Pirate Captain Kidd; "Lion's Mouth;" War on Silver street; "Like a bird;" "Economy, Me Boy;" A Serenade; Amusements; Paragraphs, etc.—Poetry: Dead, by Isabel A. Saxon; The Judgment of Love, by "X—X."

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO

The War on Silver Street—The First Campaign.

IT appears that under the laws and Statutes of California, there are certain cases in which the right to the possession of real property is to be decided, not by an appeal to the legal tribunals, but to military strategy and guerilla warfare. "Hold possession by all means," says the counsel learned in the law, on the one side. "Get possession," says the distinguished jurisconsult on the other. And so, instead of going before the Courts to settle questions of this kind, as people do in civilized countries, we gather together our trusty friends and viliant retainers, as did the bold barons of the days of chivalry, load our shot-guns and revolvers, and sharpen our Jack-knives, preparatory to an appeal to the "higher law" of strength, pluck, and endurance.

The vast quantity of matter published during the last four or five years regarding military operations, as well as public and private military experiences, induces a certain feeling of discouragement in presenting anything of a similar nature to the public. Yet the circumstances of the war recently waged and still waging for the possession of the disputed domicil on Silver-street are of such an extraordinary nature, that it seems to demand that some person should endure the odium of presenting them to the public eye. Accustomed as I am to the profession of a martyr, I have crossed the Rubicon and have endeavored, in a feeble way, of course, to portray to humanity some of the phases of this extraordinary civil and domestic conflict.

The minor details leading to the question of rights, as regards a disputed territory, are beneath the regard of the extraordinary historian. Suffice it to say, that out of various complications arising from the humbug called laws, two parties claimed possession of a domicil on Silver street, said domicil containing some twenty-odd rooms.

Having protracted matters in endeavoring to induce the enemy to listen to reason, until virtue became a bore (as indeed it generally is), our government dispatched Major-Gen. Atom to the disputed territory, with full powers to act as he should see fit. General A. took with him a force of seven gallant and adventurous youths, engaging to furnish them with commodious quarters and decent rations, including segars, whisky, and cards as long as the war endured. The approaches and entrance of the house were made in an insidious manner, in the dead of night; and ere the enemy were aware of it, seven rooms had been captured and occupied.

Active operations now commenced. The utmost vigilance was exercised by both parties. On the twenty-fourth of December, General A. having two men, made a violent onslaught on a spare bedroom and wrested it from the foe. The capture embraced also several interesting trophies in the shape of linen and earthenware which it is not necessary more particularly to specify. A strange shirt, and two pair of pants were found in a closet, which had once been respectable.

For several days after the twenty-fourth, no demonstrations were made by either party, each hoping to tire the other out. General A. then organized a vocal corps for night duty. This organization made it a regular business to sing "O, Bob Ridley, O!" "Old John Brown," and "Marching through Georgia," in the dead of night, which proved a serious inconvenience and annoyance to the tympanums of the enemy. Still they held out with a degree of endurance worthy of a better cause. The musical demonstration not proving an entire success, another corps was organized, which by loud and vehement declamation of Shakesperian extracts and choice passages from Greek, Latin and German oratory and anthology, struck horror (as well it might) into the hearts of the foe. Yet, their endurance was wonderful. Sleep in the Silver-street domicil was unknown to both parties; or if obtained at all, it was hastily snatched under the most difficult and trying circumstances.

On the twenty-eighth, the enemy, smarting under these castigations, made a sortie and effected the capture of a water-pitcher from an apartment which had been temporarily deserted by our forces. They effected this by resorting to a flagrant violation of the rules of chivalric and modern warfare, sending a forlorn hope of one female into the disputed apartment, and sheltering themselves under the courtesy accorded to the sex. The indignation pervading the hearts of our brave boys on hearing this, cannot be described. A counter sortie was immediately made upon the enemy's works and the pitcher recaptured, thus vindicating our own outraged honor. Afterward, in a verbal correspondence relative to the affair between the contending parties, the violence of a party holding intimate relations was threatened. General B. gallantly replied that "he was welcome to come on—that it was more acceptable to treat with brave men than with tender women—and that might insure the 'busting of his crust,'" a rough expression, but one almost pardonable in the excitement of battle.

The crowning feature of the conflict occurred on the last day of December, 1866. On that day occurred the total capture of the kitchen and commissariat department of the enemy. Leaving all points well guarded, General A., taking with him a small force, stole down to the intended point of attack, where he found but one female engaged in the manufacture of a mutton stew. She was immediately overcome and made a prisoner of war. The mutton stew was confiscated, and acting on the principle of living on the enemy, General A. ordered his force to replenish their stock of fuel from the wood-pile of the foe, which was done. An ax was also captured. "O, Bob Ridley O," was triumphantly sung all over the house by the different divisions. Thus ended the first campaign. The history of the next is reserved for a future communication; and it cannot fail to prove interesting to all who delight in narratives of military operations. The December campaign led to no decisive results; that of January, abounded in the most startling and exciting incidents, and virtually controlled the fate of the war. VOLUNTEER.

"Like a Bird."

The editor of the Examiner has been studying ornithology, and on Tuesday gave Senator Nye the benefit of his studies. He starts by calling him "Nye the Sage-Brush Buzzard." He then says that on the occasion of his lecture an article which had appeared in the Examiner deterred many from witnessing the foul exhibition. The next remark is:—"The bird said many things characteristic of his foul nature." Then follows an allusion to the fact that "birds of a feather flock together," and further on we are told that:

"Nye gloats in blackguardism. He takes to it just as ducks do to water, or carrion crows to putrid meat."

Again we find a remark about his "foul language," and the ornithological editor closes his article thus.

"We hope it will be long before our State is desecrated by his foul presence again. Farewell, sweet buzzard of the sage brush, farewell."

It is quite evident that the editor had a sort of indistinct idea that "foul" was just the proper word to use often in abusing Senator Nye after he had called him a bird, and that allusion to ducks and carrion crows would come in well after starting with the idea of a buzzard. Senator Nye, in spite of this terrific article, on the morning following his appearance felt perfectly well, packed up and went East by the steamer—shook his plumage and was off "like a bird."

"Sure, it's a Benefit!"

On the occasion of the sacred concert given by M. and Mme. Heine on Sunday last, all the musical artists who took part in it tendered their services; and the lessees of the Metropolitan Theatre charged a merely nominal sum. The reason of this was: M. Heine the blind violinist, and Mme. Heine the accomplished pianist (though recognized as extremely talented artistes), have met with bad luck in this city—they arrived at an unfortunate season. It is not only members of the musical profession who sympathize with genius when it meets with bad luck, as was proved by the following incident. The agent of M. and Mme. Heine engaged a carriage on the night of the concert, to convey M. and Mme. Heine and one of the artistes, who had volunteered from the outskirts of the city, to the theatre. On their being set down at their destination the following dialogue between the agent and the hackman took place:

Agent—"How much do I owe you—three dollars, isn't it?"

Hackman—"Sure, then, isn't it a benefit? You don't owe me a cent."

Agent—"Well, it isn't exactly a benefit; the musical artistes have volunteered—"

Hackman—"Volunteered? To sing for nothing, is it?"

Agent—"Yes, but I must pay you your fare—"

Hackman—"Divil a fare will I be taking for a benefit. Why mayn't I volunteer as well as the singers?"

And upon this the carriage was driven off rapidly. The agent, who has been in many parts of the world, wondered whether such an event could take place in any country save California.

Economy, Me Boy!

There is a class of individuals of capacious and powerful intellect, and a mathematical turn of mind, who are in the habit of calculating things down about as close as Lowell's "Deacon" in "Fitz Adam's Story," in the last Atlantic, of whom the poet declares that,

"He a flint would skin,
And make a profit on a single pin,"

and that he was in the habit of soothing his qualms of conscience for selling New England rum, by piously and plenteously "baptizing it" with water, before dealing it out to the public. There are a good many of this class *out*side of Yankeedom proper; nay, we have a few specimens even in San Francisco. The Daily Times has a handsome bulletin board on Montgomery, street just south of California (though by no means so gorgeous as a work of art, as that of the Dromatic Chronicle,) but it seems to be displayed for ornament and not for use inasmuch as it stands at the edge of the sidewalk, black and bare, with never a paper posted upon it from week's end to week's end. It is reported that one of the unfortunate stockholders in the dropsical sheet, observing this circumstance, stepped into the office and inquired of the "business manager" why the paper was not displayed on the board, to which the latter replied in a confidential whisper, and with an air of supernatural sagacity—"Why, if we stick up the paper outside, they can read it for nothing, and won't buy papers!" With such keen and far-seeing policy as that, it is simply an impossibility that the Times should fail. The Alta had better hand in her checks.

A Serenade,

One or the belligerent parties contending for the possession of the Silver-street Schoolhouse, received the compliments of a serenade, on Friday morning, at about one o'clock. The instrumental music was of a most remarkable character, the soft, mellifluous notes of a gong constituting the predominating element. One of the belligerents also assures us that he distinctly recognized the peculiar tones of the bewgag. The performance closed with a song, executed by four manly voices. The song seemed to be a parody of Longfellow's "Excelsior." The following is a specimen:

The shades of night were falling fast
As down through Silver street there passed,
A butcher in a butcher's cart—
And as he rode, he cried, right smart:
"Pork Chops!"

His nose turned up, his eyes so green,
Flashed like a cleaver bright and keen,
And like a Piute war-whoop rang
The accents of that butcher's tongue:
"Pork Chops!"

Yea! like a locomotive's scream,
When the engineer lets off the steam,
Or, like a bull calf's roar, who smells
The reeking slaughter-house, he yells
"Pork Chops."

"Drive not so fast," the old man said,
"There is a mud-hole just ahead."
"Old man, dry up!" the youth replied,
And louder than before he cried.
"Pork Chops!"

There were quite a number of additional stanzas, equally musical and spirited, which, however, our informant cannot recall. It still remains a matter of doubt whether the serenade was designed as a compliment to Maj.-Gen. Atom and his guerilla corps, or to the adverse faction. The performance concluded with "O, Bob Ridly, O" with a bone accompaniment.

The Rival Heroes.

The steamer which left these shores on Thursday, bore away Thomas Maguire, Esq., the Napoleon of the Drama, and the Honorable J. W. Nye, disrespectfully termed by the Examiner, "The Sage-Brush Buzzard." A band was in attendance which discoursed sweet music in honor of some one. The Hon. J. W. Nye, called by his enemies "The Buzzard," etc., took the compliment to himself and commenced to make a speech by way of expressing his gratitude. Unfortunately the Hon. etc., was mistaken. Thomas Maguire, otherwise "The Napoleon of the Drama," was the party who was intended to be honored. The Hon. J. W. Nye was requested to "dry up," and three cheers were given for "The Napoleon, etc." The Napoleon of the Drama did not attempt to make a speech. Like Sir Christopher Wren, his deeds speak loudly for him. If any one wishes to know why three cheers were given for Tom. Maguire—as he is generally called—by the immense crowd who assembled to wish him good luck on his departure, they must be told that this manager has been the support of the dramatic profession in California, has founded theatres in many parts of the State, and in Nevada, and by his energy has provided genius with bread and the public with amusement, for the last fifteen years. Under these circumstances it is not to be wondered at that the crowd preferred the "Napoleon of the Drama" to the gentleman so disrespectfully termed "The Buzzard," etc.

Derby and Dizzy.

"LONDON, January 31.—It is asserted that Lord Derby's Administration will fall to the ground if the speech at the reopening of Parliament does not recommend reform."

The Derby race is nearly run,
The Commons' leader's dizzy,
Dizzy and Derby curse John Bright,
For having been so busy.

Great Curositics.

A notice in the Call of Sunday last, announced that "the decapitated heads of the Italian and French murderers" were on exhibition at a certain place in this city. If the "bodiless trunks" were also exhibited, immense crowds would flock to see—nothing.

HOW I LOST MY WHISKERS.

"DO you object to smoking, sir?"

This I asked in my blandest manner of an old gentleman who sat, with his face hidden by a newspaper, opposite to me in a railway carriage.

All the seats in the carriage were filled; I and four others were on our way from Cambridge to enjoy the Christmas vacation. Our spirits were high, for there is a delight in banishing for a time all thoughts of conic sections, Newton's "Principia," and the little-go, and entertaining, in exchange, visions of "hope," skating parties, and all the orgies which every right-minded family hold at this season in honor of King Christmas.

But I must introduce you to my chums, for chums we were, although our tastes did not all lie in the same direction. Jack Stirrup is (or rather was at that period) a riding and hunting man, and was not unfrequently to be seen at Newmarket; Stretcher, on the other hand, loved boating, and preferred the sight of a well-developed biceps to that of the best bred hunter, and would often remark to Jack, "How on earth you can say that you would rather see the 'Two Thousand' than the 'Time-race' in the 'Colquhoun Sculls,' I cannot for the life of me make out." Edwards was a poor and reading man, but his wit and talents rendered him a universal favorite; whilst Davies was a rich, open-handed, good-hearted fellow as ever lived. For my own part, I do not think I had any well-defined peculiarity, but did a little of everything. I read a little, rowed a little, hunted a little, had a fair income—in short, if I had any characteristic at all, it was a love of laziness and practical jokes.

We congratulated ourselves in getting a carriage to ourselves (with the exception of the old gentleman I have named,) for we intended to keep out the cold, and beguile our journey with sundry pipes and cigars. We had our cases out, and were preparing to light up, as a matter of course, when we were astonished by my vis-a-vis dashing away the newspaper which had hidden his face.

"Do I object to smoking? Yes, sir, I do object! I object very strongly, sir! and beg that you will instantly replace your cigars in your pockets. I insist on having no smoking in this carriage!"

We looked aghast at this sudden burst of old-gentlemanly wrath.

"Might I ask if you intend traveling far on this line, sir?" inquired Edwards, in his comically-polite tone.

"What is that to you, sir? What business is it of yours where I am going to?"

"I merely wished to suggest, in case of your traveling far, that, pleasing and delightful as it would be for us to enjoy your agreeable society, yet nevertheless, we would try to bear the loss, should you prefer to change carriages at the next station."

"No doubt you would wish to get rid of me; but no, sir! I don't move my seat, and the first one that smokes I report to the guard."

"In that case, I fear we shall be obliged, painful though it be, to tear ourselves away," I said, as we drew up at a small station.

Fortunately we found the next compartment empty, and as we started again we pulled out our cigar-cases, this time to light their contents.

"The old boy has certainly got out of bed the wrong side this morning," said I, puffing away.

"Or has made a mistake in his betting book," remarked my sporting friend. "We'll give him a benefit now, at any rate; I vote we take it in by turns to puff smoke through the lamp-hole. Let's look at him; he! cooled down a little; is about to compose himself to sleep. I'll trouble you for his night-cap; come and look at it, Fred."

I did so, and roared on seeing a red, woven cap of comical shape, which added very considerably to the wrathful expression of the wearer's features.

With perseverance which deserved a better cause, we each made a tube of paper, and putting the end through the lamp-hole, took our turn at "smoking him out;" and I blush as I now think how heartily we enjoyed the enraged state in which he paced up and down the empty carriage, like a caged tiger.

The next time we stopped, however, the guard put his head into our carriage window and said, with a wink—

"Gentl'm in next compartment complains of your smoking, sir."

"Smoking!" we exclaimed, with mock indignation. "Do we look as though we'd been smoking? What nonsense!" and added in a mysterious manner, "You see there's one vacant seat; of course we're not going to tell tales of the man who occupied that."

"All right!" said the guard, laughing. "I wasn't born yesterday." And after a slightly confidential transaction of a pecuniary nature, left us in peace.

The snow, which had been falling heavily all day, now lay thick all around. Our eyes ached again, as we looked out of the window (which was itself all frosted over) on to the dazzling snow which covered all the landscape; and as we stamped our feet on the floor of the carriage, we began heartily to wish ourselves at our journey's end, and by the fireside.

"Halloo! what are we stopping for now? I wonder whether we're going to do an upset, or anything exciting of that kind?" said Davies, looking out of the window. "I don't see a train anywhere that we can have a friendly collision with."

"Get out here, gentlemen," said the guard, passing the window; "the line is snowed up, and we shall have to wait till it is clear."

The grumbling which this pleasant announcement caused was immediately stopped by our hearing the voice of our disagreeable companion in the next compartment. "Line snowed up, is it?" said that gentleman, trying to appear calm in his fury; "and we get out here? Oh! and do you suppose I am quietly going to submit to this? The line ought to have been cleared ready for us. I shall bring an action."

"But, sir!" I said, "how on earth could they"——

"Might I request to know who spoke to you sir? I consider your remark and interference, excessive impertinence."

This was a little too bad, and I turned to Jack and whispered that we would devise some plan of giving our friend a lesson demonstrative of the evils attending bad temper at Christmas time.

We were fortunately stopped at a distance of only two hundred yards from a station; but a very poor station it was, without any waiting room or refreshment-rooms.

The station-master, who was a pleasant sort of fellow, said we should have to wait but a couple of hours, and gave us a room, where we made the best of a bad job, and having sent for some beer from the nearest "public," became, as Edwards mathematically observed, approximately happy. The old gentleman, however, had not yet vented all his wrath, but kept on anathematizing the snow and the railway people at intervals. After we had warmed ourselves, Stretcher proposed that we should have some songs; but as no one volunteered, I suggested that we should get on our way sooner if we all went out and helped to clear away the snow from the line. To this all agreed (with the exception of our amiable friend, of course.)

We had worked away merrily for about an hour, and were congratulating ourselves on being able to start again, when Jack came running up with a very pleased expression of countenance, and as he tapped me on the shoulder, I remembered that he had not been with us for the last half-hour.

"Fred," he said, "I've an idea."

"Keep it then," I replied, "for it is so rare a commodity with you, that I would not deprive you of it for the world."

"Don't chaff, and I'll tell you all about it. I went up into the room at the station just now, and found our friend, the old boy, fast asleep in his chair, completely collapsed under the soporific effects of the fire, and a glass of brandy and water. I immediately ran into the village and bought these," he said, showing me a handful of screws, a gimlet, and a screwdriver.

"What in the name of everything ridiculous do you want these for?" I asked.

"Don't you see? We shall be able to start again directly, now that the line is clear; we meanwhile run up stairs, and screw the old gentleman firmly into the room—the train goes on—we are revenged for his surly behavior to us, and he will then learn that 'old gentlemen should not be ill-tempered at Christmas time.'"

"Capital!" I said, always ready to fall in with a practical joke; "let us be off at once."

We certainly found the old gentleman in as Morphean a torpor as we could wish. His feet were propped up on a chair whilst his boots were drying, and he was breathing, with his mouth wide open, in a rather apoplectic manner.

"Shall I put a snowball into each of his boots?" I said.

"No! that would be too much of a good thing, but I'll tell you what you shall do; you're rather a swell at drawing, aren't you? I'll just burn the end of that beer-bottle cork, and you shall artistically adorn his face."

"That is splendid," he whispered, as I finished off with giving him a moustache, which turned up in a facetious manner. "Just move that looking-glass, and put it so that he may admire himself directly he wakes; and now let us be off."

We walked on tiptoe to the door. The hinges began to creak; and cold as the weather was, a faint prespiration began to develop itself on my forehead, as I noticed the old gentleman move in his chair; it was, however, only to turn his head on to the other shoulder, and we closed the door in safety.

"Give me the screws quick," I said, "and go to the bottom of the stairs and prevent anyone coming up." I bored hole after hole as noiselessly as I could, and having made the door as fast as eight good screws would make it, I ran down stairs and whispered, "All right!"

"Is there a gentleman up-stairs, sir?" said the station-master, walking towards us. "He asked me to wake him in time for the train, and it is just ready to go."

"Oh! he won't like to be disturbed till the last moment, you may be sure," said Jack. "By-the-by, I wished to talk to you of a plan by which I think your station might be much improved."

Now architecture happened to be one of the station-master's hobbies, and they were soon deep in discussion. I beat a hasty retreat to the guard, and producing a sovereign, said:

"If you get us off in five minutes from now, waiting for no one, and ring your bell at the very last minute, this is yours."

"All right, sir! the luggage is all in, and most of the passengers. Take your seats. Going on!" he shouted, whilst I stood with my watch in hand.

"One minute left! Ring the bell now!" I said. "If they undo those screws in one, or even five minutes, I'll eat them."

We jumped into a carriage, the guard gave the final whistle, and the train moved slowly on. We anxiously watched the result of our plot, with our heads out of window. After waiting one or two minutes, we noticed a figure gesticulating at the station window. The train then passed into a deep cutting, and we lost sight of it.

I think I have forgotton to say that I was going to spend the Christmas with a college friend. He had gone down a few days before, and had promised to meet me at C——— station.

You may imagine that I was not sorry to find myself arrived there, nor yet to see my friend Tom stamping his feet on the platform, no doubt thoroughly tired of waiting for the train. As he drove me up, he began talking of the different arrangements he had made for our mutual amusement. "To-morrow," he said, "I've set aside for a skating party; I have had the pond in the park swept, and invited all les jeunes demoiselles within reach, and as they have all accepted, it will give you a fair idea of our 'native beauty.'"

Now, of all jolly things in the world, I think a skating party is the jolliest. Tom says that I am fond of showing my skating off; but I deny that this has anything to do with it. In the first place the frosty weather (and the mulled claret) induce high spirits: then there are the tumbles to laugh at, and the ladies' skates to strap on (which last, in my own mind; is not the least pleasant part of the entertainment.)

We had by this time reached the house, and, after having accomplished our toilettes, Tom took me into the drawing-room.

"The guv'nor isn't at home; but let me introduce you to my sister Minnie."

Miss Minnie rose, and held out her hand at once, but, for my own part, I was too dumbfounded to utter a single word. I am told that I am far from eloquent when describing female beauty, so I will not attempt it here; but I must say that I had never, and have never since, seen such a pretty and merry face. When dinner was announced, however, I had recovered my equanimity sufficiently to offer her my arm, and after a short time we got to know one another thoroughly.

The dinner (perhaps it may have been the port wine) had opened my heart, and when we had removed to Tom's sanctum to smoke (where by-the-by, Miss Minnie insisted on joining us, saying that she "liked the smell of tobacco, and found it so dull by herself") I began to relate my adventures with the old gentleman.

Peal after peal of laughter arose as I proceeded with my narrative. I warmed with my subject, quite outdoing myself in the description of the old gentleman's angry face and his irate behavior.

"Here!" I said, in triumph, "is my trophy!"—and I held out the nightcap.

Never shall I forget that moment—brother and sister stared at it for one second, and then Tom, looking vacantly at me, immediately went into a hysterical fit of laughter. His face began to grow quite black, and the tears rolled down his cheeks.

My face presented anything but a laughing appearance, for I was struck with amazement at this behavior. At last, with what little breath he had left, he managed to get out the words—

"It's—the—guv—'nor's—night—cap!"

As he said this, he pointed to a small label inside the cap, which I had not noticed before, and there, sure enough, were the words:

T. Grumblethorp, Esq.
Grumblethorp Hall.

Reader, have you ever wished the earth to open and swallow you up? How heartily did I wish it at that moment. I saw the whole affair at a glance: I had been playing a practical joke upon the gentleman in whose house I was sitting, and had been describing him in the most ridiculous light to his daughter. How I hated Tom for laughing (his sister was nearly as bad, by the way), whilst I sat turning alternately red and pale, considering what on earth was to be done. At this moment a servant entered the room.

"A telegram for Miss Grumblethorp."

She hastily looked over it, and then read it aloud to us:—

"Shall come by the 8:30 to-morrow morning. Some young jackanapes have played a practical joke, and caused me to miss the last train to-night."

At last I found words. "Tom," I said, "I must fly. Miss Grumblethorp, I cannot sufficiently apologize to you for—"

"Oh! you need not apologize to me, nor must you go either. Tom, you must devise some escape out of the dilemma."

"It would certainly never do for the governor to recognize you; he'd never forgive you, and would cut me off with a shilling. Oh! I have it; I sentence you, in punishment, to cut off those whiskers and moustache—he'll never know you then.

"Never!" I said, with determination. "I'm not a vain man, but I will never voluntarily make a fright of myself."

"Oh! I'm sure you'd look much better without them," said Miss Grumblethrop; "besides, remember the skating party to-morrow; I want you to teach me so much. You really must not go.

I was not proof against this. The adorable Miss Minnie actually wishing me to stay! Again, I recolleeted that I had no other invitation for Christmas, and all my family were spending the winter abroad. Under these circumstances, I determined to risk all, and stay where I was sure to enjoy myself.

Next morning I rose early, had a "clean shave," and borrowed a pair of light-blue spectacles. When I met Miss Grumblethrop on my way to breakfast, she declared the disguise was capital, telling me, at the same time, that her father had arrived, and was in the breakfast-room. I was formally introduced, and by the way that he received me it was evident he had not recognized me in the least.

"Always glad to see Tom's friends," said the old boy, in quite a cheerful tone. "Thank goodness he doesn't choose for companions such puppies as those who insulted me yesterday. I wonder whether they consider themselves gentlemen?"

In this strain he continued to talk all breakfast-time, whilst I answered with perfect gravity, not daring to look at Minnie, for I felt sure she was enjoying the joke.

My story is nearly over. I enjoyed the skating party thoroughly, for I spent most of the day in teaching Minnie. I also accompanied her the next evening to a ball, where I found she could move much more quickly and gracefully than on the ice.

I am now married; and though I have since grown my whiskers, yet my father-in-law has never suspected that I was "the young jackanapes that made him late for the train" (he has never mentioned the burnt-cork business) and has always been so kind to me that I have heartily repented of it.—London Society.

Female Beauty.—Revive the beauty of bygone ages, and you will revive all the beauty and ugliness of those days; for there must have been a good deal of uglincss, otherwise the beauty would not have been so forcibly appreciated. Had there been more pretty girls in the days of Troy, Helen would have had few suitors, and Illium might have been standing yet. What I mean to say, is this: In those days people dressed so that unless their features were almost perfect they were literally nothing. All the minor graces which set off a mediocre person now were perfectly unavailable under the system of costume. But imagine for a moment all your acquaintances, dressed in this way. Would not the majority be frightful? How few faces and complexions would stand that binding back of the hair; how few forms could show to advantage beneath the simple robe, without stays or stiff petticoats: how few feet would be endurable in sandals; how few arms would bear the noonday suns and the sharp winds, which would soon turn them to the pattern and form of a washerwoman? Perhaps the old Jewish costume worn by Rebecca and Rachel may have been a shade better, but there was the same exposure of the neck and arms, with the additional disadvantage of a robe that showed a leg encased in hideous hose and boots, and that refused to sweep with Grecian amplitude around the limbs of the fair wearer. Cleopatria, who was both dark and stout, could wear only white or purple, and the heavy diamond of strings of pearls that were allotted as the garb of Egyptian princessess. How dark and uncomely must have been the majority of her countrymen, may be judged from the sensation she made. The Roman ladies were famed for their stately carriages and somewhat large, but noble features; and when to these charms they added regularity, delicacy, and beautiful color, no doubt their simple, open, coquettish style of dress was very becoming to them; but without the latter qualification, how gaunt and course they must have appeared.

"There is one thing sure," said Mrs. Partington, "the females of the present geueration are a heap more independent than they used to be. Why, I saw a gal go by to-day that I know belonged to the historical class of society, with her dress all tucked up to her knees, her hair all huzzled up like as if she hadn't time to comb it for a week, and one of her grandmother's old caps in an awful crumbled condition on her head. Why, laws, honey, when I was a gal, if any of the fellows come aloug when I had my clothes on tucked up that way, and back kivered with an old white rag, I would run for dear life and hide out of sight. Well, well, the gals then were iunocent, unconfisticated critters; now they are what the French call blazes."

Good Prospects.—The new Marquis of Waterford has a splendid career in the future. Before his twenty-second year has closed over his head, he finds himself the head of a noble family, with an unencumbered property of nearly £70,000 a year.

FORGETFULNESS.

There is a haven of sure rest
From the loud world's bewildering stress
As a bird dreaming on her nest,
As dew, hid in a rose's breast,
As Hesper in the glowing West:
So the heart sleeps
In thy calm deeps,
Serene Forgetfulness!

No sorrow in that place may be,
The noise of life grows less and less;
As moss far down within the sea,
As, in white lily caves, a bee,
As life in a hazy reverie—
So the heart's-wave
In thy dim cave,
Hushes, Forgetfulness!

Duty and care fade far away,
What toil may be we cannot guess;
As a ship anchored in a bay,
As a cloud at summer-noon astray,
As water-blooms in a breezeless day:
So 'neath thine eyes
The full heart lies,
And dreams, Forgetfulness!

James Russell Lowell.

THE PIRATE CAPTAIN KIDD.

INTERESTING HISTORY OF HIS LIFE AND EXPLOITS.

SEARCHING for buried treasure is a favorite employment with some men, and laughed at by all others. No one has forgotten the amount of money sunk in a coffer-dam on North river, a few years ago, in the search after one of Kidd's vessels loaded with gold and silver and diamonds. At the present moment it is stated that two expeditions, sustained by considerable capital, are pursuing the same search, one somewhere in New England, and the other at Oak Island, Nova Scotia. These are perhaps not the only seekers. Here and there along the shores it is not uncommon to see one, two or three individuals pursuing the same search. On the whole, it is probable that a great many people really believe that the treasure may be found. A few facts where there is so much fancy may be worth recalling.

Doubtless one of the most terrible names in the juvenile literature of England and English America, during the last century and a half, has been that of Robert Kidd, the pirate. In the nursery legend, in story and in song, his name has stood forth as the boldest of buccaneers. The terror of the ocean, when abroad, the story said that he returned from his successful voyages to line our coasts with silver and gold, and to renew with the devil a league, cemented with the blood of victims shot down whenever fresh returns of the precious metals were to be hidden. According to the superstitions of Connecticut and Long Island, it was owing to these bloody charms that honest money diggers have ever experienced so much difficulty in removing the buried treasures. Often, indeed, have the lids of the iron chests rung beneath the mattock of the stealthy midnight searcher for gold; but the flashes of sulphurous fires, blue and red, and the saucer eyes and chattering teeth of legions of demons, have uniformly interposed to frighten the delvers from their posts, and preserve the treasures from their greedy clutches. But notwithstanding the harrowing sensations connected with the name of Kidd, and his renown as a pirate, he was but one of the last and most inconsiderate of that race of sea robbers, who, during a long series of years in the seventeenth century, were the admiration of the world for their prowess and its terror for crimes.

In the latter part of the seventeenth century Kidd was in command of a merchant vessel trading between New York and London, and was celebrated for his nautical skill and enterprise. The first mention of him in authentic colonial history occurs in 1691, in which year the journals of the New York Assembly tell us that on the 18th day of April much credit was allowed to be due him "for the many good services done for the province in attending with his vessels." But in what capacity, or for what object, he thus "attended with his vessels," does not appear. It was also declared that he "ought to be suitably rewarded." Accordingly, on the 14th of May following, it was ordered by the same assembly "that the sum of one hundred and fifty pounds be paid to Captain Kidd, as a suitable acknowledgment for the important benefits which the colonies had received from his services."

The presumption is that those services were in some way connected with the protection of the colonial merchant vessels from the attacks of the pirates who were at that time hovering along the coasts of the Northern colonies. Indeed, the harbor of New York was no stranger to the pirate vessels, and the commerce between them and the "people of figure" in this city was not inconsiderable. It was no great secret that the pirates were frequently in the Sound, and were freely supplied with provisions by the inhabitants of Long Island; and, still further, it was well known in the year 1695 that the English freebooters had fitted out their vessels in the harbor of New York. On the arrival of the pirate vessels from their cruises their goods were openly sold in the city, and the conduct of the Colonial Government was such that collusion, if not direct partnership, between them and the public authorities was not doubted.

Such was the condition of affairs when Robert Livingston, of New York, recommended to Governer Bellamont, Captain Kidd as a man of integrity and courage, acquainted with the pirates and their places of rendezvous, and as one in all respects fitted to be entrusted with the command of a vessel engaged in making war on them. A ship was accordingly procured and equipped and placed under command of Kidd, who sailed from New York under regular commission in April, 1696. For a time he served faithfully; and on his return from his first voyage he was received with public honors, and awarded another grant from the colony of two hundred and fifty pounds. But on his next voyage he stretched away to the Indian Ocean and became a pirate himself. Selecting the Island of Madagascar as his principal place of rendezvous, and burning his own ship after having captured one that suited him, his depredations upon the commerce of all nations are represented to have been great.

It is beyond doubt true that Long Island Sound contained several of his hiding places. "Kidd's Rock" is well known at Manhasset, upon Long Island, to this day. Here he is supposed to have buried some of his treasures; and many have been the attempts of the credulous in this section to find the hidden gold. There is also no doubt that he was wont to hide himself and his vessel among those curious rocks in Sachem's Head Harbor, called the Thimble Islands. In addition to the "Pirate's Cavern" in this vicinity, there is, upon one of those rocks, sheltered from the view of the Sound, a beautiful artificial excavation, of an oval form, holding, perhaps, the measure of a barrel, called "Kidd's Punch Bowl." It was here, according to the traditions of the neighborhood, that he used to carouse with his crew.

It is a fact beyond controversy that he was accustomed to anchor his vessel in Gardner's Bay. On one occasion in the night, he landed upon Gardner's Island, and requested Mrs. Gardner to provide a supper for himself and attendants. She knowing his desperate character, dared not refuse; and fearing his displeasure, she took great pains, especially in roasting a pig. The pirate chief was so pleased with her culinary success, that on going away he presented her with a cradle-blanket of gold cloth. It was of velvet, inwrought with gold, and very rich. A small piece of it remains in the family. On another occasion, also, when he landed upon the island, he buried a small casket of gold, silver and precious stones, in presence of Mr. Gardner, but under the most solemn injunctions of secresy.

Repairing soon after this occurrence to Boston, where Lord Bellamont chanced to be at the time, he was summoned before his lordship and ordered to give a report of his proceedings since he had sailed on his second voyage. Refusing, however, to comply with the demand, he was arrested on the 3d of July, 1699, on the charge of piracy. He appears to have disclosed the fact of having buried treasure on Gardner's Island, for the same was demanded by the Earl of Bellamont and surrendered by Mr. Gardner. We have seen the original receipt for the amount, with the different items of the deposits. The sum was by no means large, and affords evidence of no such mighty sweepings of the seas as have been told of by tradition. Of gold, in coins, gold dust, and bars, there was seven hundred and fifty ounces; of silver, five hundred and six ounces, and of precious stones, about sixteen ounces.

Meanwhile, Kidd was taken to England, tried on an indictment for piracy and murder, and hung in chains with six of his crew, In addition to the indictment for piracy, he was indicted for the murder of one of his own subordinate officers, named Moore, who he killed in a quarrel, by striking him over the head with a bucket. He was convicted upon both charges, but protested to the last that he was the victim of conspiracy and perjury.

Suspicions were entertained by the public that the execution was a sham; that the government dared not put him to death and that, to avoid disclosures, a man of straw was hung in his place. In proof of this assertion, it was generally and positively alleged that Kidd had been seen alive and well many years afterward by those who could not be mistaken as to his identity. There is little doubt, however, of his having been honestly hung at Execution Dock, in London, on the 12th of May, 1701.—N. Y. Jour. of Com.

The Beauty of Marriage.—Every woman should be married to one worthy of her. Marriage brings care and wear—but it is the ring which is worn that keeps bright, and the watch which lies still and unwound that gets out of order. The sweet sympathies involved in the relations of the family: the new responsibilities—the new compensation secured—for all outlays of strength brings about a delightful play of all the faculties of the heart and intellect which in their reaction on the body produces an effect that, in the end, is nothing less than preservative. Notwithstanding the assertions of mathomaticians the marriage ring is the spanning "circle" which husband and wife have the problem set them of making all things "square."

LITERARY GLEANINGS AND GOSSIP.

A LEARNED LADY NOVELIST.

MISS AUGUSTA J. EVANS, the author of Beulah, and of that fearfully erudite work, Macaria, which we hesitate to call a novel, has just made her third appearance before the public, in a bulky volume entitled St. Elmo. Evi dently Miss Evans is bent on removing the popular reproach against her country-women, that they are lacking in that thorough culture and wide range of bookish knowledge that characterizes a large class of female writers in England, such as Mrs. Oliphant, Frances Power Cobbe, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Harriet Martineau, and scores of others who could be easily enumerated. In Macaria, the heroine was represented as possessing a fund of various erudition quite sufficient to set up half a dozen professors—not Yankee professors be it understood, for the authoress takes especial pains to state that the studious lady was obliged to send to Europe for mathematical works and instruments that could not be procured in this land of imperfect culture. As the period of the story is no more remote than the first year of the late rebellion, plain people who have not pushed their mathematical studies beyond trigonometry, and whose knowledge of their practical applications does not extend farther than surveying or navigation, or the measuring of inaccessible heights and distances, are naturally somewhat puzzled to guess what mysterious "instruments" those were, which could not be found in the United States in the year of grace 1866.

St. Elmo is no less remarkable for the tremendous amount of "cram" which it evinces, than was its immediate predecessor; but instead of being devoted to the glorification of the "Lost Cause," its animus seems to be a spirit of antipathy to the woman's rights' movement. A motto from one of Ruskin's most characteristic rhapsodies adorns the title page, and furnishes the key-note to the "teaching" of the story:

"Ah! the true rule is—a true wife in her husband's house is his servant; it is in his heart that she is queen. Whatever of the best he can conceive, it is her part to be; whatever of the highest he can hope, it is hers to promise; all that is dark in him she must purge into purity; all that is failing in him she must strengthen into truth; from her, through all the world's clamor, he must win his praise; in her, through all the world's welfare, he must find his peace."

As a specimen of the dizzily elevated style of this instructive fiction, and an illustration for the benefit of foreign sneerers of the amount of learned allusion which an American lady can crowd into a couple of pages of a novel, we give the following, which Englishmen particularly, are expected to accept as a fair sample of the dinner-table-talk of our "educated females":

"Mr. Manning, who sat next to Edna, engaged her in an animated discussion concerning the value of a small volume containing two essays by Buckle, which he had sent her a few days previous.

Something which she said to the editor with reference to Buckle's extravagant estimate of Mill, brought a smile to the Englishman's lip, and, bowing slightly, he said:

'Pardon me, Miss Earl, if I interrupt you a moment to express my surprise at hearing Mill denounced by an American. His books on Representative Government and Liberty are so essentially democratic that I expected only gratitude and eulogy from his readers on this side of the Atlantic.'

Despite her efforts to control it, embarrassment unstrung her nerves, and threw a quiver into her voice, as she answered:

'I do not presume, sir, to 'denounce' a man whom Buckle ranks above all other living writers and statesmen; but, in anticipating the inevitable result of the adoption of some of Mill's proposed social reforms, I could not avoid recalling that wise dictum of Frederick the Great concerning philosophers—a saying which Buckle quotes so triumphantly against Plato, Aristotle, Descartes—even Bacon, Newton, and a long list of names illustrious in the annals of English literarture. Frederick declared: 'If I wanted to ruin one of my provinces, I would make over its government to the philosophers.' With due deference to Buckle's superior learning and astuteness, I confess my study of Mill's philosophy assures me that, if society should be turned over to the government of his theory of Liberty and Suffrage, it would go to ruin more rapidly than Frederick's province. Under his teachings the women of England might soon marshal their amazonian legions, and storm not only Parnassus but the ballot-box, the bench, and the forum. That this should occur in a country where a woman nominally rules, and certainly reigns, is not so surprising, but I dread the contagion of such an example upon America.'

'His influence is powerful, from the fact that he never takes up his pen without using it to break some social shackles; and its strokes are tremendous as those of the hammer of Thor. But surely, Miss Earl, you Americans can not with either good taste, grace, or consistency, upbraid England on the score of woman's rights' movements?'

'At least, sir, our statesmen are not yet attacked with this most loathsome of political leprosies. Only a few crazy fanatics have fallen victims to it, and if lunatic asylums were not frequently cheated of their dues, these would not be left at large, but shut up together in high-walled inclosures, where, like Sydney Smith's 'graminivorous metaphysicians,' or Reaumur's spiders, they could only injure one another and destroy their own webs. America has no Bentham, Bailey, Hare or Mill, to lend countenance or strength to the ridiculous clamor raised by a few unamiable and wretched wives, and as many embittered, disappointed, old maids of New England; whose absurd pretensions and disgraceful conduct can not fail to bring a blush of shame and smile of pity to the face of every truly refined American woman. The noble apology which Edmund Burke once offered for his countrymen, always recurs to my mind when I hear these 'women's conventions' alluded to: 'Because half a dozen grasshoppers under a fern make the field ring with their importunate chink, while thousands of great cattle repose beneath the shade of the British oak, chew the cud, and are silent, pray do not imagine that those who make the noise are the only inhabitants of the field; that, of course, they are many in number, or that, after all, they are many in number, or that, after all, they are other than the little, shrivelled, meagre, hopping, though loud and troublesome insects of the hour.' I think, sir, that the noble and true women of this continent earnestly believe that the day which invests them with the elective franchise would be the blackest in the annals of humanity, would ring the death-knell of modern civilization, of national prosperity, social morality and domestic happiness! and would consign the race to a night of degradation and horror infinitely more appalling than a return to primeval barbarism. Then every exciting political canvass would witness the revolting deeds of the furies who assisted in storming the Tuilleries; and repetitions of scenes enacted during the French Revolution, which mournfully attest how terrible indeed are female natures when once perverted. God, the Maker, tenderly anchored womanhood in the peaceful, blessed haven of home; and if man is ever insane enough to mar the divine economy, by setting women afloat on the turbulent, roaring sea of politics, they will speedily become pitiable wrecks. Sooner than such an inversion of social order, I would welcome Turkish bondage; for surely utter ignorance is infinitely preferable to erudite unwomanliness.'

'Even my brief sojourn in America has taught me the demoralizing tendency of the doctrine of 'equality of races and of sexes;' and you must admit, Miss Earl, that your country-women are growing dangerously learned,' answered Sir Roger, smiling.

'I am afraid, sir, that it is rather the quality than the quantity of their learning that makes them troublesome. One of your own noble seers has most gracefully declared: 'a woman may always help her husband,' (or race) 'by what she knows, however little; by what she half knows or misknows, she will only teaze him.' I never hear that much abused word 'equality' without a shudder; and visions of Cordeliers and Versailles furies. I have no aristocratic prejudices, for my grandfather was a blacksmith, and my father a carpenter; but I do not believe that 'all men are born free and equal;' and I think that two-thirds of the Athenians were only fit to tie Socrates' shoes, and not one half of Rome worthy to play valet and clasp the toga of Cato or of Cicero. Neither do I claim nor admit the equality of the sexes, whom God created with distinctive intellectual characteristics, which never can be merged or destroyed without outraging the decrees of nature, and sapping the foundations of all domestic harmony. Allow me to say, sir, in answer to your remark concerning learned women, that it seems to me great misapprehension exists relative to the question of raising the curriculum of female education. Erudition and effrontery have no inherent connection, and a woman has an unquestionable right to improve her mind, ad infinitum, provided she does not barter womanly delicacy and refinement for mere knowledge; and, in her anxiety to parade what she has gleaned, forget the decorum and modesty, without which she is monstrous and repulsive. Does it not appear reasonable that a truly refined woman, whose heart is properly governed, should increase her usefulness to her family and her race, by increasing her knowledge? A female pedant who is coarse and boisterous, or ambitious of going to Congress, or making stump speeches, would be quite as unwomanly and unlovely in character if she were utterly illiterate. I am afraid it is not their superior learning or ability which afflicts the nineteenth century with those unfortunate abnormal developments, familiarly known as 'strong-minded women;' but that it is the misdirection of their energies, the one-sided nature of their education. A woman who cannot be contented and happy in the bosom of her home, busied with ordinary womanly work, but fancies it is her mission to practise law or medicine, or go out lecturing, would be a troublesome, disagreeable persouage under all circumstances; and would probably stir up quite as much mischief, while using ungrammatical language, as if she were a perfect philologist. Whom did Socrates find most amiable and feminine, learned Diotima or unlearned Xantippe? I think even mankind would consent to see women as erudite as Dame, or Isotta Nagorola, provided they were also as exemplary in their domestic relations, as irreproachable and devoted wives and daughters as Eponina and Chelonis, Alcestis and Berengaria."

This truthful and lifelike delineation of the prandial usages and small talk of our best society, receives its finishing touches in the next paragraph, wherein the gallant Mr. Manning in the ladies' presence elegantly characterizes strong-minded women as "hideous hermaphrodites."

We are told that Macaria had a host of enthusiastic admirers. To all such we can conscientiously say that they will find St. Elmo no less delightful. But we would not advise any unlearned person to commence its perusal without preparing for the intellectual feast by placing a classical dictionary, a dictionary of quotations, a compendium of ancient history, and Appleton's New Eucyclopœdia, within their reach for constant reference. As it is evident that the volume was not written without the assiduous use of these valuable manuals, it is but natural that the reader should frequently require similar aid. The book is to be had at Roman's.

A BRILLIANT MONTHLY.

The January number of the Atlantic Monthly is perhaps the most brilliant upon the whole, that has been issued during the entire existence of that periodical. The December number of Blackwood, the last that has been received here, is not to be compared with it for literary merit. Lowell's poem, "Fitz Adam's Story." is the gem of this issue, and is the most truly American poem that has ever been written. It is conceived and expressed in the genuine spirit of Chaucer; but is in no sense an imitation. In fact, it is just such a poem as we can conceive that Chaucer would have written had he been like Lowell, a New Englander of the nineteenth century. Is not the following, for instance, in the very spirit of the Father of English Poetry?

The next whose fortune 'twas a tale to tell
Was one whom men, before they thought, loved well,
And after thinking wondered why they did.
For half he seemed to let them, half forbid,
And wrapped him so in humors, sheath on sheath,
'T was hard to guess the mellow soul beneath;
But, once divided, you took him to your heart,
While he appeared to bear with you as part
Of life's impertinence, and once a year
Betrayed his true self by a smile or tear,
Or rather something sweetly-shy and loath.
Withdrawn ere fully shown, and mixed of both
A cynic? Not precisely: one who thrust,
Against a heart too prone to love and trust,
Who so despised false sentiment he knew
Scarce in himself to part the false and true,
And strove to hide, by roughening o'er the skin,
Those cobweb nerves he could not dull within.
Gentle by birth, but of a stem decayed,
He shunned life's rivalries and hated trade;
On a small patrimony and larger pride,
He lived uneaseful on the Other Side
(So he called Europe), only coming West
To give his old-world appetite new zest.
A radical in thought, he puffed away
With shrewd contempt the dust of usage gray,
Yet loathed democracy as one who saw,
In what he longed to love, some vulgar flaw,
And, shocked through all his delicate reserves,
Remained a Tory by his taste and nerves.
His fancy's thrall, he drew all ergoes thence,
And thought himself the type of common sense,
Misliking women, not from cross or whim,
But that his mother shared too much in him.
And he half felt that what in them was grace
Made the unlucky weakness of his race.
What powers he had he hardly cared to know,
But sauntered through the world as though a show,
From comic weakness he had an eye
Keen as an acid for an alkali,
Yet you could feel, through his sardonic tone,
He loved them all, unless they were his own.

Other portions, still without the slightest trace of anything like imitation, strongly remind the reader of Goldsmith. Indeed, there are passages not one whit inferior to the finest to be found in the "Deserted Village." Take for instance, the following picture of the "best room" of a country tavern:

There was a parlor in the house, a room
To make you shudder with its prudish gloom.
The furniture stood round with such an air,
There seemed an old maid's ghost in every chair;
Each looked as it had scuttled to its place
And pulled extempore a Sunday face,
Too smugly proper for a world of sin,
Like boys on whom the minister comes in.
The table, fronting you with icy stare,
Strove to look witless that its legs were bare,
While the black sofa with its horse-hair pall
Gloomed like the bier for Comfort's funeral.
Two portraits graced the wall in grimmest truth,
Mister and Mistress W. in their youth,—
New England youth, that seems a sort of pill,
Half wish-I-dared, half Edwards on the Will,
Bitter to swallow, and which leaves a trace
Of Calvinistic cholic on the face.
Between them, o'er the mantel, hung in state
Solomon's temple, done in copperplate:
Invention pure, but meant, we may presume,
To give some Scripture sanction to the room.
Facing this last, two samplers you might see
Each, with its urn and stiffly weeping tree,
Devoted to some memory long ago
More faded than their lines of worsted woe;
Cut paper decked the frames against the flies,
Though none e'er dared an entrance who were wise,
And bushed asparagus in fading green
Added its shiver to the franklin clean.

It is stated in a foot note, that this poem was written many years ago, to form a part of a larger one, to be entitled, "The Nooning," made up of tales in verse, some of them grave, and some comic. If the whole is executed in the style of the present portion, it will constitute the most valuable, because the most characteristic poem, yet produced by any American author. We cannot refrain from one additional extract, which is as graphic as anything in the "Canterbury Tales" or the "Deserted Village:

While the first snow was mealy under feet
A team drawled creaking down Quompegan street;
Two cords of oak weighed down the grinding sled,
And cornstock fodder rustled overhead;
The oxen's muzzles, as they shouldered through,
Were silver-fringed; the driver's own was blue
As the course frock that swung below his knee.
Behind his load for shelter waded he;
His mittened hands now on his chest he beat,
Now stamped the stiffened cowhides on his feet
Hushed as a ghost's; his armpit scarce could hold
The walnut whipstock slippery-bright with cold.
What wonder if, the tavern as he past,
He looked and longed and stayed his beasts at last,
Who patient stood and veiled themselves in steam
While he explored the bar-room's ruddy gleam?

Such a poem as this, is of itself sufficient to lend lustre to a single number of any monthly, even were the rest of its contents of no more than the average magazine order of excellence; but we have in addition a noble and characteristic poem by Emerson, another by Whittier, a third by Stedman, and several specimen pages of a translation into English blank verse of the first book of the Iliad, by Bryant. Among the prose contributions are: the first instalment of Dr. Holmes' new novel, the Guardian Angel; a Plea for Culture, by T. W. Higginson; the Strange Friend, a singular story by Bayard Taylor; and a delightful article entitled, the Kingdom of Infancy, so much in the style and vein of Frank Bret Harte, that we should unhesitatingly have attributed it to him but for allusions to certain "Boston-boy experiences" on the part of the writer, and also to continental travel, which it contains. The weakest articles of the number, or more properly speaking—the only ones that are not characterized by striking merit of one kind or another, are the two political ones on impeachment and impartial suffrage, respectively. In this enumeration we have forgotten to mention what will prove to a great majority of readers, perhaps, the most interesting contribution of all, nnmely, n paper by James Partou on Henry Ward Beecher's Church. Mr. Parton nppears to think that Mr. Beecher has discovered or invented something very like a new style of religion, and one eminently adapted to the American mind; and so high is his appreciation of the Plymouth-Church style of conducting public worship, nnd of "dealing with the souls of modern men," that he suggests that "it would be well for all persons aspiring to the clericnl vocation to begin their preparation by making a pilgrimage to Brooklyn Heights."

AMUSEMENTS.

Maguire's Opera House.—On Saturday last, John McCullough whose careful and artistic impersonation of "Hamlet" excited a desire in the mind of the public to see him in other Shaksperian parts, nttempted Richard III. Mr. McCullough's "Hamlet" was, as we have said, good; nnd if it did not display original genius, was unobjectionable. Mr. McCullough's "Richard" was, in the passionnte passages, about as bnd as could be imagined; the quiet passages were read with discretion, and evinced an appreciation of their meaning. The dream scene was horribly bad; a San Francisco audience is too polite to hiss, but the solemn silence (broken only by an ironical "A-a-h" from an individual who pretended to be perfectly overcome with its force) which in gallery, dress-circle and parquette followed, "A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!" was quite ns expressive as any sibilation could have been. Mr. McCullough must unlearn much which he learned under Forrest. In particular, he must make no grimace on the stage which he has not practised many times previously before a looking-glass; and should, until he has made his frontispiece more flexible, refrain from mak- ing faces at all.

The Opera House was crowded on Wednesday night, when Augustin Daly's dramatization of Charles Reade's novel of Griffith Gaunt was produced. The plot of this play, entitled Griffith Gaunt, or Jealousy, is ns follows:

"Griffith Gaunt—" a Cumberland 'Squire, (John McCullough) falls in love with Kate Peyton, (Miss Kate Denin,) the daughter of an impoverished country gentlemnn, "Squire Peyton," (D. C. Anderson.) "Griffiith Gaunt" has been brought up by Mr. Charlton of Bolton Hall, whose property he expects to inherit. Mr. Charlton supposes that "Griffith" will marry "Kate Peyton," and has expressed his determination to leave his property to either him or "Kate;" he says: "It makes no difference to which, as they will enjoy it together." At the opening of the play, "Griffith" and "Kate" have returned from hunting. "Griffith" is jealous of "George Neville," (John Wilson) who is in love with "Kate;" "Kate" loves "Griffith," but will not say "yes," a quarrel takes place, and "Griffith" leaves her determined to forget her in a foreign land. He has scarcely had time to mount his horse before "Tom Leicester," game-keeper at Hernshaw, who is popularly supposed to be his half-brother, enters with a letter addressed to Griffith, from Bolton Hall, which contains the intelligence of Mr. Charlton's death. This he delivers to "Kate," she requests "Mr. Neville," who makes his appearnnce soon after, to gallop after "the gentleman who may be seen riding up the hill," and deliver it to him. He is about to do so, when he happens to discover that it is addressed to his rival "Griffith Gaunt," he then refuses, "Kate" laughs at him for thinking it a love-letter from her, and declares she will take his horse and deliver it herself. "Ned Galton" (E. Melville) "Neville's" chum tells "Griffith" that "Neville's" horse was accepted by "Kate" as a love-token, and that "Kate" has accepted the master as well ns the steed. "Griffith Gaunt" seeks "Neville," and on his indirectly confirming the false story, brands him as a liar. A duel ensues in which "Griffith" is slightly wounded. When the will is read at Bolton Hall, it is found that the property is left to "Kate." "Griffith" resigns his pretensions to her hand on her father taunting him with the loss of the estate. "Kate" overhears the conversation, comes forward, and by clever management, overcomes "Griffith's" scruples; he proposes, is accepted, and the two become one. "Caroline Ryder" (Mrs. Jackson), "Kate's" lady's-maid, is in love with "Griffith," and determining to be revenged on "Kate," becomes a female "Iago." "Kate" is of a devotionnl turn, and spends much of her time with her priest, "Brother Leonard." (E. N. Thayer). "Caroline Ryder" makes "Griffith" jealous of the priest by slanderous insinuations, and finally brings the priest and "Kate" together, leads "Griffith" to the spot and causes him in a fit of jealous rage, to hurl the priest to the ground, trample on him and rush off, leaving his wife as he declares "forever." After a lapse of three months, we find "Griffith" ill in bed, in the Packhorse Inn, Lancashire, kept by "Old Vint," (George Purdey), and "Dame Vint," (Mrs. Judah). "Griffith" is tenderly nursed during his sickness, by their daughter, "Mercy Vint," (Miss Julia Corcoran), who has n rustic lover, "Paul Carrick," (W. Barry), n cow doctor. "Griffith" has learned to love "Mercy" during his illness, and on his recovery asks her to become his wife. He has assumed the name of "Tom Leicester" since his arrival in Lancashire. After the marriage has taken place, the real "Tom Leicester," who is searching for "Griffith," meets "Mercy Vint" at a fair to which she has come with her mother immedintely after the conclusion of the ceremony. "Tom Leicester" discovers that his late master has borrowed his name and married again, and giving "Mercy's" lover, "Paul Carrick," a token from "Kate" to present to "Griffith," goes home. This token—the bullet he received in the duel—is given to "Griffith" by "Mercy," and leads to the discovery of the truth. "Griffith," fearing prosecution for bigamy, hastens to his first wife for the purpose of procuring his £2,000. "Kate" gives him proof of her innocence, which he goes into his chamber to read. While he is becoming convinced of her innocence, "Kate" is made aware of his doings in Lancashire by "Caroline Ryder," who has wheedled the truth out of "Tom Leicester." "Kate" swears vengeance; goes out with "Tom Leicester," who being drunk, falls into the river and is drowned. "Griffith" leaving the house shortly afterward, seeing this accident happen, calls, "murder!" "help!" The body is, after the lapse of many days, found in an unrecognizable condition, and supposed to be that of "Griffith Gaunt," he having gone away into concealment. Kate is arrested and tried for murder. "Caroline Ryder" gives evidence against her, and is cross-examined by "Kate." "Mercy Vint" appears in court with a letter from "Griffith" received two days before, but this letter is not admitted as sufficient proof of his being alive, "Mercy" being unable to swear to the handwriting. At the last, when "Kate" has given up all hope and the case is about to close, "Griffith" rushes into court, "Kate" is acquitted; nothing is said about his bigamy, they kiss and are friends, and the curtain falls.

Griffith Gaunt is a very good dramatization of the novel. Augustin Daly, instead of sticking slavishly to the story told by the novelist, has taken just so much as was suitable to his purpose as a dramatist. There is no unnecessary "talk" in this play, nnd the scenes follow one another in natural order. It was produced nt the Opera House with a strong cast. John McCullough played "Griffith Gaunt" very well indeed, and carefully refrained from over-doing the emotional parts. Miss Kate Denin's impersonation of "Kate Peyton" was well sustained throughout, and in the trial scene she was rewarded with much applause. Mrs. Harry Jackson "brought down the house" again and again by the admirable manner in which she brought out the fine points in the character of "Caroline Ryder." When seized by the throat by "Tom Leicester," who threatens to murder her for worming his secrets out of him, the manner in which she disarms his resentment by smiling in his face, was excellent. Harry Edwards made the most of the part of "Tom Leicester," and caused roars of laughter. Miss Julia Corcoran played "Mercy Vint" very prettily, nnd quite gained the sympathies of the audience for that wronged young woman. Harry Jackson caused much laughter by his make up and acting in the role of the "Attorney General," but made the character too low comedy to satisfy the more judicious of the audience. The fair scene was well managed, and the brush of Andrew Torning added much to its success. Griffith Gaunt is announced till further notice. It deserves to have a long run, being one of the most attractive pieces ever produced in this city.

The season at the Opera House, under the management of Charles Tibbetts, has opened most auspiciously.

The Manager pro tem. having had long experience in the business, will, udoubtedly, cater to the amusement of the public in a manner that will cause the absence of the great "Head Centre" of theatricals on the Pacific coast to be little felt.

On Monday, Miss Kate Denin, who has, during her stay here, achieved an enviable degree of notoriety, will take a farewell benefit, previous to her departure for the East.

Metropolitan Theatre.—The houses at the Metropolitan theatre have been pretty good during the week, and the performance has been ditto. The ballet of the Vivandiere is one of the best which has been produced. Tomorrow, the Blaisdell Bell Ringers will give a sacred concert, in which we presume the tune played will be "Hark! the Merry Christ-Church Bells!" On Monday, we understand, the Sheep's Foot, in which Willie Edouin, who has, we are glad to state, recovered from his recent indisposition, will make his re-appearance, will be produced. As we have received no bill, we can give no further particulars.

Dramatic Readings.—On Tuesday evening Mrs. H. L. Weaver will give a literary entertainment at Maguire's Academy of Music. The Stockton Independent speaking of this lady, says:—

"Entirely free from the airy pretension and straining, after effect which characterize the style of many of our professional public readers, she reads with that graceful ease, fine intonation, and clear and distinct expression, which is indispensable to reading of a high order of merit."

The price of admission has been set at fifty cents.

Woodward's Garden.—This beautiful suburban resort is now fresh and beautiful in its growing shrubbery and verdure The shell walks are dry nnd hard, and the grounds are in a most beautiful condition.

Sacred Concert.—To-morrow evening, Mrs. Laura Cuppy having gone to Sacramento to deliver one of her charming lectures, and thus left the Opera House unoccupied, a sacred concert will be given, in which Signorina Brambilla, M. and Mme. Heine, and Signor Mancusi will appear Sherman's March Through Georgia.—This fine painting on exhibition at Snow & Roos's Art-Gallery, 219 Montgomery street, has been heartily admired by the thousands who have visited it. It will remain on exhibition but a short time longer. The admission fee, 25 cents, is so reasonable that everyone should see Sherman's March, pictorially represented.

Original Wit.

There is such a rich hank of wit on which people of the present day may draw if they present checks representing a power of memory and the faculty of passing this small change of genius in such a manner that it will be received that few people need work in the mint of wit. Tkere are so many of these thieves of fun abroad, thieves who clean, repair, alter and re-fit the witty sayings of men of genius and pass them off as origiual, that even a fool may in course of time eventually acquire sufficient skill to enable him to rob the thieves, and will in course of time he accounted a wit. There is no scuse of shame in these predaceous fools. Until Time shall he no more there shall be found a fool, who, on seeing a man smoking a pipe will not blush to nsk: "Is that a meerschaum, or a mere sham?" The battle of Armageddon will he fought before one of these indefinite articles will fear to exclaim when lighting the lamp: "This will throw some light on the subject." There are people who "write for the papers" who are not nshamed to appropriate weak, worn out "jokes," made hy their confreres in iniquity and reproduce them. Whenever the Lion's mouth snaps at one of these small deer, it having been guilty of some sad absurdity, an illusion is made to "the ass in the lion's skin. "Bottom with the head of an ass," "the ears of the ass visible," or some other eqnally crushing phrase is used as applicable to the "Lion's Mouth." This is glorious fun, and we trust that it is appreciated as it deserves to he by the public.

Asphaltum Pavement.—The unsightly wooden planks which have so long disgraced the sidewalks of our city are fast giving way to handsome pavements of asphaltum. The asphaltum pavement laid down in so many parts of the city, hy the Pacific Asphaltum Company uuder the supervision of Mr. M. E. Fitz-Gibbons, has proved far cheaper than the wooden planking which used to be so much used. Property holders who study their comfort and their pockets, will choose asphaltum instead of wood and thus add much to the appearance of the city. The Pacific Conpany are at present employing an immense force of men, and it is to he hoped that it will not he long before the sidewalks in every portion of the city are paved with their asphaltum pavement. *

California Products.—California is now sufficiently old a State to manufacture nearly all the articles it needs for home consumption. In spite of Teetotal organizations, Californians generally maintains that good whisky is a good thing, a thing to he desired, a thing to make a man merry without making him sick. Messrs. Hunter, Wand & Co., 609 Front street, are at present manufacturing an article of wheat whisky which is to the Pacific Coast what Cutter's Bourbon is to Kentucky, and destined finally to drive out of this market all the evil spirits which are imported from the Eastern States. *

DR. BOURNE'S MEDICINE CHEST—15.

"Medicine Chests always contain bitter pills and nauseous draughts; intended, however, for the benefit of those who take their contents."

A good thing for a cold or stormy day—when the winds fairly howl and the rain pours down in torrents, or it is only an ordinary day of "bad weather," then is the time for all who are aching with pain or "feel bad" on general principles, to take one of "Dr. Bourne's Baths,' and presto, they find that a glorious change has come over them, worth ten times the cost of money and time. Try it and prove it. The worse the day the better the bath. No. 10, Masonic Temple, Post street.

"Whilst upon the subject of warm baths, permit me to add that a vast amount of sickness is endured, and, of course, many deaths caused, by more attention not being paid to it. The intimate relation between our outward covering and all of the internal organs, the "cutaneo-hepatic sympathy," as physicians term that existing between the skin and liver, prove the imperative necessity of keeping this external covering in the best of order. Now, because it has always been fashionable as well as health-invigorating to visit mineral springs during the summer, invalids put off going to these Siloam thermal pools until that period; whereas, winter is the time in which such bathing is beneficial. The allopathic, or pill dragging disciples of Esculapius, in San Francisco, often advised me not to take a hot bath during cold, cloudy and stormy weather, lest I should take, or increase, a catarrh: but in this, I think the great steam man, Dr. Bourne, is in the right, since he advises people feeling out of sorts during such season, that then, above all others, is the time to take a hot bath."—Correspondent of the Daily Alta California.

Cures Guaranteed to the Sick, in almost all cases—even after the medicine doctors have poisoned them with drugs, to the last point of safety in not taking life—by Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, who can make the guarantee, because he neither employs drugs, nor the cajolery of mesmerism, but proceeds upon the basis of square, solid, natural common sense and science. *

The Sick are Quickly Cured, without medicines, bleeding, blistering, or plastering, by Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, who also guarantees cures in almost all cases, for a stipulated fee. *

Fresh Maccaroni.—Complaints are daily made by families, and boarders at hotels and restaurants, of soups made from maccaroni and vermicelli that has grown stale and wormy, being kept too long on hand by retailers; some of which has been in the market since 1849. There may be some who are not aware that there is in our city a large establishment for the manufacture of all kinds of maccaroni, vermicelli and all the principal Italian preparations for soups, made from fresh farina, and sold at cheaper rates than the imported article. Encourage home manufacture, and leave your orders at the Italian manufactory. No 706 Sansome street, between Jackson and Pacific. *

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK II.

CHAPTER XI.—THE AMERICAN LETTERS.

STEWART ROUTH was as hard a man as could readily be found, but his hardness was not proof against his meeting with George Dallas, and he showed Harriet how great a trial it was to him, and how much he feared his own constancy, when he told her he thought she had better not be present at their meeting. The curse of an unholy alliance had fallen upon these two, and was now beginning to make itself felt. Each was desirous to conceal from the other the devices to which they were compelled to resort, in order to keep up the false appearances to which they were condemned; in all their life there was no time in which they were free from restraint, except in solitude. But, though the effect was in each case the same, the origin was widely different. Harriet suffered for her husband's sake; he, entirely for his own. He had calculated that if anything in his appearance, voice, and manner, should escape his control, George would be certain to impute it to the natural feelings of horror and regret with which he would have received the intelligence conveyed to him by Harriet, of George's discovery of the identity of the murdered man.

"You had better remain up stairs until I call you," Routh had said to Harriet, "when Dallas comes to dinner. It will be easier for you," he added. Harriet was sitting listlessly by her dressing-table while he spoke, and he stood behind her chair, and looked gloomily at the reflection of her face in the glass.

She smiled faintly. "Thank you, Stewart," she said; "it will be easier." Then, after a brief pause, "Would you very much mind my not going down to dinner at all?"

So far from minding it, Routh instantly felt that her absence would be a great relief. It would enable him to sound George thoroughly, to scheme upon whatever discoveries he should make concerning his future plans; and then, Harriet had done all the hard work, had prepared the way for him, had got over the difficulty and the danger. A little unpleasantness, some disagreeable emotion, must indeed be encountered, that was inevitable, but everything might go off well, and if so, Harriet's restraining presence, Harriet's face, with its constant reminder in it, would be much better out of sight.

"Not at all," he answered. "Stay-up-stairs if you like. I'll tell Dallas you are a little knocked up, but will be all right in the morning."

"He will not be surprised, I dare say," she replied, "though it was not my way to be knocked up, formerly."

"Nor to be always harping on one string, either; and I can't say there's a change for the better," said Routh, roughly. Once or twice of late the innate ruffianism of the man had come out toward her, from whom it had once been so scrupulously concealed. But she did not heed it; not a quiver crossed the drooping rigid face, at which Routh once more glanced covertly before he left the room. It would have been impossible to tell whether she had even heard him.

Routh went down to the well-appointed dining-room, so different to the scene of the dinners of which George had formerly partaken, in the character of his guest. Wherever Harriet was, neatness and propriety never were absent, but there was something more than neatness and propriety in Routh's house now. Nevertheless, the look which the master of the house cast upon the well-laid, well-lighted table, with its perfect, unobtrusive, unpretentious appointments, was full of gloom. He wished he had not come down so soon; the inevitable meeting assumed a more portentous aspect with every minute that it was delayed: he wished he had not told Harriet to remain in her room. The fact was, Routh was staggered by the first failure of his plans. Everything had gone so right with him; his calculations had been fulfilled so exactly, so unfailingly, until now, and this unexpected accident had befallen through a blunder of his own. True, Harriet had met it with amazing tact, and had so treated it, that if only it could be further dexterously managed, it might be turned to ultimate advantage, and an incalculable strengthening of his position. Let him keep his thoughts to that view of the question, and keep his nerves still. Were they going to play him false now, his nerves, which had never failed him before? So Mr. Stewart Routh passed a very unpleasant quarter of an hour before his expected guest arrived. He had just had recourse, as much in weakness as in nervousness, to a flask of brandy which stood on the sideboard, and had drank off half a glassful, when a knock at the door was quickly answered by the grave and correct man-servant, who formed an important and eminently respectable feature of the improved household of the Rouths, and the well-known quick tread of Dallas crossed the hall.

"Well, Routh, old fellow!"

"George, my boy; delighted to see you!"—and the meeting was over; and Routh, looking into the young man's face, saw that not a trace of suspicion rested upon it, and that the material before him was as plastic as ever.

"Harriet is not very well this evening," said Routh, "and begs you will excuse her if she does not make her appearance. I undertook to make it all right, and indeed I am rather glad we should be alone just at first. I have so much to say and to hear, and Harriet has had a long talk with you already."

"Yes," said George, and his smile was at once overcast, and his face darkened into gloom, "I had a long talk with her. Of course, Routh, she told you the dreadful discovery I have made, and the curious way in which I am implicated in this ghastly affair."

"She told me all about it, my dear fellow," returned Routh.

"But here comes dinner, and we must postpone discussion until afterward. I can only say now that I think Harriet's view of the matter perfectly correct, and her advice the soundest possible; it generally is, you know of old." And then Routh made a slight signal suggestive of caution to his guest, and the two men stood by the fireplace and talked of trifles while the irreproachable man-servant set the dishes upon the table, assisted by a neat parlor-maid.

While far more serious thoughts were busy in George's mind, over the surface of it was passing observation of the changed order of things, and an amused perception of the alteration in Routh himself. It was as he had said in his letter—he had assumed the responsibility, the pose, the prosperity of the genuine ploddiug "City man;" and he looked the part to absolute perfection. "And yet," George thought, "he knew that one who was with us two the last time we met has met with a violent death; he knows that I am in a position as painful and perilous as it is extraordinary, and that he is indirectly mixed up with the dreadful event, and he is as cool and unconcerned as possible. I suppose it is constitutional, this callousness; but I'm not sure it is very enviable. However one thing is certain—it makes him the very best adviser one can possibly have under such circumstances. He won't be carried away by the horror of the circumstances, anyhow."

The dinner proceeded, and George yielded rapidly to the influences which had been so powerful, and which he had been so determined to resist, when out of Routh's presence and under the sway of his penitence and his determination to reform. The conversation of Routh asserted all its old charm; the man's consummate knowledge of the world, his varied experience, the perfect refinement and tact which he could display at will, the apparent putting off of old things, the tone of utter respectability which enabled George's newly shapened conscience to consent to the fascination as really as his predilection, had more than ever an irresistible attraction for the young man. During dinner, which, in the altered state of affairs, involved the presence of the servant, Routh kept the conversation almost entirely to Dallas' own doings, plans, and prospects. He knew Amsterdam well, and talked of Dutch art and the history of the Low Countries, with much skill and fluency. Without an allusion which could supply material for the curiosity and the gossip of the servants, he made George understand that the Bohemian element had been completely banished from his life and its associations; he sketched a plan of London life for George, moderately prosperous, quite practical, and entirely inoffensive. He made him, in short, as ready to congratulate himself on the resumption of their intimacy in the present phase of his moral being, as he had been to rejoice in its formation under former conditions.

Routh's spirits rose with his senses. He felt a depraved pride in the devilish skill he possessed in his grand faculty of deception. He excelled in it, he revelled in its exercise, and he had not enjoyed it, in this orthodox way, of late. He had been making money, it is true, and doing some real work as well as a good deal of swindling in the process, but he had had only the opportunity of using a certain set of his faculties. His persuasive eloquence, his personal influence, his skillful and expansive but shrewd falsehood, had lain dormant for some time. As a singer who has lost his voice for a time suddenly finds the liquid notes filling the air with all their accustomed power and sweetness, and exults in the recovered faculty, so Stewart Routh marked the pleasure, the enthusiasm, almost enabling George to forget the coming painful topic of discussion from which only a few minutes divided them, as he listened to the voice of the charmer, who had never before charmed him so wisely nor so well.

At length the wine was set upon the table, and then they were alone; and by this time, so complete did Routh feel his resumption of power over George Dallas, that it was with indifference only very little feigned that he said:

"And now, George, let us go into this sad business about poor Deane. It has quite floored Harriet, as I dare say you guessed."

"And so you give me the same counsel as Harriet has given me," said George, when he had to tell his story all over again, and had worked himself up to a new fit of excitement over the horror of the murder, and the dreadful idea of ignorance of the deed in which the dead man's relatives still remained.

"I do, indeed, George," said Routh, solemnly; "in taking any other course, you will expose yourself to certain difficulty, and, indeed, to imminently probable danger. While you have been telling me all this, I have been thinking how fortunate it was that I was away at the time, and so down upon luck, that I never knew or thought about my public affairs, and so did not hear of the murder except in the vaguest way. In the peculiar lustre of our London civilization, you know, George, somebody found dead in the river is so frequent a mote, that nobody thinks about it."

"Not in a general way," said George; "but they made so much of this, and were so confident that it was a political affair. I cannot understand how any of us escaped hearing of it."

"Yes," acquiesced Routh, "it is very extraordinary, but such things do happen. And rather fortunate, it seems, that they do, for if I had dropped in on the inquest, it would have been very awkward for you."

"Why?" said George; "after all, the truth must have come out, and all this misery about my mother would have been avoided."

An evil look from Routh's eye lighted for a moment on the young man's unconscious face, then glanced away as he said:

"You forget that all I could have said must have strongly favored the notion that the man who wore the coat which the waiter swore to, and was last seen with Deane, was the last person who ever saw him alive. If I had had time to think, of course I shouldn't have said a word about it; but if I had been hurried into speaking, that is what I must have said. Come, George, you are much too sensitive about this matter. Of course, I'm sorry for Deane, but I care a great deal more for you, and I decline to look at any part of this matter except such as concerns you. As to his relatives, as that part of the business appears to distress you most keenly, I must set your mind at rest by informing you that he had not a near relation in the world."

"Indeed," said George. "How do you know?"

"He told me so," said Routh. "You will say, perhaps, that is not very trustworthy evidence, but I think we may take it in this particular instance for more than its general worth. He was the coldest, hardest, most selfish fellow I ever knew in the whole course of my experience, which had included a good deal of scoundreldom, and he seemed so thoroughly to appreciate the advantages of such isolation, that I believe it really did exist."

"He was certainly a mystery in every way," said George. "Where did he live? We never knew him—at least I never did—except loafing about at taverns, and places of the kind."

"I don't know where he lived," said Routh; "he never gave me an address, or rendezvous, except at some City eating-house, or West-end billiard-room."

"How very extraordinary that no one recognised the description. It was in every way remarkable, and the fur-lined coat must have been known to some one. If I had seen any mention of the murder, I should have remembered that coat in a moment."

"Would you," said Routh. "Well, it would have thrown me off the scent, for I never happened to see it. An American coat, no doubt. However, I have a theory, which I think you will agree with, and which is this: I suspect he had been living somewhere in another name—he told me he wasn't always known by that of Deane—under not very creditable circumstances, and as he must have had some property, which, had he been identified, must have been delivered up to the authorities, those in the secret have very wisely held their tongues."

"You think there was a woman in the case?"

Routh smiled a superior smile.

"Of course I think so; and knowing as much, or as little of the man, as you and I know, we are not likely to blame her much for consulting her own interests exclusively. This seems a curious case to us, because we happen to know about it: but just think, in this enormous city, in this highly criminal age, how common such things may be. How many persons may not have dropped out of existence since you and I last met, utterly unknown and uncared for, amid the mass of human beings here? It is no such rare thing, George, believe me, and you must listen to reason in this matter, and run absurd risks to do an imaginary piece of justice."

This was Harriet's counsel merely put in colder, more worldly words. Routh watched his listener keenly as he gave it, and saw that his point was gained. He would have been glad now to have turned the conversation into some other channel; and did partially succeed in directing it to Dallas' literary prospects and intentions, but only for a time. George pertinaciously came back to the murder, to his mother's state, to his apprehensions that she might never recover, and to his altered feelings toward Mr. Carruthers.

Routh made very effective use of the latter topic. He enlarged upon the pride and sensitiveness of Mr. Carruthers; adverted to the pleasure with which, in case of her recovery, his mother would hail the better state of things for which Mr. Carruthers' letter to his step-son, combined with George's adoption of a new and steady career, would afford an opening; and congratulated George upon having been saved from taking any step which, by bringing public notice upon himself in so terrible a matter, must have incensed the proud man, and irritated him against him incalculably.

George was amenable to this line of reasoning, and with only occasional divergence from the main topic of their discourse, the evening passed away, and the two men parted for the night, it having been agreed that Harriet should be taken into consultation in the morning, and a well-considered letter written to Mr. Carruthers.

George Dallas was in the dining-room on the following morning before Routh and Harriet came in, and he found a letter directed to himself, in a hand with which he was unacquainted, on the breakfast-table. He broke the seal with some alarm and much curiosity. A slip of paper folded round two thin limp letters, formed the enclosure; it bore only the words: "My dear boy, I forgot to give you these letters. You had better read them. I think they are from your uncle. E. B."

George sat down by the window, through which the soft air of a morning, bright and beutiful even in London, came refreshingly in. He looked at the postmarks of the two letters, and broke the seal of that which bore the earliest date, first. As he read the letter, which was long, and closely written, an occasional exclamation escaped him, and when he had finished its perusal, he threw it hastily down, and impatiently tore open the other. This one on the contrary, was brief; he had read the few lines it contianed in a few minutes, with a face expressive of the utmost astonishment, when Harriet, whose noiseless step had escaped his hearing, entered the room.

Without pausing to exchange the customary greeting, she came quickly toward him, and asked him "What was the matter? Had he any bad news?"

"Not bad news, but most astonishing, most unexpected news, Mrs. Routh. These letters have been sent to me from Poynings; they are written to my mother by my uncle, her only brother, and they announce his immediate arrival in England. How fortunate that Ellen should send them to me. But I don't know what to do about sending the news to my mother. She ought to know it. What can I do?"

"Communicate with Mr. Carruthers at once, George," said Harriet, in a tone of quiet decision with which she was accustomed to settle matters submitted to her judgment. "He is with her, and knows what she can bear. Sit down now and have some breakfast, and tell me about this uncle of yours. I never heard you mention him."

She took her place at the head of the table. She was dressed, as he had been accustomed to see her, with neatness and taste; there was no change in her appearance in that respect, yet there was a change—a change which had struck George painfully yesterday, and which, in the midst of all agitation of to-day, he could not keep from noticing.

"Are you well, Mrs. Routh?" he asked her, anxiously. "Are you sure you are well? I don't like your looks."

"Never mind my looks, George," Harriet said, cheerfully; "I am very well. Get on with your breakfast and your story. Routh will be here presently, and I want to know all about it before he comes. He gets impatient at my feminine curiosity, you know."

The smile with which she spoke was but the ghost of her former smile, and George still looked at her strangely, but he obeyed her, and proceeded with his breakfast and his story.

"I don't know much about my mother's family," he said, "because they did not like her marriage with my father, and she kept aloof from them, and her parents were dead before she had the opportunity of appeasing them by making the fine match they would have cousidered her marriage with Mr. Carruthers to be. I know that some of their relatives were settled in America, some at New York, some in South Carolina, and my mother's brother, Mark Felton—queer name, puritanical and fanatical, with a touch of the association of assassination about it—was sent out to New York when quite a child. I forgot to tell you that it was my mother's stepfather and her mother who objected to her first marriage—her own father died when she was an infant—and on her mother's second marriage with a Mr. Creswick—a poor, proud, dissipated fellow, I fancy, though I never heard much about him—the American branch of the family sent for the boy. My mother has told me they would have taken her too, and her step-father would not have made the least objection—we have not been lucky in step-fathers, Mrs. Routh—but her mother would not stand it; and so she kept her child. Not for many years, for she married my father when she was only seventeen. Her brother was just twenty then, and had been taken into the rich American firm of his relatives, and was a prosperous man. She knew very little of him, of course. I believe he took the same view of her marriage as her mother had taken; at all events, the first direct communication between them took place when my mother was left a handsome, poor, young widow, with one boy, who did not make much delay about proving himself the graceless and ungrateful son you know him to have been."

George's voice faltered, and an expression of pain crossed his face. Harriet looked at him kindly, and laid her soft white hand on his.

"That is all over, you know," she said. "You will not err in that way again."

"But the consequences, Mrs. Routh, the consequences. Think of my mother now! However," and he drew a long breath, and threw his shoulders back, like a man who tries to shift a burden, "I must go on with my story. There's not much more to tell, however. My mother might have had a home for herself and me in her brother's house, but she could not bear dependence, and has told me often that she regarded unknown relatives as the most formidable kind of strangers. Her brother's wife made him resent my mother's determination to remain in England, and do the best she could for us both on our small means. Of course, all this was an old story long before I knew anything about it, and I fancy that it is only lately any correspondence has taken place between my mother and her brother. From this letter" (he touched the first he had read) "I can divine the nature of that correspondence. My mother," said George, sadly, "has appealed to her brother on behalf of her prodigal son, and her brother has told her his sorrows in return; they have been heavy, and in one respect not unlike her own. He, too, has an only son, and seems to find little happiness in the fact."

"Did you not know of your cousin's existence until now?" asked Harriet.

"Oh yes, I knew of it, in a kind of way; in fact, I just knew he existed, and no more. I don't think my mother knew more. I fancy in some previous letter he told her of his wife's death and the general unsatisfactoriness of Arthur."

"He—your uncle, I mean—is then a widower?"

"Yes," replied George. "I won't bother you with the whole of this long letter, Mrs. Routh; the gist of it is this: My cousin, Arthur Felton, is not a good son, nor a good anything I fancy, for I find my uncle congratulating my mother upon my affection for her, my good feeling, in spite of all—(bless the poor man! he little knew how his words would wound, and how ill deserved is the extenuation!)—and prophesying all manner of good things about me. It appears this hopeful son of his has been in Europe for some months, and probably in London for some months too, as my uncle says—stay, here is the passage: 'Arthur has with him a letter of introduction to you and Mr. Carruthers, some trifles from this side of the world which I thought you might like, and my instructions to make his cousin's acquaintance as soon as possible. You speak of George as living habitually in London; I hope by this time they have met, are good friends, and are, perhaps, chumming together. I have not heard from Arthur for some time. He is a careless correspondent, and not at any time so regardful of the feelings of other people as he might be. I dare say the first intelligeuce I shall have of him from England, as he cannot possibly want money'—that looks bad, Mrs. Routh," said George, breaking off abruptly, and looking up at her; "that looks bad—'as he cannot possibly want money, will be from you. I know you will receive him kindly, and I earnestly hope he may make a favorable impression on Mr. Carruthers.'" Here George left off reading the letter, and looked blankly at Harriet.

"And he has never presented himself at Poynings, has he?" she asked.

"Never, that I know of; and of course Ellen Brookes would have told me, if he had. Besides, you see this letter was late for the mail, and arrived with this other one. My mother never saw either, and they have been lying more than six weeks at Poynings."

"No doubt your cousin is still in Paris. All Americans delight in Paris. He would be in no hurry to leave Paris, depend on it, if he had no more interesting acquaintance than that of an aunt and a cousin to make in London, and as much time before him as he chose."

"I should think with you, Mrs. Routh, only that this letter written at New York on the third of April, says my uncle had heard from Arthur, who had merely written him a line from London, saying: 'Here I am. Particulars by next mail.' The mail brought no particulars, and my uncle writes to my mother, subsequently to this long letter, which is cheerful enough, you'll observe, that he is a prey to a presentiment that something is wrong with Arthur, also that he has conceived the strongest wish to come to England and see her, and especially to see me—that he has sufficient money and leisure to gratify the inclination—that he will wait for the chance of further intelligence of Arthur, and to arrange certain business matters, a month longer, and then come to England. He seems to have formed a remarkably elementary notion of my respected stepfather's manners, customs, and general disposition, for he proposes to present himself at Poynings immediately on his arrival, and never appears to entertain the least misgiving as to the cordiality of his reception. He must have been astonished at getting no answer to either letter, and I should think must have had his presentiments considerably sharpened and strengthened by the fact."

Here George referred to the date of the later of the two letters, and exclaimed:

"By Jove! I should not be surprised if he were at Poynings now!"

At this moment Routh entered the room, and, in his turn, had the new aspect of affairs explained to him, but at no great length. He displayed very little interest in the matter, thought it very probable that Mr. Felton might have arrived in England, or even at Poynings, but did not see what George could do in that case.

"You can't go and entertain another man at a house where you haven't the entrée yourself," he said. "I suppose the old woman will let you know if he really comes to Poynings. In the meantime, send the letters on to Mr. Carruthers. You expect to get his address from some girl or other—his niece. I think I understood Harriet—and ask what is to be done, It's rather a lucky turn up, Dallas, I take it, and will help your good-boy intentions toward your stepfather wonderfully, to have a rich uncle to act as a connecting link between you. By-the-by, he's sure to set you up in life, George, and period ical literature will be robbed of a shining luminary."

George did not altogether like the tone in which all this was said. It was a little sneering, and altogether careless. Nothing was so difficult to Routh, as it is always is to men of his class, as the sustained assumption of interest in any affairs but their own; and now that his anxieties of the previous day were relieved, and he had no immediate object in which Dallas was concerned, to gain, he was impatient of any interruption of his immediate pursuits, and harsh and rough with him. He sat down and ate his breakfast hastily, while he read a heap of letters which lay beside his plate.

"I don't know, indeed," George had replied good humoredly to the speech which had jarred upon him; "but you are busy, Routh, and I won't trouble you with my business just now. Mrs. Routh and I will discuss the letter to Mr. Carruthers."

"A telegram for Mr. Dallas," said the irreproachable servant, who entered the room while George was speaking. "Please to sign this, sir."

Routh looked up from his letters, Harriet set down the teapot, and quietly taking up the slip of paper which the man had laid upon the table by George's elbow, signed it with his name, writing it with a pencil which hung at her waist. The servant left the room, and George said:

"I was not wrong. This is from my uncle, and it comes from Amherst. He says: 'Meet me at Morley's Hotel this evening at six.'"

"Very odd," said Routh. "Well, George, I am sure I wish you all manner of luck with your American uncle."

He had taken up his hat and gloves as he spoke, and now rang for the servant, whom he directed to call a hansom. The man went to the door, and transferred the commission to a street-boy lingering about there, who ran off and returned in two minutes with the required vehicle. George and Routh were standing on the steps as the boy re-appeared, talking. They shook hands, and Routh was stepping into the cab, when George followed him, and said, in a whisper:

"Was it not extraordinary the boy did not recognise poor Deane?"

"What boy?" said Routh, in astonishment, and stepping back on to the flagway.

"Why, that boy; the boy you always employ. He brought you my message the other day. Don't you remember it was he who brought your note to poor Deane that day at the tavern?"

"I did not remember; I did not particularly notice," said Routh. "Good-bye." And he jumped into the cab, and was driven away.

George went back into the house, eyed curiously by Jim Swain, who touched his cap as he passed.

[To be continued.]

Russian Railway Traveling.—Russian railway carriages are little houses on wheels. In the first, and partly also in the second class, their interior may be described as a saloon with all the necessaries, and some of the elegancies, of such an apartment. It is furnished with looking-glasses, heated by porcelain stoves, and lit by lamps and candles. Along the sides soft divans are arranged; the middle is occupied by a mahogany table, and double windows, with red curtains, exclude not only the rude touch of the Russian air, but also the aspect of the winterly sky. The company sits or lounges about, chatting, reading, or playing cards, chess and dominoes. The day passes pleasantly enough, and as night comes, the passengers betake themselves to rest almost as comfortably as at home. By a simple process the divans are made into beds, and supplied with pillows by the officious guard. In the first class the carriages are also provided with second stories, so to say, reached by an elegant staircase, and fitted with complete beds; in the second, if there are too many passengers to be accommodated on the divans, part of them are lodged in berths which take the place of the rack provided in England for hats and caps. At length every one is snugly enscoused, the ordinary good wishes are exchanged, and it is night in the car. The guard and the driver only keep awake. During the twenty-four hours a passenger is whirled along between St. Petersburg and Moscow, the train stops twenty times at least. The stations are elegant buildings, painted red, with broad white facings round the windows and along the eaves. Without, the very picture of cleanliness, they are well-stocked receptacles of the good things of this world within.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS, J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1867.

A HIGHER CULTURE.

THE January number of the Atlantic Monthly contains an article entitled, "A Plea for Culture," in which the deficiencies of our American culture and its means and instruments, as compared with that of the old world, are frankly acknowledged. The writer takes high ground in the advocacy of a system of education for which we fear that this nation is not yet prepared. For many years to come, none but a purely utilitarian system, and one having direct and immediate reference to practical ends, can hope to obtain popular support. Until this generation at least, shall have passed away, the prevailing view in the United States, of the paramount object of education, will continue to be what it now is, namely, that it is to fit its recipients for business, or in a more general sense, to qualify them for achieving "success in life." The communities in which any higher view than this is entertained, are at present very few in our country, and will not probably increase very largely during the next half century. Even among those who pass with us for "educated men," the number who value culture for its own sake, independent of the direct practical uses to which it can be rendered subservient, is pitiably small. The acquirements that do not serve to advance a man in business or politics, or to state the case baldly, that cannot be employed as money-making powers in some direction, are very generally despised, or at least regarded with mild indifference. This is natural enough, in the present stage of our civilization, and it is no legitimate subject of complaint. We therefore regard the Atlantic's "Plea for Culture," as both premature and futile. A higher culture is sure to come in due time, and in the meanwhile it cannot be forced by any hot-house process. The great universities and libraries, and museums, and art-galleries of Europe, are the growth of many centuries, whereas we have not yet completed our first. As yet, we scarcely have an "American literature," much as we have been given to magnifying our half-dozen standard writers. Aside from the works of Cooper, Irving, Hawthorne, Emerson, and Thoreau, what literature can we boast that is distinctively and characteristically "American?" What that is not a mere echo of European modes of thought? But already we fancy that we can see the dawning of a better era, in such poems as Whittier's Snow Bound, and Lowell's Fitz Adam's Story. These are purely American in subject and treatment. They have the flavor of the soil, and could have been written nowhere in the world outside of New England. The same can scarcely be said of Longfellow's Evangeline or Hiawatha, great as is the poetic beauty of those fine poems. As to American art, its only really great achievements are to be found in the works of two painters, and the same number of sculptors. Our standard of "Scholarship" is below that which prevails in any other civilized country; but it is steadily and rapidly being elevated, and there is no reason to doubt that by the middle of the next century, we shall possess a literature and a culture as brilliant and splendid as that of any European nation at the present day, or as that of Greece in her golden age. Meantime we must be patient.

NEW YORK is probably at present the worst-governed city in the United States. The annual report of the Metropolitan Police Commissioners of New York shows that it is next to impossible in that city to procure the conviction of a certain class of offenders, owing to the "humane feeling" of the Judges and District Attorney. The New York papers of the better class, declare that the courts of the metropolis offer the most admirable materials for the satirist. The indisputable fact is, that in New York a very low and vulgar class of politicians have for several years past been in the ascendancy, and that the various departments of the city government have been filled by persons of the most disreputable character. Only a few weeks since, Judge McCunn, of the Superior Court, refused to allow a plaintiff in a gambling case to amend his complaint, inasmuch as the "ends of justice would not be promoted by helping a man to get back money fairly staked and lost." The learned McCunn, in delivering his opinion, said: "The gentlemanly system embodied in the common law, allows no action for money lost or won in gambling." Of course it is "ungentlemanly" to interfere between gamblers and their victims: and New York Judges seem to be "gentlemanly" enough (if McCunn is a fair specimen) to resent any attempt to appeal to the law on the part of those who have suffered from the artifices of swindlers.

THE "GAY SCIENCE."

SUCH is the rather mystifying title of a new work, by Mr. E. S. Dallas, recently published by Chapman & Hall of New York, in which the possibility of reducing criticism to a science governed by definite rules and principles is discussed at length. The question as to whether there is any such thing as a fixed and definite standard of taste by which the relative excellence of literary productions can be guaged, is an old one, and certainly an interesting and important one. If there are no principles applicable to works of art and literature, all our judgments of them must be capricious, whimsical, and arbitrary. One man's opinion is just as good as another's, and the maxim, de gustibus non disputandum is as applicable to a poem or a picture as to a salad or a salmi; Miss Smith's verdict in regard to the last popular novel, "It is so interesting," is entitled to precisely as much respect as McGrowler's elabrate review in which he demonstrates with a vast show of ciritical learning that it is "all bosh." Mr. Dallas is evidently of the opinion that true criticsm is not arbitrary, and that if it has not yet attained the dignity of a science, that dignity may yet be attained. "It is only from comparative criticism," he says, "that we can expect science; but hitherto, criticism has been very much lost in detail, and has never attempted comparison on a large scale. We have to extend the area of comparison before the possibility of science begins to dawn." The author very justly insists that all criticism that is not scientific in its character, that does not proceed upon distinct principles, and that does not render definite and intelligible reasons for its decisions, is worthless. And yet any person who is in the habit of reading the "book notices" of our leading dailies, or even those of the great majority of our "literary" papers, must have observed that the accomplished gentlemen who undertake to dispose summarily in a paragraph or two, of the most notable productions of the day, seldom condesend to appeal to a principle or to cite a rule, or to resort to anything that can ever by the utmost strain of courtesy, be styled reasoning. For the most part, their "criticisms" are essentially of the same character as those of the gushing Miss Smith or the sentimental Miss Tompkins. Within the last few weeks we have actually seen so-called "reviews" of Edgar A. Poe's poems in two different "leading dailies" of this city, in which the author's personal character and moral infirmities were taken into account in estimating the quality of his poetry! Really, it would seem to be time for a serious discussion of the question whether there is such a thing as an extract standard, by which the merit and value of works of art and literary productions can be at least approximately determined.

OUR NAVY.

THE New York Nation thinks that the annual report of Mr. Secretary Welles, while excellent in many respects, cannot stand the test of a critical analysis. It is also of opinion that the tenor of the report justifies the inference, that our monitor iron-clads are already in an unserviceable condition. "In fact," says the Nation, "these vessels are already badly damaged from outrageous neglect, and if still suffered to remain exposed, will soon be good for nothing at all. Now, we do not object to the proposed use of League Island, if the channel there is susceptible of being made precisely fit for the shelter of our armored vessels. But we do object to so plumply shifting upon the shoulders of Congress the whole burden of blame for the wrong already done these admirable instruments of war. They carried us successfully through the rebellion, and were then left almost to shift for themselves. Congress might as justly be censured for the spoiling of neglected rifles or of the clothing of the troops, as for the injury done to these vessels."

The Nation proceeds to argue that the "laminated" armor with which our monitors are plated, is decidedly inferior to solid iron of the same thickness, so far as regards impenetrability to hostile shots, and recommends the substitution of solid armor for the laminated. The New York weekly may be better posted in details of this sort, than our naval authorities, but we doubt it. Meantime, it is a consolatory and re-assuring circumstance that the leading periodicals of England and France do not appear to share the opinions of the Nation in regard to the inefficient condition of our navy. On the contrary, they are evidently inclined to accord it the superiority over that of any of the great maritime powers.

NEW MUSIC.—Mr. M. Gray, the well known publisher of popular music at 613 Clay street, has placed on our desk the following new songs and waltzes: "My Heart is Over the Sea;" "Kitty Carew;" "Murmuring Shell;" "Nearest and Dearest;" "We Parted by the River Side;" "Nora O'Neal;" "Write Me a Letter from Home," and the "Quica Waltz." On the arrival of each steamer, Mr. Gray's store is invaded by bevies of young ladies who flutter round like butterflies gathering musical sweets, and depart laden down with spoils. The majority of the above named pieces of music are likely to become popular in the musical world of San Francisco. We have received "The Sumner Guard March," composed for, and dedicated to the Sumner Light Guard, Co. E, 1st Reg't. Infantry, 2nd Brigade N. G. C., from the member by whom it was composed.

[For the Californian.]

DEAD.

"ONE OF THE OLDEST RESIDENTS." IN MEMORIAM. Jan. 16th, 1867.

IN the deep shadow of unearthly gloom
Onward we come,
Bearing another to his lonely tomb;
Place for the lost one!—Room
Within the silent home
For one more, dead.

Keep silence, for it is a solemn trust.
That which we bring,
Though but a relic now of human dust—
A soul-less, life-less thing—
Never again exultantly to spring,
Earth's paths to tread.

Yet still, with reverent brow regard the bier.
So must ye lie.
But ashes of the good and true are here!
When ye shall die,
Will ye be like the scattered flowrets nigh,
All withered?

And swift forgot,
Or like our dead, shall real mourners tell,
The good deeds never dreamed of—tears be shed
That others wonder at?—Good friend farewell!
Peace is with thee, with us the passing bell,
The page unread.

ISABEL A. SAXON.

SILK CULTURE IN CALIFORNIA.

Every development of the resources of California is sure to be encouraged in its incipiency by the thinking and large-minded citizens of the State. The time when men of Caucasian race grovelled like savages in the mud on the banks of rivers, extricating gold from mud with the aid of such rude instruments as a shovel and a tin pan has passed away, and now the mind must be exercised to develope the resources of this richly-gifted State, and give employment to the thousands who annually flock to her shores. We have received from the publishers, H. H. Bancroft & Co., a neat volume of 246 pages, which contains much useful information on the subject of a new branch of industry, which will, within a few years add millions to the wealth of this State if it meets with the encouragement to which it is entitled. The volume to which we refer is the California Silk Grower's Manual, by Louis Prevost, who claims to have had twelve years experience in raising the mulberry, and six years in raising the silkworm. We will let Mr. Prevost speak a few words for himself by making a few extracts from the preface to his little volume. He says:

I have already demonstrated, but will more fully prove it again in this Manual, by facts only, that our advantages are so numerous and everything is so much in our favor here, that we certainly can raise the silk in California for half the cost of any other silk countries. We have the best soil and the best climate to raise silk, and we will soon have a large population to produce it, because I know, that rich culture, which is superior to the mines, as it is surer, will bring a large emigration here from the States, and all parts of the world.

With reference to the ability of California to compete with the silk-producing countries, which at present supply this staple to the world, he says;

"We can raise here silk of the very best quality, and I think that I can venture to say here, that China and Bengal will before long feel the effects of my efforts, which will result in the production of silk to compete with them. They may produce a low priced article, if they choose, but the quality of silk, in all cases, decides the question of preference."

There are many important facts in this work which we trust will receive due consideration from our citizens. We advise all who are in search of a new direction for their energies, to invest in this work. We trust that the day will soon come when the trees of California will be bedecked with golden fruit as precious as that gold which is hidden beneath its soil. To our mind Mr. Provost's arguments are conclusive; we trust that they may prove equally so to those who are in a position to turn the information given by him to practical advantage.

WE OBSERVE that the English Tory organs represent the great reform demonstration of the Trades' Unions in London as a positive failure, because not more than 25,000 men marched in the "great procession," instead of 200,000, as was promised. But the Radicals deny that they ever promised 200,000 men, and allege that their enemies, the Tories, promulgated that estimate in order to be able to declare it a failure in case that number should not appear. Nevertheless, the demonstration seems to have been a very imposing one. It marched through the fashionable quarters, for the purpose as is alleged, of intimidating the clubs and the more aristocratic portions of the population of London. Though the participants in the demonstration refrained from any unseemly demonstrations, the affair was generally regarded in the light of a threat.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE SALE.—The 100-vara lot on the southeast corner of Market and Ninth streets is to be sold in subdivided lots by Maurice Dore & Co., on Wednesday next This is the most valuable property that has been placed under the hammer for years past. The lots will be sold without reserve, and on liberal credit. For particulars see advertisement on our sixteenth page.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CONCERNING BOARDING-HOUSES.

A PROTEST BY A VETERAN GROWLER.

Not many weeks since, I saw in one of our daily papers this notice: "Rooms with board, for a single gentleman only, in a French family; the comforts of a home and an excellent opportunity to acquire the French language are hereby offered. References exchanged," etc., etc. Being a bachelor of a studious turn of mind, and withal tired of wandering 'round for my meals at restaurants, I determined to secure for myself "the comforts" and embrace "the opportunity" set forth in the quoted advertisement, which I thought fortune had thrown in my way. So I made due application at No. —, X. street. My references were eminently satisfactory, and as everything looked fair when I went to "spy out the land," I made no inquiries concerning the house—more especially as no referees were named to me. Being pleased with the lay of the land, I immediately struck a bargain with the head of the family, a buxom lady of two score years and ten, there or thereabout, as lawyers phrase it, and in a few days was domesticated in her establishment, settled, as I supposed for the remainder of my natural, or at least of my bachelor life. But hope told a flattering tale. I remained in that ranch but one short month. Before leaving I drew up the following bill—call it a bill of rights, bill of attainder, bill of complaint, an indictment, or whatsoever you will—and presented it to the landlady with my farewell salutation, as I went into voluntary banishment from the shelter of her roof tree:

San Francisco, —— 1866.

Madame: There are things which I do not like, and these are them: I do not like to have—

The window-shutters of my room closed every day, as it puts me to much trouble opening them; to have the carpet of my room patched and the patches not securely tacked to the floor; to have the soap-dish and my soap spirited away, the strainer amiably being left for my use; to have two gas burners in a room, one of them only being for use, the other a "dead light," a dummy; to have a marble-topped stand put in my room, and after I become fairly domiciled to have the same taken away; to have a decent table promised me and then not have the same put in my room; to have pillow-cases two sizes too large for the pillows; to have said pillow-cases pinned in on the under side to make them appear "O. K." To have all this done with impunity, looks very much as if the landlady had baited her hook for a "sardine" and then tried to "play me for a Josh." I do not like to have breakfast, lunch or dinner late; to have a little bandbox-like dining-room, (say 6 by 8 ft.); to have said dining-room "as dark as Egypt and smelling like antiquated cheese;" to have a basket of washed clothes standing in a corner of the aforementioned room; to have the butcher peer into the window while folks are at meals; to have the table covered with a soiled cloth; to have the napkins of the same suit; to have odds and ends of China for dishes and battered cups and saucers, representing a dozen old styles of iron-stoneware; to have a cruet-stand which looks as if it had the small pox in its old age; to have poor oil and weak vinegar in cruets stopped up with old bits of paper; to have three pepper-castors for black pepper, one only containing a modicum of the same condiment; to have mustard semi-occasionally, for the same a rusty and discolored spoon; to have salt almost petrified in the salt-cellars; to have stained knives, the same being ornamented with common bone handles; to have battered forks with prongs all skewed around; to have ancient plated spoons, (which, like the rest of "the silver,") are covered with gangrene; to have a water pitcher with a broken handle; to have tough steaks and stringy chops served up at meals; to have the meat (such as it is) cut into knotty chunks by the landlady when carving; to have bakers bread, ditto pies; to have neither hot bread nor "flap-jacks" for breakfast; to have antique ram, called, for decency's sake, "lamb"; to have weak and watery coffee, hardly fit to be called an aqueous distillation of the Arabic berry; to have "skim" milk for the coffee, the same being an unworthy imitation of the pure lacteal fluid, (said milk I suspect is made hot by pouring boiling water into it.) I do not like to have the table waited upon by a daughter of the landlady; to have her named Mignonnette; to have the mother call her more than six times at any one meal; to have Mignonnette pack things around and dump them down in the most awkward way; to have her stick her thumbs into the food; to have the dishes skewed round in all sorts of ways instead of being set upon the table "decently and in order"; to have the landlady of the house say she has bought quail for dinner and never see them; to have to wait until every one else is helped before I get anything to eat; to have a smaller piece of pie than any one else; to have cake and pie at the same time for dessert, for then there is but little of either; to have cold pudding; to have no one ask me if I would like to have more pudding or another piece of pie; to have the parlor turned into a permanent bed-room: to have no tocsin sound the alarm for meals; to have the lodger in next room to mine perform a little upon the flute; to have a tight-fitting night-key; to have the mistress of the house tell me that "anything will do for a single man;" and last but not least, "the unkindest cut of all" to have at the last dinner I took in the establishment, baked apples, without sweetening, for dessert.

I did not stop to find out what Madame said about my long document, but she might keep more of the fish that come into her net if she would only profit by these hints. I now run round again to my old restaurant haunts for my meals, and enjoy my Bohemian style of life better than I ever did before by the contrasts with my recent experiences; and if I can't learn the French language without the questionable "comforts of a home" in a "high toned boarding house," I rather think it will be the better in the end "for my stomach's sake and often-infirmities."

[For the Californian.]

THE JUDGMENT OF LOVE.

Love judged a heart one day, and in his scale
Its frailties all were laid,
He watched in fear which side might first prevail,
When it was justly weighed.

Each sin and error in the balance proved,
That hearts are often weak.
But then perchance how much they may have loved;
And find not what they seek.

Each cruel word and thoughtless act rose up,
Each wrong stood boldly out,
And bitterly stern memory summoned up
E'en virtues, when in doubt.

One scale soon fell, for frailties on their side
Sunk down the trembling beam;
But Love in pain would fain its errors hide,
Not judge hearts as they seem.

He looked through tears and clasped the heart around,
Quick rose its faults on high,
For Love forgives our sin 'tis always found,
And passes errors by.

X—X.

THE SOCIAL ADVANTAGES OF LIVING IN A WOODEN HOUSE.

If I observe to an acquaintance that I prefer living in a wooden building to occupying a room in a three-story brick house, I am sure to receive the reply: "Oh, yes; on account of earthquakes."

I deny that it is solely on account of the earthquakes, or "electroquakes," which occasionally occur, that I prefer to live in a frame house. A building of this description possesses many advantages over one built of brick.

The man who occupies a room, the walls of which are sufficiently thick to cut off all sounds from without, is too apt to become a solitary and misanthropic being, who takes no interest in the joys and sorrows of his next-door neighbors.

I am more fortuuate. I occupy a room in a frame building which also affords a home to three families. I never feel solitary, although a bachelor. A quarter of an inch of wood and the thickness of a cotton fabric is all that interposes between me and the glorious vault of heaven overhead, while instead of being immured in a vault-like chamber with heavy walls, an inch thickness of timber suffices to protect me from the wind and storm, without entirely debarring me from communication with the outer world, when I have retired to my room.

I require neither a watch nor a clock in my room to tell me the hour, when I am lying in bed reading and smoking. I can hear clocks constantly striking. I have the advantage of six clocks! First, the clock down stairs will strike nine; about a quarter of an hour afterward, the clock in the room adjoining will strike ten; and in about twenty minutes more, I hear another clock strike nine; the other three strike various other hours, but all strike within an hour. I am thus not only saved the expense of a time-keeper of my own, but am also supplied with a variety of horological opinions on the time of day.

My next-door neighbors have a dear baby, a baby in which I almost imagine that I possess a proprietary interest. I heard its first cry, I listened to its croup, I mourned over its whooping cough, I listened with distress to its cries of pain during the agonies of teething. It had a habit of crying very early in the morning at one time, which was, I must confess, the cause of some distress to me, and roused diabolical thoughts in my mind. At one time I hated that dear little child—it was just beginning to walk—it would sit down just outside my door and yell for hours together. The author of all evil suggested to me the idea of scattering candy sprinkled with strychnine outside my door, but I resisted the devil and he fled from me; I placed no poisoned candy there for that child to devour.

I am involuntarily a participant in all the family secrets of my neighbors; I know all their doings, nothing is hid from me. I hear the mild remonstrances of Mrs. Smuff when Smuff, who drinks, comes home in a state of intoxication, and feel a deep interest in her endeavors to restrain him from indulging in wicked eccentricities. Smuff is very strange when he is drunk. It was only a week ago that he howled like a demon because Mrs. Smuff refused to kill her pet canary and give it to him broiled on toast, for his supper. He has a morbid appetite when inebriated. My neighbors who live under me are in the habit of practicing Irish jigs, and their saltatory exercises give a pleasing vibratory motion to the house, and in a measure rock me to sleep.

I have no lack of music. Nothing can be more soothing in its effect than "Wearing of the Green" sung by five rude male voices. Attached to the house is a stable, in which three horses kick and plunge many times during the night, and shake the building as no earthquake I have ever experienced could shake it. A moderately-sized dog in the room adjoining mine, can get up a very fair imitation of an earthquake as far as our house is concerned, by simply scratching himself. It is pleasant to feel that one is not alone; therefore, I prefer occupying a room in a wooden house to being bricked up, isolated and debarred from participation in the joys and sorrows of my fellow creatures.

Trem.

[For the Californian.]

SOME THOUGHTS ON DEATH, AND THE CONSOLATIONS OF MORTALITY.

The mysterious "V." writes in her strong story, Paul Ferrol, of the "deep dishonor of Death." It is all that jars me in the pleasant reading of that romance.

To most of us, highways and byways where kings and great people have passed, are ever after memorable; and the dry earth where His feet have stood, is made a pilgrimage through dangerous deserts.

Then how is death any longer a dishonor, when the Prince of Peace has solved its mysteries?

Isn't death the cloudy portal of the hereafter; veiled and overshadowed, lest we on earth should long sinfully to follow thither, betimes? May not some deaths be gloomy mysteries, lest the advancing spirit should cry out at the incalculable glory of the angels that are ever in waiting?

For, at that day, how would our souls be filled with unutterable longings!

Have not some quickened saints caught glimpses of that most beautiful shore, and whispered it in ecstasy as hastening hence? Peace eternal!

O! rest is for me, and you, and all who will. What have they to do but to touch tunefully the lute, to sing, and to walk in fragrant grasses, beside lake and rill, in the majestic meekness of exalted natures? The joy of living and of knowing that life eternal is praise, and so they live the life of prayer.

What if this is preaching, shall I not preach if it please me? I am, at least, my own audience and hope to profit by it.

Why may I not preach? I may suffer with the best of you.

Poor am I! My day idol is more to me than my neighbor's image of silver.

I suppose there is no life, though starving in its poverty of incidents, but has its own experiences.

In the whole range of stage-business that conducts this spectacle of life, I can recall but one bit of mechanism that works badly, and here the grace of the trick is spoiled and the actor often in a dilemma. This unskillful trap is experience. Experience begins her teachings at the last end of the lesson, and is more an enigma than a recitation.

I should have been born a preacher. My impressions are so serious, and I am always honorably disposed toward my convictions. I respect my thoughts as I respect good words from my betters. They seem a vein of gold, often, in this earthy body, so I am enriched with them. They console me; they administer rebuke; they present the cup of joy also.

Thoughts are the bondsmen of conscience. But my thoughts are royal slaves, and feast with their king, alway.

I am not sure how thoughts are born. The sun can hatch ostrich eggs and breed maggots; but thoughts claim a more glorious ancestry, being neither bird nor vermin. Perhaps after much brooding over the nest full of revery, a thought is born: then is its sex disclosed, whether it be prose or verse. Revery—indolent, so-called, and scoffed at—revery, patient and long suffering, is the progenitor of a sweet and gentle flock.

In revery we look backward, mostly; we are therefore wise, having been over the ground ourselves. It is to drink familiar draughts from the antique goblet of memory. It is a breath of the past. How I love a breath of the past, with the mellowness of autumn about it, fragrant of autumnal leaves and the musky odor of dried flowers. It is the old poem forever repeated. The broken vase, haunted forever with those lingering odors. In such a revery I learned of the affliction of my friend.

There were two companions together. Death entered. The one was taken and the other left.

I could not go to her and break in upon her grief. I wrote to her. Letters never speak above a whisper, but are silent ministers.

These thoughts I sent to her—coming as a poem, unsullied and beautiful. I offered them as something purer and better than I, and as something wholly above and beyond me. I prayed they might minister to her in the midst of her desolation.

In a paper so discursive as this has proven, such passages of that epistle as I remember may be readily admitted, and I am sure she will forgive this record use of them:

"Do not mourn"—said the message—"her who is gone. You would not call her back to weary and be heavy laden. You would not deny her the society of angels. You are not unkind; and that were unkind and selfish.

"Do not weep! Why should we weep above a rose, whose breath of balm has sped away! Should not its subtle odor sweeten forever more the air of Heaven?

"Out of the loam of this corrupting body, springs heavenward the invisible blossom of the soul!

"Oh! friend, rejoice therefore; for this mystery of death shall dignify thee also with the grace and glory of transfiguration."

Charles Warren Stoddard.

The London Star says the Americans are pre-eminently a cosmopolitan people. There is not a court or capital in Europe in which they do not muster in force. There is not an obscure nook in the byways of travel in which they may not be found, making themselves as much at home as if they were in the Fifth Avenue of New York, or on prairies of Illinois.

A BIRD-BREAKFAST.

BY C. H. WEBB.

IT is not of a "bird-breakfast" in the common acceptation of the term that I purpose to write. In this instance it was the birds that ate instead of being eaten, a distinction which may not suggest itself as material to the reader, but which, we have reason to believe, makes a vast difference in the status of things to the birds.

I spent the summer at home.

Border Hill cottage is situated upon the brow of a gently sloping eminence, about a half mile removed from the busy heart of the village. It is backed by green woods, and relieved on either side by smiling meadows, across which the breath of the clover-blooms is blown to mingle with the musk of the roses and the scent of the eglantines, which grow nearer the house. In the door-yard there are apple-trees, mountain ashes, maples, locusts, beeches, and any number of those seedy-looking trees among whose branches caterpillars delight to crawl, to say nothing of a cedar hedge. And of that hedge perhaps the less said the better. Like the side-whiskers of my younger brother, it is only an experiment; and the cedars which compose it stand most unsociably and unbecomingly apart, each one looking scraggy and disconnected from its neighbor, as though it intended to advertise to passers-by, "No connection with the concern next door!"

Still, for all its scragginess and uninvitingness, early in the season one bold bird ventured to build in that cedar hedge. Fanny, who takes all the birds about the premises under her protection, brooding over their nests as though she were the bird that built them, and had a direct interest in the progress of incubation, spied out this nest one day, and brought us all to enjoy with her the discovery. Columbus was scarcely content with finding a continent; but to my little niece a fresh nest is a new world. There were four eggs nicely tucked away among the leaves, and the sight was certainly a pleasing one. But an unlooked-for misfortune occurred. At the time that the summons came to see the nest, a monkey, which was the companion of my travels from the Isthmus of Panama, was on exhibition, and the family were wondering at his tricks. We took Jocko along to see it, thinking he might take an interest in such things. The result proved that he did. The moment that his quick, mischievous eye caught sight of the nest, forth darted his long, hairy arm, and the eggs were in his hand and down his throat before one could say Jack Robinson, or raise a finger in even ineffectual remonstrance. Had he repented he might have been forgiven, but he lived and was unrepentant. So he is known to Fanny as "that Hateful Monkey" to this day.

After the unfortunate affair just chronicled, Fanny, persisting in considering me and the whole party as particeps criminis with Jocko, refused to reveal the whereabouts of any subsequent nests. But strangely enough, this severe reticence produced a result quite as unforeseen and disastrous as did her former indiscreet confidence. One day the monkey was on the veranda, and we all stood watching his gyrations and performances upon an échelle perileuse of a pattern that no human gymnast that I know of has yet attempted. Suddenly, while he was seated at the top of one of the pillars—taking a breathing spell, as we supposed, between acts—a cloud of dust arose, there was a scattering of straw, and we caught a gleam of something speckled. Down at our feet lay the debris of a ravished nest, and we knew that the poor brown bird's speckled eggs had gone down Jocko's insatiate throat. There was no denying his guilt; the albumen yet dripped from his cruel mouth, and his paws were swift witnesses to his crime; he was taken yellow-handed, and even an alibi could not have saved him. Thenceforth he was banished to the back-yard, where he is still serving out a sentence of solitary confinement with a chain and ball attached to his leg. And as for myself, the unwitting and unwilling accomplice in all the mischief, if Fanny had her way, it is probable that I should be doing penance in like manner with that arch-offender, for she persistently asserts that "Uncle Charlie knew the nest was there, and told the monkey."

But all this while our bird-breakfast is getting cold.

For some reason or other the birds seem to prefer occupying the eaves of the veranda to nesting among the trees; it is considered more aristocratic perhaps. And as for the cedar hedge, after the application of a monkey-wrench to that unfortunate nest, as has already been related, it came to be regarded by feathered families about to set up house-keeping as a not very eligible location. It seemed generally understood among birds that any nest built in those deceitful cedars was certain to be destroyed and devoured by "a monster in human form;" but, notwithstanding the kindred incident which occurred in the other locale, it was impossible to shake their faith in the veranda. So the blue birds, immediately after seeing their first nest wrecked under its shelter, proceeded to pick flint and try it again. Material lay ready to their shuttling feet, and soon these were at work with a click like a weaver's loom. Soon, too, the nest was built, and soon it was lined with eggs, though, as Fanny said, "neither of the birds never cackled once." Then we had visions of a solicitous-looking little head peering above the straw walls, while a bird, too busy to be a bachelor, though blue-coated and dandified enough to all seeming for a D'Orsay, brought grasshoppers and other light summer refreshments to his brooding bride. In due time a cheerful chirp was heard, and then we knew that Lady Bluebird's work was ended—that the chicks were out of the shell. The mouths of those little birds, peeping over the edge of the nest, awaiting the arrival of their daily berries and worms, were indeed "curious to see." Have you ever seen a young bluebird's mouth? Why, it is as wide as a shovel and almost as deep as a petroleum well—literally stretching from ear to ear, and going down till you can see no further for the darkness. I was sometimes afraid that the old birds, as they leaned carelessly over the edge of the nest, would drop into one of the dreadful gulfs, and be seen no more in the air forever. It was wonderful to me that Mr. and Mrs. Bluebird did not sometimes despair of filling the aching voids revealed to them; and it occurred to me that were I Mr. Bluebird, I should drop a brickbat down each throat, and so fill each mouth permanently and at once. But the papa seemed patient; and if ever he reproached his partner in business for the troubles she had brought him, it was late at night, and after the young birds were asleep.

The particular breakfast about which this article is written must have been a gala breakfast, in celebration of some holiday, or perhaps the wedding of the parents. Happening to be up early, I was present—though not an invited guest. My first appearance upon the scene discomposed all parties except myself. However, drawing up my chair near to one of the pillars of the veranda, so that the honeysuckle which wound around them spilled its dew into my ear, I made myself at home—the best way, I have observed, of putting everybody else thoroughly at ease. But it was some time before the proprietors of the nest would trust themselves under the same roof with me. Pretending business abroad, they both flew twittering away. Feeling confident of their return I waited and watched. By-and-by a rush of wings, and there, on a twig of an apple-tree opposite, perched the happy couple. They looked at me sharply and reprovingly, as though to wonder what I was doing there, and why I did not take the hint and my departure, when I saw so evidently that I was not wanted No idea of going entered my head, for I was curious to investigate domestic economy as practiced in dwellings where drawing-room, parlor, kitchen and bed room are all on one floor, without even a leaf between by way of partition. Both the bluebirds had something in their bills—"shad-flies," I think. After waiting some time for me to get up and go, Mrs. Bluebird, seemingly losing all patience, quietly swallowed the food she had in her bill. Mr. Bluebird cast a reproachful glance upon her, but said nothing. His heart may not have been too full to speak, but certainly his mouth was. What do you think that Mrs. Bluebird then did—perhaps by way of showing her independence? She very coolly picked the fly, grasshopper or whatever it was, from her husband's bill and swallowed that. For an instant he looked at her, more in sorrow than in anger, an et tu Brute expression in his eye, then with a sudden burst of passion gave her a dab with his beak which sent a feather or two fluttering down the leafy lane. I rejoice to record that Mrs. Bluebird accepted the chastisement meekly, and with the conscious air of one who knew that it was deserved.

After awhile the birds became bolder and made timid excursions toward the veranda, trying to get a flying peep at their nest, to see how things were going on in the interior. Seeing that I made no hostile demonstration, these flights became less hurried, and at last they ventured inside for a moment. Never stirred I from my chair, nor winked an eyelid, and gradually confidence was established between us, and I accepted as one of the family. On this basis of mutual good faith they made thenceforth regular trips to their distant larder, leaving me in charge of things during their absence. As they always flew away in one direction, I imagine they must have had an immense number of worms on deposit in some adjoining field—a bank, if I may use the expression, upon which they were authorised to draw sight bills. For the first time in my life I understood how food came to be familiarly called "grub."

How the parents discriminated among all the mouths that were stretched up to them for supplies, I do not know. Indeed, I do not think they pretended to discriminate at all; on the contrary, they just seemed to drop the "victual" into the first mouth that came handy. It may be that some distinction was made in favor of the one widest opened, but there are no premises to build such a supposition upon. Sometimes I suspected that one mouth got it all, the cunning little owner edging quickly around and presenting it at all sides of the nest in rapid succession. He succeeded in making a revolving mouth of it, but, unlike the patent fire-arm, one that could never be adequately loaded.

One thing I was glad to note for the credit of my sex. The papa bird was industrious, nay, indefatigable in bringing food to the house. I think he must be known among the nestwives of Bluebirdom as a Good Provider. With providing, however, I fear his mission ended, for I can not conscientiously say that he seemed to know much about taking care of babies. Mrs. Bluebird would tuck the little ones in with her bill, fondle and dandle them in their straw cradle, and chirp all sorts of baby-talk for their delectation; but Mr. Bluebird simply brought his grasshopper, worm, or berry; poked it into a convenient mouth as though he were posting a commercial letter; stood on one leg for a minute or two with a puzzled and awkward look, evidently impressed with a conviction that he ought to do something, but did not know exactly what to do or how to do it; and then flew off after another worm. Had he attempted to be more useful in the nursery, I doubt he would have made a distressful figure of it, perhaps holding his baby wrongside up, as I have seen ambitious papas do. But in the face of his inevitable awkwardness he was such an attentive father and devoted husband, that I wonder Mrs. Bluebird did not get up early some morning and sew brass buttons on his blue coat by way of giving him a pleasant surprise.

I was not permitted to enjoy my bird-breakfast alone. One by one the whole family put in an appearance, yawning in the early morning as though each wanted a grasshopper. All the household, except the monkey, was represented; but the birds had now got used to spectators, and the breakfast went merrily on. The only interruption was occasioned by the introduction of a bright green paroquet, a companion piece to the monkey—also a native of Panama—and my compagnon de voyage thence. Fanny hung his cage out on the veranda, that he might enjoy the scene and be refreshed with pleasant reminiscences, possibly, of the days when he too breakfasted al fresco with his family under great palms, which cast the surrounding trees immeasurably into the shade. Mercy on us, what a fuss there was! Both birds darted at the cage like furies, beating their wings against the wires, and endeavoring to spear the poor little inmate with their sharp beaks. He, poor fellow, was terribly frightened, betraying in his distress an agitation similar to that which King Phineas may have displayed when the harpies were rushing around him and making free with his tables. Not content with being embroiled themselves, the excited Bluebirds sounded a bird battle-cry, and in less time than I can write it, the air and trees around were full of feathered warriors. Not the birds in blue alone, but robbins, sparrows, wrens, ground-birds, yellow-birds, linnets, cat-birds, flew to the fray—for it could not be called a rescue. I remember one little tom-tit, literally "no bigger than your thumb," that dashed into the melée with a spirit worthy of a larger bird. He took little working part, it is true, but he sat on the fence and cheered the combatants on, ruffling his feathers the while and endeavoring to look as big as a buzzard. Thinking to end it all by showing that the green-doubleted stranger was a friend of mine, and consequently entitled to the hospitalities of the mansion, I stepped forward and took him from the cage. At once the confusion was doubled, and in the wild sweep and whirl of wings and snip of beaks that followed, the Central American was knocked from his perch upon my finger and dashed to the ground with a violence which dislocated one of his brightest tail feathers. It was indeed singular how the timid little creatures, before afraid to venture within the verauda's length of a human being, became so suddenly brave when they thought their birdlings in danger. Picking up my protege, I beat a retreat, pursued by the flying artillery so suddenly, but so effectively organized—robins, wrens, cat-birds, tom-tits, and all setting up a wild concert of triumph in honor of their victory.

I fancy that long in bird history thereabout, the story will be told of the appearance of the green monster with the terrible hooked beak, and his complete discomfiture, as well as that of his Anak allies, by the brave volunteers that rushed and rallied to the border.

Months since the birdlings were fledged and flew away, and amid the multitude of blue-coated visitors we fail to distinguish our former pets and guests. The nest still remains, but it is dilapidated and mouldy, and will scarce do for another season's occupancy without many and thorough repairs.—Hours at Home.

THE negro actor, Ira Aldridge, has had an immense success at Versailles in "Othello"—the only tragedy, unfortunately, he can appear in. The theatrical performance was preceded by a splendid dinner, given to the stars of the literary world, at the Hotel des Reservoirs—once, by the by, the sumptuous residence of Marquis de la Pompadour. Alexandre Dumas was among the last to arrive, and set next to M. Barriere. The prince of romancists was in full force, and related more anecdotes during the hour devoted to dinner than an ordinary man would have remembered in a month. The Versailles theatre was crammed to suffocation, and Aldridge was tremendously applauded by the somewhat old-fashioned inhabitants of that antiquated town. His costume alone insures the admiration of the feminine world, and if all the Othellos of the present day only sported half the gold, precious stones and pearls which dazzled the Versailles audience, the Cassios would indeed have remarkably little chance of winning their Desdemonas' smiles. Aldridge's acting was declared to be splendid.

A fashionable lady of New York recently become insane from jealousy of Niagara's waterfall.

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for and take none but LYON'S, bearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervation, listlessness, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaints they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedentary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spavin, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Strains, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westbrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky, and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off and turning gray, and promotes its growth upon prematurely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.

E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no other.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

DR. H. A. BENTON,

The ELECTRO-MAGNETIC PHYSICIAN, is now cosily fixed in his new quarters, over Congress Hall, Bush street, adjoining the Russ House, and is prepared to treat patients in all the best modes of curing. The Electro-Medicated and Hot Air Baths will do wonders in many cases, in breaking up obstructions, and if properly attended afterwards, will insure success.

BILLIARD TABLES.

JACOB STRAHLE IS DETERMINED TO FURNISH Billiard Tables cheaper, and on more reasonable terms than any other establishment on the Pacific coast, having secured repeated premiums for finish and durability of work, as well as for his latest styles of cushions. This shows conclusively that his tables are superior to any manufactured in the city. His manufactory is at 537 Sacramento street, near What Cheer House. *

JACOB SHEW & Co., No. 315 Montgomery street, near Pine, take First-Class Photographs, of all kinds, at the lowest scale of prices adopted by the Associated Photographers. Photographs retouched in the highest style of the art.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

JOHN GORMAN,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

No. 619 Merchant street,

Above Montgomery.....(South side.)

VAN VLECK & KEITH,

Designers and Engravers

ON WOOD,

No. 611 Clay street, San Francisco.

WM. KEITH. D. VAN VLECK.

MRS. G. M. NICHOLS,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY,

No. 651 Clay street, 2 doors below Kearney,

San Francisco.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,

Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices

536

In this City,
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO

YOU

WANT ANY

Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

RUSSELL & HOLDING'S

EXCHANGE,

522 Market street, between Montgomery and Kearny.

THE FINEST WINES AND LIQUORS ARE dispensed at the Exchange.

All the British Columbia papers on file.

N. B.—A commodious BACK ROOM for the accommodation of customers is one of the feature of the establishment. ☞Families supplied, and Goods delivered Free of charge.

W. E. BRIDGE,

BLACK HAWK,

Livery and Sales Stables,

317 PINE STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome, San Francisco.

Carriages, Buggies and Good Saddle Horses for Hire or Sale on the most Reasonable Terms.

Particular attention paid to boarding Horses.

DR. HAYDEN,

Dentist,

653 Clay street, between Kearny and Montgomery,

San Francisco.

PIANOS!

PIANOS!

AT

AT PRICES FROM $150 TO $600,

AT WALTER S. PIERCE'S PIANO ROOMS, 536 MARKET STREET, opposite Second.

N. B.—The highest cash price paid for Second-hand Pianos.

A Big Thing and no Humbug.

OF THE THOUSANDS OF COMPOUNDS BEFORE the public, "RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA" for the Hair, alone, does just what it promises.

Hon. Warren Chase, the Spiritualist Lecturer, says:

"My hair and whiskers have been many years gray. RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA has restored both to their original color, black, and covered the baldness on the top of my head with a fine growth of black hair I have several friends who have used it with the same results, and I cordially recommend it as one of the few medicines that will do what its labels and circulars claim for it. WARREN CHASE."

October, 1865

Call for RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA, and for your own pleasure and comfort do not be put off with anything else, "said to be just as good."

JOHN F. SNOW,
24 Post street, San Francisco,
Agent for the Pacific Coast.

ALSO,

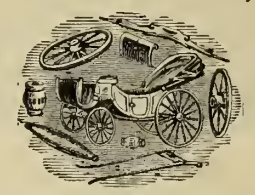
Coloring, Cleansing and Restoring of

FEATHERS, KID GLOVES, SILKS, FURS, WOOLENS, ETC.,

24 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny,

SAN FRANCISCO.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco.

FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard

TABLE

MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,

512 BATTERY STREET,

Between Jackson and Pacific, San Francisco,

Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements.

Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description.

☞All goods sold are warranted.

WM. WORTHINGTON,

House and Sign Painter,

Dealer in

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,

735 Market street,

Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

RESIGNATION OF AGENCY

OF THE

PHŒNIX INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF HARTFORD.

San Francisco, January 8th, 1867.

L. B DELL, HAS THIS DAY RESIGNED THE LOCAL Agency of the above company, and removed his office to DELL, CRANNA & CO.'S store, 511 1-2 and 513 FRONT STREET, where he is ready to effect insurance in either Home or Foreign companies, and furnish information on insurance matters free of charge. Thanking his friends and patrons for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their patronage in the future.

L. B. DELL, 511 1-2 and 513 Front street.

GROCERIES AT WHOLESALE PRICES, IN LOTS TO suit family trade, at

HASKELL & BUCKELEW'S,
514 Market street.

CRANBERRY PRESERVES, 35 CENTS PER CAN, or three cans for $1, at

HASKELL & BUCKELEW'S.

OSACCA JAPAN TEA. A FRESH LOT, IN 5 LB. boxes, just imported, by

HASKELL & BUCKELEW,
514 Market street.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

A NEW FERRY BOAT—To run between Mare Island and Vallejo, is now lying at the foot of Fourth street receiving her finishing-up touches. She is a neat little craft, credible to the skill of our mechanics. Her engines were constructed by John Lochhead, a San Francisco engineer, who has the credit among the craft, of having construeted over one hundred steam engines in the last half-score of years.

FRONT STREET.—The business of this commercial mart is fast moving southward, towards Market street. Many leading houses are already permanently located south of California street. Recently the old established house of D. J. Oliver & Cc., moved to their new locality, corner of Front and Pine streets, where our interior readers will find them on their spring visits to this city, with greatly increased facilities for business.

The members of the French Cabinet have resigned their portfolios. Napoleon has issued a decree forbidding the Chambers hereafter to reply to the speech from the throne.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this smply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

PRESERVE YOUR SIGHT.

PERFECT SPECTACLES EXactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minute employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill suited or common Spectacles.

PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent pre-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.

Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

GEO. BORDWELL,
ARCHITECT,

No. 224 Montgomery street,
Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,
San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

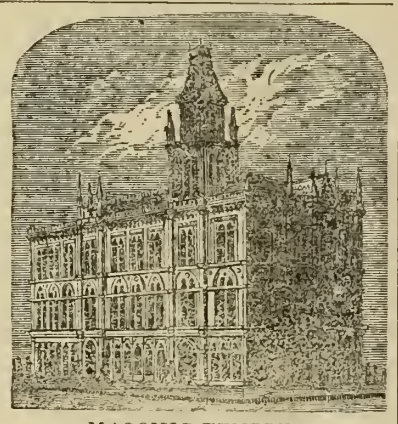
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms,

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.



MASONIC TEMPLE,
Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!

Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years (15th (1866) in San Francisco,) enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

A. J. PLATE,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

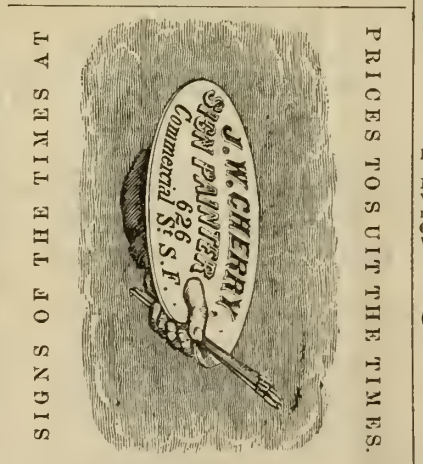
Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

ALSO,

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS, Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, &c., &c.,

NO. 411 SANSOME STREET,
Between Commercial and Sacramento Sts., San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.



WILLIAM BRODIE,

California Foundry,

FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,
San Francisco.

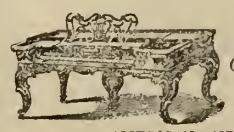
LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS
Of every description, made to order.

Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

NEW MUSIC STORE.

WAREROOMS OF CHICKERING & SON'S

Piano-Fortes.



MASON & HAMLIN'S

CABINET

ORGANS,

AMERICAN AND FIREIGN

Sheet Music,

VIOLIN AND GUITAR STRINGS,

Musical Instruments and Music Merchandise, Wholesale and Retail, at Lowest Rates.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO,
421 Montgomery street, next door to A. Roman & Co., San Francisco.

MINERS' FOUNDRY

AND MACHINE WORKS,
FIRST STREET, between Howard and Folsom,
SAN FRANCISCO.

HOWLAND, ANGELL & KING,
MANUFACTURERS OF

Steam Engines,

MILL AND QUARTZ MACHINERY,
And Iron Castings of all kinds.

FULTON FOUNDRY & IRON WORKS

HINCKLEY & CO.,

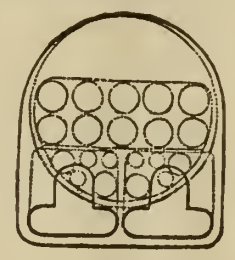
MANUFACTURERS OF

STEAM ENGINES,
Quartz, Flour and Saw Mills,

Mining Machinery, and all kinds of Iron and Brass Castings,
45, 47 AND 49 FIRST STREET
Between Market and Mission—San Francisco.

BRODIE'S IMPROVED
QUARTZ-CRUSHER.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF

HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS

Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

PIONEER WORKS.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Fire Proof Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc,

Corner Fremont and Market street, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of Second Hand Fire Proof Doors and Shutters.

Also, manufacture to order the California Burglar and Fire-Proof Safe, with the Burglar's Lock invented by Mr. W. G. Bussey, of Jackson, Amador county, Cal. No Key required to open this State. It is done by Mathematical Calculation. Call and examine for yourselves, at our Works,

THIS LOCK PUT ON SAFES NOW IN USE

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOSEPH H. WEED,
V. KINGWELL.

SAN FRANCISCO

Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,
Manufacturers of
MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,
Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.

ALSO,

Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,
Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 512 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Cogbill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st.
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market.
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chiesgo, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 524 Market, opposite Second
C. Wedderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 220 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Ptorr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Speen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Sparza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R G. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOOD AND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

"Gris," of the Cincinnati Times, a humorist of considerable note, and a chap of undisputed originality, has been tempted, after reading certain verbographs of the editorial corps of some of the New York dailies, to serve up for the amusement of his friends and the public generally, certain

COUNTRY EDITORS.

Come with me, and let us visit the office of the Ink Slinger—that lever, whose fulcrum being Jimtown, moves the world! This is the stairway. You can tell it by the marks of inky fingers upon the walls. The road is blazed with ink stains upon two pairs of stairs, and then you come to a door upon which is a sign, which reads:

JIMTOWN INK SLINGER.

Job Printing Done Here.

We enter and look around. At one end of the room is a hand power press, upon which the outside of the Ink Slinger is being struck off. In one corner is the editorial table, strewn with exchanges, backed by a case of pigeonholes, surmounted by a dust-begrimmed bust of old Dan Webster.

"But where are the editors?" methinks you ask. Do you see that man with his sleeves rolled up, working the press? His coat and vest are off, and you can see that his pants are held up by one suspender—suspended by but a single thread, as it were. Occasionally he shoves the hair back from his sweaty, yet massive brow, leaving inky marks upon his forehead, and then he jaws the boy who assists him—gives the devil his due, as it were. That sir, is Plunkins, the proprietor and senior editor of the Ink Slinger. There he is, in that sublime unconsciousness of greatness which ever marks the truly great. You wouldn't believe that brawny and inky hand, which works the crank so vigorously, has penned editorials that have carried consternation into the Tuileries and shook the British throne to its very foundation! Well, you don't have to.

When he asks the foreman for a "chaw terbaccer," and pauses reflectively while he bites off a liberal amount of "plug," you cannot imagine what mighty thought is taking form in his brain, or how it will startle the very confines of the earth in the columns of next week's Ink Slinger. Of course you can't.

How now? ah! here comes the junior editor, Chubb, and takes a seat at the table. He has been out to collect a bill of a showman for twenty-five half-sheet posters, on yellow paper, and finding that the show-man had slipped away in the night, he is naturally a little ruffled. His hat, which is a little too large for him, is a littled ruffled too. He swears and chews tobacco, and has a way of ejecting tobacco juice from between his front teeth. You wouldn't take that man to be one of the most promising young stars in the newspaporial firmament.

Look at him casually and observing that his paper collar had been turned, you wouldn't say this is a man who, in the course of the next fifty or sixty years, is destined to be the moving spirit of the Ink Slinger, as he is now one of its principal lights as a tolerable liver. No, you wouldn't say that. But time will tell. He is very young, not over fifty-six or seven, yet he has been a prodigious traveler, walking from Buffalo to Albany many a time—when he drove on the canal. After sawing a little wood for the office stove, he will set up a puff for a saloon across the way, and then go over and work it out. In this line of humor he is without a rival in America.

That sedate-looking man working at the "case" by the window, edits the religious department. He does it evenings. He stands high in the church—up in the gallery. He keeps a volume of the Pilgrim's Progress on his case, which he pours over. The stains on it were caused by some printer boys pouring over it—they poured a pitcher of beer all over it.

That lad working by his side goes out occasionally to pick up items of local interest for the paper. He has remarkable talent for picking up things. One night he came in with two pairs of fowls and a can of oysters that he had picked up.

Besides these principal editors of the Ink Slinger, there are a number of "occasional writers" who drop in. Here is Blobbs, the paper mill man, who has written occasionally for several years past to have an old paper bill settled, and has come to see about it. There is an odor of steamed straw and old rags about him. It is worth something to see the manner in which the mighty Plunkins puts him off.

Plunkins says he looks for his "war correspondent" every minute, and shows us a note, in which a correspondent informs him that he is coming to "clean out" the office. He means war, evidently. The door opens suddenly and in he comes—an excited man, with a red face and a red cowhide. Fighting editor, who has been practicing vigorously with dumb-bells, since our entrance, lights upon him, and out he goes upon the landing. The face of the senior editor shines with a serene and heavenly light as the body of the "war correspondent" is heard to bound rapidly down two pairs of stairs.

The correspondent who is constantly writing to the Ink Slinger communications, complaining of some terrible outrage upon the public, such as neglecting to place a mile-stone in Squawbush township, when it is notorious that there are two in the township immediately adjoining, and who signs himself "Justice," drops in. He wears iron-bow'd spectacles and iron gray hair, his clothes don't fit him very well, and there is a perpetual scowl upon his face and growl in his voice. He is a pleasant man to have around.

Then there is "Constant Reader," who is constantly dropping in to read the exchanges, always getting very much in the way; and "A subscriber of thirty four years' standing," who has a subscription account standing for thirty-five years at least.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

The following steamships will be despatched on dates as given below:

STEAMERS FOR FEBRUARY.

February 9th—GOLDEN AGE, Captain W. F. Lapidge, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray,
February 18th—GOLDEN CITY, Captain Jas. T. Watkins, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Harris.
February 28th—MONTANO, Capt. Jos. Sutton, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Furber.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER

MOSES TAYLOR,

WILL SAIL FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua,

From MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on

FRIDAY, - - FEBRUARY 15, 1867.

Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship

SANTIAGO,

(2500 tons) For NEW YORK.

The AMERICA will sail on March 5th.

For further information, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco

ITALIAN MANUFACTORY

FIRST PREMIUM 1857 — EUREKA — 1858 — 1864 — 1865

OF

MACCARONI, VERMICELLI,
PASTE & FARINA.

(706 SANSOME ST. 706)
SAN FRANCISCO.

BRIGNARDELLO, MACCHIAVELLO & Co.

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE

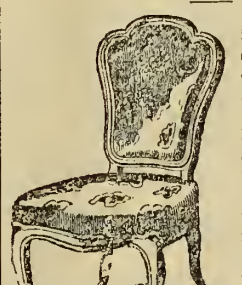
At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO.



WE ARE NOW CLOSING out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street, between Third and Fourth; and Main street, Stockton.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

Splendid Presents

TO SEND ABROAD.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS

.....OF.....

California Scenery!

A SERIES OF OVER

ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!

ILLUSTRATING

The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.

PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,

And Published by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 & 319 Montgomery Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

Martha Washington HAIR RESTORER.

THIS IS A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY, and stands above comparison with any other article for the Hair ever brought before the public.

A PERFECT

Hair Restorer AND Hair Dresser

BOTH COMBINED IN ONE.

First—It is not a Dye.
Second—Will not Color the Skin.
Third—Will restore Gray Hair to a beautiful Black, Brown, Auburn, or whatever might have been its original color, and cause it to assume its former beauty.
Fourth—Will cure all Humors and Diseases of the Scalp.
Fifth—Will remove Dandruff and Scurf from the head, and keep the hair moist and silk like in its appearance as in youthful days.
Sixth—Will promote a healthy growth.
Seventh—Will prevent it from falling off, and cause it to grow on bald heads where there is life and vitality at the roots, but where these are gone there is no hope of success.
Eighth—The best testimony that can be given will be found inside of each bottle.

Warranted to do all we claim for it, or the money refunded after using two bottles. Try it and be convinced.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Price.....One Dollar.

SIMONDS & CO., Proprietors,
Fitzwilliam, N. H.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

STOP THAT COUGHING.

SOME OF YOU CAN'T, AND WE PITY YOU. You have tried every remedy but the ONE destined, by its intrinsic merit, to supersede all similar preparations. It is not surprising you should be reluctant to try something else after the many experiments you have made of trashy compounds foisted on the public as a certain cure, but

NEWELL'S

PULMONARY SYRUP

is really the VERY BEST remedy ever compounded for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Consumption. Thousands of people in California and Oregon have been already benefited by the surprising curative powers of

NEWELL'S PULMONARY SYRUP,

and with one accord give it their unqualified approbation. We now address ourselves to all who are unacquainted with this, the greatest Panacea of the age, for the healing of all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, assuring you that has cured thousands, and it will cure you if you try it. This invaluable medicine is pleasant to the taste, soothing, healing and strengthening in its effects; entirely free from all poisonous or deleterious drugs, and perfectly harmless under all circumstances.

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

Certificates from many prominent citizens of San Francisco accompany every bottle of

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco

REDINGTON'S

Flavoring Extract

ARE MADE FROM FRESH FRUITS. Each bottle holds twice as much as any other brand in the market, consequently they are the cheapest and the best. USE NO OTHER.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Agents for the Pacific Coast

REDINGTON & CO.'S

Essence of Jamaica Ginger.

THIS VALUABLE PREPARATION, containing in a highly concentrated form all the properties of the Jamaica Ginger, has become one of the most popular domestic remedies for all diseases of the stomach and digestive organs.

As a tonic it will be found invaluable to all persons recovering from debility, whether produced by fever or otherwise, for whilst it imparts to the system all the glow and vigor that can be produced by wine or brandy, it is entirely free from the reactionary effects that follow the use of spirits of any kind.

It is also an excellent remedy for females who suffer from difficult menstruation, giving almost immediate relief to the spasms that so frequently accompany that period.

It gives immediate relief to Nausea, caused by riding in a railroad car, or by sea-sickness, or other causes.

It is also valuable as an external application for Gout Rheumatism, Neuralgia, etc.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast

THE OLD MILL.

There was a little stream which ran through the forest, year after year, for I cannot tell how long, with nothing to do but bubble and gurgle, and splash and dash, and run along just as it had a mind to.

By-and-by a miller stopped it, and put it to work in his mill. Who can tell how many bushels of corn and sacks of wheat it ground to make bread for the families far and near? Sometimes it could hardly work fast enough; but it worked steadily—so steadily that wise men began to say—"Here is water enough to turn a cotton-mill, too."

The boys liked to go to mill with their grists. It was fun to see the big water-wheel splash and dash round and round, and watch the corn drop into the hopper, and hear the clapper, clapper of the grinding, and see the meal pouring. Besides, the old miller was a favorite. He did not talk much, to be sure; but he was a good listener, and almost always had the last word, if no other.

A new boy came one day with George Kent, when he brought his grist. They called him Jake. Jesse Stearns was sitting on a bag of meal with a book in his hand. The schoolhouse was not far off, and the boys often visited the mill with their books as well as their bags.

"Studying, are ye?" cried Jake. "Well, I never liked schooling. My father wanted me to go to the academy. He wanted to make a scholar of me; but I had no notion of that, not I. I had rather go to sea."

"Water which runs at its own will
Is never known to turn a mill."

said the old miller, who was busy tying up a bag of grits.

The boys looked round, but the word "sea" caught their attention.

"Then you have been to sea?" cried Abe Winslow, coming in from the door; "just where I wanted to go."

"Yes, I went to sea," said Jake, "but I got sick of it after two voyages, and so I quit."

"Water which runs at its own will
Is never known to turn a mill,"

said the old miller, from behind his hopper.

"The old fellow is forever telling about his mill," said George, in a laughing whisper.

"Well Jake, what next?" asked Jesse.

"Then father put me into a machine-shop; but they pretty soon found I was no mechanic. I did not like it, and so ran away."

"And turned up here to try your hand at farming." said Jesse. "You must stick to it, and work like a Trojan, to have it turn to much account, father says."

"I do not know about that," said Jake.

"Water which runs at its own will
Is never known to turn a mill,"

said the old miller, who had kept his ears open. "Do you know what that means, youngsters?"

"Why, it means that water left to itself is not likely to grind corn or turn spindles," said Jesse.

"It means you must dam up your power to make it tell," said George.

"It means that to accomplish anything, you must stop and work," said Winslow.

"To my mind, it means we must have a purpose and clinch it," said the other man.

Jake saw in a moment that the old miller was hitting him, and pretty soon he backed off the premises. The rest of the boys went back to school, while he took his way up stream, where he sat down on a mossy bank. The water flowed smoothly here, but all the while it seemed to sing in his ear—

"Water which runs at its own will
Is never known to turn a mill."

THE London Review tells the following story of Bismarck: "He is said to be partial to brandy, and before leaving Berlin for the seat of war a little son of his asked him how long he was to be away. He replied that he did not know, Thereupon a servant came in to inquire how many bottles of cognac were to be packed up in the Count's luggage. 'Twenty-four,' was the answer. "Ah, papa," cried out the 'terrible infant,' 'now I know how long you are to be from home,—twenty-four days.'"

THERE is a line of 450 miles of continuous railroad west of St. Louis.

REMOVAL!

Wightman & Hardie's

DRY GOODS AND CARPET WAREHOUSE

HAS REMOVED

To No. 220 Sansome Street,

TWO DOORS SOUTH OF CALIFORNIA.

Removal.

D. J. OLIVER

Has removed from Washington street, to

HIS NEW BUILDING

ON THE

NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STREETS,

Where he offers for sale

THE LARGEST STOCK OF

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

101, 103 and 105 Front street. 110 Pine street.

Removal. Removal.

THE HOWE SEWING MACHINE AGENCY

HAS BEEN REMOVED TO

NEW STORE,

No. 137 KEARNY STREET, S. W. corner of Sutter.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

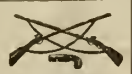
No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

WILSON & EVANS,



No. 513 Clay street,

Importers and Dealers in

FIREARMS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION,

SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Pouches, Eley's Caps, Wads, and all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing-Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Linen and Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.

WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY

NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warranted to give satisfaction.

WILSON & EVANS.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

R. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Cogbill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. H. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

R. A. THOMPSON,

DEALER IN

Coal and Charcoal,

816 and 818 Mission st., near the corner of Fourth,

SAN FRANCISCO.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,

Practical Card and Seal Engraver,

AND PLATE PRINTER,

No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

Belduke & Co.,

(Formerly of Concord, New Hampshire.)

LONG IN THE EMPLOY OF THE CELEBRATED firm of L. DOWNING & SON, having arrived in this city for the purpose of the Manufacture of

CONCORD CARRIAGES,

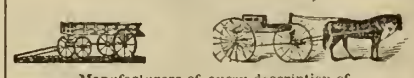
And having on hand a large assortment of EASTERN MATERIAL, we are prepared to receive orders for the same. CARRIAGES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS, equal in style and Durability to those imported from the East. Special attention given to setting axles in Concord style. CARRIAGE SPRINGS MANUFACTURED TO ORDER.

All the work from our establishment warranted to give entire satisfaction. Also, we are prepared to furnish Concord Harness made to order at our establishment.

NO 820 FOLSOM STREET,
Between Fourth and Fifth.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,



Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of

LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,

37 and 39 Webb street,

Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of

WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c,

A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.

Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.

H. CASEBOLT.

WILLIAM TRUMBULL,

Manufacturer of

Saddles, Harness and Collars,

North-west corner Davis and Commercial streets.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

A good assortment, made from the best Materials, in the highest style of Workmanship, constantly on hand.

Manufacturing and Repairing done promptly, on reasonable terms. ☞ Country Trade solicited.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

No. 224 Montgomery street,

Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,

San Francisco.

B. MACKAY,

ARCHITECT,

NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

N. P. COLE & CO.,

WHOLESALE

Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM

PRICE 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.

PRICE 50 CENTS.

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor Sansome & Commercial streets.

Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicides, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE OF POTASS.

THE

Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

CLEANSE THE BLOOD.

WITH CORRUPT, DISordered or vitiated Blood, you are sick all over. It may burst out in Pimples, or, Sores, or in some active disease, or it may merely keep you listless, depressed and good for nothing. But you cannot have good health while your blood is impure. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA purges out these impurities and stimulates the organs of life into vigorous action, restoring the health and curing disease. Hence it rapidly cures a variety of complaints which are caused by impurity of the blood, such as Scrofula, or Kings' Evil, Tumors, Ulcers, Sores, Eruptions, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose, or Erysipelas, Tetter, or Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Cancer or Cancerous Tumors, Sore Eyes, Female Diseases, such as Retention, Irregularity, Suppression, Whites, Sterility, also Syphilis or Venerial Diseases, Liver Complaints, and Heart Diseases. Try AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and see for yourself the surprising activity with which it cleanses the blood and cures these disorders.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound "Sarsaparilla," and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. We think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. We can only assure the sick, that we offer them the best alterative which we know how to produce, and we have reason to believe, it is by far the most effectual purifier of the blood yet discovered by any body.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is so universally known to surpass every other remedy for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease, that it is useless here to recount the evidence of its virtues. The world knows them.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma.

Fireman's Fund
INSURANCE COMPANY.

ABSTRACT from Statement for Year ending Dec. 31, 1866:

Capital stock, all paid up, - -	$500,000 00
Surplus, - - - - - -	181,139 39
		$681,139 39
ASSETS.
Loans on Real Estate, - -	$471,404 00
Loans on Personal Property, -	79,685 92
Real Estate owned by Company,	78,768 30
Cash on hand and in Bank, -	26,817 30
Other Securities, - - -	27,138 45
		$683,784 97
LIABILITIES.
Amount of personal accounts, $973 73
Dividends unpaid, - - 1,671 85
	2,645 58
		$681,139 39
Am't of losses paid during the year,	$57,290 12
Amount of losses unsettled, -	5,339 40
		$62,629 52
Dividend declared for 1866		$87,500 00

THE FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE COMPANY beg leave to call the attention of the public to their ANNUAL STATEMENT, feeling satisfied that a careful examination of the same will convince people of its stability, and induce many to patronize the Company.

The greatest amount taken on any one risk is $50,000, and when any risk is considered too great a portion is re-insured in responsible Companies.

Desirable risks taken at REDUCED RATES.

Losses paid in United States Coin.

W. B. BOURN, President.
D. J. STAPLES,
Vice-President and Executive Officer.
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pres't.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

GREAT WESTERN
Life Insurance Company.
OF NEW YORK.

STOCK and MUTUAL

The Security of the Stock Plan, with all the Advantages of the Mutual System.

POLICIES AND DIVIDENDS ARE NON-FORFEITABLE.

Thirty Days Grace for Payment of Premiums.

J. W. BRUMAGIN.
General Agent for California,
Office 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

DR. FONDA SAN FRANCISCO
EYE INFIRMARY,

PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUsively for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.

P. W. FONDA, M. D.,
Surgeon in charge Infirmary,
223 Kearny street between Bush and Sutter.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,
(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)

NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,

From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.

Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS,	ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS,	WATER HOUSES,

And all kinds of

Asphaltum Work,

Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,
LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

RHEUMATISM CAN BE CURED
BY USING
Healy's Rheumatic Liniment,

Which is warranted to cure the most obstinate cases of CHRONIC OR INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.

It relaxes the muscles, removes the pain, and restores health and vigor to the system.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb 6, 1866.

MR. HEALY—Dear Sir: Having witnessed many cures effected by your Rheumatic Liniment, I take great pleasure in universally recommending it to those in search of a really good article.

Yours, &c., FRANK V. SCUDDER.

MR. FRANK HEALY: I suffered considerable rheumatic pains in both shoulders for a long time. I tried many remedies to get relief, but to no purpose. I was advised to try a bottle of "Healy's Rheumatic Liniment," which I did, and it has greatly relieved me. I am now using the second bottle, and am confident that in a few days I shall be well.

Yours, &c., R. PAGE,
316, Montgomery street.

San Francisco, Feb, 9, 1866.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 13, 1866.

To F. HEALY: I have heard much and seen practical proofs of your Liniment, and I endorse all you claim for it. L. GOETZ,
335, 337, Pine street.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 12, 1866.

Dear Sir: I have used the bottle of Liniment you sent me, and it has done me good. Please send me another. WM. HORR,
718, Battery street

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT is for sale by all Druggists on the Pacific coast.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Wholesale Agents, CRANE & BRIGHAM, and R. H. McDONALD & Co., SAN FRANCISCO.

AGENTS WANTED TO CANVASS FOR THE only official Southern History of the War. THE LOST CAUSE, by E. A. Pollard, the popular Historian of the South, and editor of the Richmond Examiner during the war. Complete in one large royal octavo volume, with

24 FINE STEEL PORTRAITS,

giving a full and authentic account of the rise and fall of the late Southern Confederacy. Written under the encouragement of Generals R. E. Lee, Johnston, Beauregard and others. The work is being liberally patronized by leading men of all classes, eager to hear and thus arrive at the truth of history, which it is impossible to do from the many histories written only from a Northern stand-point.

"THE OTHER SIDE,"

Agents and the public are cautioned against any other work purporting to be this one. To energetic men and women a rare chance is offered to make money. Don't fail to send for circulars of this great and important work. Adddress

F. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS W. SUTHERLAND, deceased.

It appearing to the said Court by the petition this day presented and filed by Alexander R. Baldwin, the Administrator of the estate of Thomas W. Sutherland, deceased, praying for an order of sale of Real Estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the Real Estate to pay the charges and expenses of administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 12th day of February A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of said day at the Court room of said Probate Court at the City Hall, in said city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated January 10th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
Of the City and County of San Francisco, }

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true, full and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 10th day of January A. D. 1867

WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGILES, Deputy Clerk.
J. F. HUTTON, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. j12 5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

LUCY J. PRINCE, Plaintiff, vs. LOUIS M PRINCE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LOUIS M. PRINCE, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Hon. Court, dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and awarding to Plaintiff the sole custody of Louis Prince, the child of said parties, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this eighth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.]
D. P. BARSTOW, Plaintiff's Attorney. no10-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

CECILE PEBELIE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELIE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelie, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you, by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and aud for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff be permitted to resume her maiden name, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[L. S.] By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, City and County of San Francisco.—In the Probate Court.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS SMITH, deceased.

Order of Publication on Application for Order of Sale.

On reading and filing the petition of Christian Schreiber, Administrator of the said estate, praying for an order of sale of the real estate therein described, and it appearing to this Court that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of the said Administrator to pay the allowance to the family, the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the expenses of administration, and that it is necessary to sell the whole or some portion of the real estate of said deceased for the payment of such debts.

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court at the Court Room thereof, at the City Hall, in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 4th day of February 1867, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts.

And it is further ordered, that a copy of the foregoing order be published once a week for four weeks, in the CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper published in the city and county aforesaid. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated January 2d, 1867. j5 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

In the matter of the Estate of ALFRED RODMAN and ELOISE RODMON, Minors.

It appearing to this Court from the petition this day presented and filed by John C. Merrill, the Guardian of the estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, Minors, praying for an order of sale of the real estate of his said wards, that it would be beneficial to the said wards that such real estate should be sold at private sale.

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said wards, and all persons interested in said estates, appear before this Court at the Court Room thereof at the Court House in the city and county of San Francisco, on MONDAY, the 4th day of February, A. D., 1867, at 11 o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before said hearing of said petition in the THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

January 2d, 1867.
D. P. HARSTOW, Esq., Attorney for Guardian. j5 5t

ESTATE OF LOUIS McGLAUFLIN, DECEASED.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executrix of the Estate of Louis McGlaudlin, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at her residence, No 773 Brannan street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

EMELINE McGLAUFLIN, Executrix.

San Francisco, January 5th, 1867.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Executrix. j5 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE HAMILTON THOMPSON, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of GEORGE HAMILTON THOMPSON, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the U. S. Surveyor General's office, Pioneer Hall, Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, January 25th, 1867.

G. HOWARD THOMPSON,
Administrator of Estate of George Hamilton Thompson, deceased, j26 5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

RUDOLPH STEINBACH, Plaintiff, vs. JOSEPH L REED, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, and the complaint filed in the said city and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JOSEPH L REED, CAROLINE L. REED, CHRISTIAN L. LIEN, PETER S. McNIEL, SARAH J McNIEL, EDWARD STRODE, NEWELL WINANTS, JOHN C. FRY, JAMES RYAN, S. CLINTON HASTINGS, Administrator of the Estate of Austin E. Smith, deceased, WILLIAM SMITH, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to compel the defendants to set forth the nature of their several claims in and to the lands and premises described in the complaint, and that adverse claims of said defendants may be determined by a decree of this Court, that it be declared and adjudged that the defendants, or either of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said lands or premises, and that they be forever debarred from asserting any claim thereto adverse to plaintiff, and that he is the owner thereof in fee, and for such other and further relief as to equity shall seem meet.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 24th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-six. WM LOEWY, Clerk

[SEAL.] By W. R. SATTERLEE, Deputy Clerk.
Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 5c cts.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. d22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ELIZABETH BARRETT, Plaintiff, vs. CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the sum of $30,000, being the one-half of the common property of the parties, be adjudged to belong to and be delivered to this plaintiff; and that the care, custody and education of the children of the said parties, viz: Cornelius William and Arthur Joseph, be awarded to the plaintiff; and that pending this suit, the defendant may, by order of this Court, be restrained and enjoined from selling, or in any manner disposing of the common property referred to in the complaint—that is to say, $60,000; and that defendant be ordered to pay plaintiff $250 per month for the support of herself and children, and the further sum of $1,000 as attorneys' fees for the prosecution of this action, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[SEAL.] By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
PIXLEY & SMITH, Attorneys for Plaintiff. d29 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUdicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovenamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and be put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j19 3m

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE, - - SOLE PROPRIETOR AND MANAGER
CHAS. TIBBETTS, - - BUSINESS MANAGER
C. L. GRAVES, - - - STAGE MANAGER
W. STEVENSON, - - - - - TREASURER

Miss Kate Denin, Mrs. H. Jackson,
Mr. J. McCullough, Mr. H. Edwards,
And a Full Corps Dramatique!

THIS EVENINO AND AFTERNOON, FEB. 2D,
Augustin Daly's Version of
GRIFFITH GAUNT!
A DRAMA OF THE PASSIONS.

Griffith Gaunt, John McCullough; George Neville, John Wilson; Squire Peytod, D, C. Anderson, Father Francis G. Pardey; Brother Leonard, E. N. Thayer; Chief Justice, H. Sinclair; The Attorneo General, Harry Jackson; Hawyer Housemin, H. D. Thompson; Ned Galtou, E. Melville; Tom Leicester, H. Edwards; Paul Carrick, W. Barry; Old Vint, Geo. Pardey; Doctor, H. Macklyn; Kate Peyton, Miss Kate Denin; Merey Viut, Miss J. Coreoran; Caroline Ryder, Mrs. Harry Jackson; Dame Vint, Mrs. Judah; Jane Frost, Miss Mary Coreoran; Betty, Miss Emma Miles; A Pretty Gipsey, Miss Sonle; Meg, Miss Anita

SUNDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 3,
GRAND SACRED CONCERT.
PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle, - -	$1 00	Orchestra, - -	$1 00
Parquette, - -	50	Upper Circle, -	25

No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

THOMAS MAGUIRE, - - - - - Sole Proprietor
CHAS. TIBBETTS, - - - - - Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES, - - - - - - Stage Manager
WM. STEVENSON, - - - - - - Treasurer

GRAND SACRED CONCERT!
ON SUNDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 3d,

Signorina E. Brambilla,
The Favorite Prima Donna.
Mrs. Joseph Heine,
The Celebrated Pianist.
Mr. Joseph Heine,
The Blind Paganini.
Signor C. Mancusi—
AND
A FULL ORCHESTRA!

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - -	$1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - - - -	50
Gallery, - - - - - - - - - - - -	25

Box Office open on Saturday and Sunday, from 10 to 4 o'clock, when seats may be secured.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MRS. H. L. WEAVER.—Madam: Having heard with pleasure of the success and superiority of your accomplishments in elocution, as shown by your hitherto gratuitous public readings in this city, we beg leave to request that, before leaving San Francisco, you will give a literary entertainment at such time and place as you may designate. Respectfully yours,

A. L. Stone,	Horatio Stebbins,
Ira G. Hoitt,	Ebenezer Knowlton,
H. M. Scudder,	J. C. Pelton,
John Swett,	J. W. Winans,
M. C. Briggs,	James Strattou,
James Denman,	Alpheus Bull,
George Barstow,	Giles H. Gray,
B. H. Moulton,	S. C. Bughee.

San Francisco, January 28, 1867.

DR. A. L. STONE AND OTHERS.—Gentlemen: Your kind note inviting me to give a Public Reading, is received and accepted. If agreeable, I would mention TUESDAY EVENING, February 5th, as the time; and Maguire's Academy of Music, as the place most suitable. Very truly yours, H. L. WEAVER.
San Francisco, January 28, 1867.

TICKETS, - - - - - FIFTY CENTS.
Reserved Seats 50 Cents Extra.

Box Office open for selection of reserved seats from 10 to 4 on the day of reading. Doors open at 7; reading to commence at 8. Tickets for sale at the principal bookstores.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,
Art Gallery, Museum,
CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,
On Mission and Valencia streets.
OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.
NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.
Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

"SHERMAN'S
March Through Georgia."

ADMISSION, - - - TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

THOS. NAST'S GREAT PAINTING now on Exhibition at the Fine Art Gallery of SNOW & ROOS,
219 Montgomery street, (Russ Block.)

FAUST CELLAR,
Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets, San Francisco.
A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.
FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,
SUCCESSOR TO
WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine
Wines, Liquors and Segars,
NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,
Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.
Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S
STEAM ENGINE WORKS
Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationery, or Locomotive.
HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,
Portable Engines of all sizes,
Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP
of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.
Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.

MISS S. A——'S VALENTINE:

"Take this little flower; take it and think of me!
Think, in the hours of lonelinesa, of the one who gave it thee;
Place it within thy bosom, let it never be forgot,
But let it whisper oft to thee, "Forget me not."

MISS A. M. C——'S VALENTINE:

"The brightest smiles that ever fell
Are not so dear as thine to me;
And oh! these lines but faintly tell
The love that fills my heart for thee."

TO —— ——:

Think not this gift is idly penn'd
To pass a weary hour away;
Or that the giver in the end
Will in his friendship e'er decay!

'Tis sent in all sincere esteem,
And with the purest heartfelt prayer
That heaven'a most enduring beam
May guard and shield thee from all care.

MISS MARY B——N'S VALENTINE:

How dear the dream
In distant hour of ill,
Should all he change,
To find the faithful still.

ST. VALENTINE'S ADVICE.

To the unmarried of the nation,
As they would avoid the mortification,
And shun the appellation
Of old maids and old bachelors in this generation,
To make direct application,
Without any flirtation,
To APPLETON'S station,
Where VALENTINE holds his oblation,
For an appropriate communication,
Which will afford a gratification,
In the highest acceptation,
And he a sufficient remuneration
For the money spent on the occasion,
From the smallest to the greatest valuation.

VALENTINES in extra fine French Boxes—also in solid Rosewood and Mahogany cases. Sold with or without jewelry.
VALENTINES of every conceivable variety; Valentine Cards, Valentine Mottoes and Stationery.
THIRTY New and Original California Comics.
COMICS.....5 cents.
VALENTINE WRITERS, Comic and Sentimental.
APPLETON'S VALENTINE EXPRESS,
With ten Horses, will deliver Valentines every hour of Valentine's Day in every part of the city.
D. E. APPLETON & CO.,
508 Montgomery street.

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

B. MACKAY,
ARCHITECT,
NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

MAURICE DORE & CO.,
REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL
AUCTIONEERS.
OFFICE AND SALESROOM, 327 MONTGOMERY ST.
W. A. QUARLES, Auctioneer.

*WEDNESDAY,.....*February 6, 1867,
At 12 O'clock, at Salesroom,
SPECIAL CREDIT SALE.

100-Vara Lot No. 303,

Southeasterly corner Market and Ninth streets, fronting on Market, Ninth and Stevenson streets, in thirty-three subdivisions, without reserve, on a liberal credit.

TERMS: One-third Cash;
One-third in One Year;
One-third in Two Years.

Deferred payments to bear interest at 10 per cent. per ann.

In calling the attention of Capitalists and the Public generally to the sale of this splendid property, we deem it unnecessary to point out its unequalled advantages as a central business location, believing every man in this city as capable of appreciating these as ourselves.

We would state, however, as our opinion that within ten years this 100-Vara Lot will be considered as central and equally as valuable as that on the corner of Market and Second streets is to day, for which $300,000 has recently been offered and declined.

The sale will be positive, and every subdivision will be offered and sold to the highest bidder without reserve.

☞ TITLE PERFECT.

TRUMP & BRADY,
No. 615 Market street,
In Basement of St. Lawrence House, opposite Montgomery,
STEAM AND GAS FITTING,
PLUMBING, ETC.

Gas Letters and Reflectors made to order. Ships, Stores, and Dwelling fitted up with Steam, Water and Gas Pipes, at the lowest rates.
Pumps Repaired, and all kinds of Jobbing done at the shortest notice.
All Work warranted, or no charges made.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. - - - Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

Occidental Restaurant.
J. E. SORBIER & CO., - - PROPRIETORS,
536 Washington street,
A few doors below Montgomery.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the Estate of JOHN F. LOGAN, deceased.
Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.
On reading and filing the petition of Mary Banks and Catherine Rogan, claiming to be the nearest relatives and heirs, being the aunts of John F Logan, deceased, setting forth that the administrator has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:
It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said John F. Logan, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the fifth day of March, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said John F. Logan, deceased, according to law.
It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said fifth day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.
M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated January 30th, 1867. feb2-4w
Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of said Court.
Witness my hand and the seal of the said Court, this first day of February, A. D. 1867.
WM. LOEWY, Clerk
[Seal and stamp.] By A. J. JENKINS, Deputy Clerk.

CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION OF THE "UNIVERSITY" HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION.

INCORPORATED JANUARY 23d, 1867.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, RESIDENTS OF THE State of California, and citizens of the United States of America, and citizens thereof, do hereby certify:
That under and by virtue of the provisions of an Act of the Legislature of the State of California, entitled "An Act to authorize the formation of Corporations, to provide the members thereof with Homesteads or lots of land suitable for Homesteads," approved May 20th, A. D. 1861, and an Act entitled "An Act supplementary to an Act to authorize the formation of Corporations, to provide the members thereof with Homesteads, or lots of land suitable for Homesteads, passed May twentieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-one," approved April 4th, A. D. 1864, we have associated ourselves together, and formed ourselves into an incorporated company, which shall be known as the "UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION."
The objects of said Corporation shall be the purchase of forty-three full Blocks and fifteen fractional Blocks of Land in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in what is known as the University Mound Tract, the same being numbered and designated on a map of the University Mound Tract Survey, on file in the office of the City and County Recorder of said city and county, as follows:

FULL BLOCKS.

Numbers Twenty-one, Forty-four, Forty-five, Forty-seven, Sixty-one, Sixty-two, Sixty-three, Seventy-five, Seventy-six, Seventy-seven, Seventy-eight, Seventy nine, Eighty-five, Eighty-six, Eighty seven, Eighty eight, Eighty-nine, Ninety, Ninety two, Ninety-three, Ninety-four, Ninety-five, Ninety six, Ninety seven, One Hundred, One Hundred and One, One Hundred and Two, One Hundred and Four, One Hundred and Five, One Hundred and Six, One Hundred and Seven, One Hundred and Ten, One Hundred and Eleven, One Hundred and Twelve, One Hundred and Thirteen, One Hundred and Fourteen, One Hundred and Fifteen, One Hundred and Sixteen, One Hundred and Seventeen, One Hundred and Eighteen, One Hundred and Nineteen, One Hundred and Twenty-eight, and One Hundred and Twenty-nine.

FRACTIONAL BLOCKS.

Numbers Eight, Nine, Sixty, Sixty-four, Eighty-three, Eighty-four, Ninety one, One Hundred and Three, One Hundred and Eight, One Hundred and Nine, One Hundred and Twenty-two, One Hundred and Twenty-three, One Hundred and Twenty four, One Hundred and Twenty-five, One Hundred and Twenty six; and the same being a portion of the Bernal Ranch—the improvements thereof—and the subdivision thereof into lots and parcels suitable for Homesteads, and the distribution of such lots or parcels among the shareholders.
The capital stock of said corporation shall be the sum of One Hundred and Twenty-six Thousand Dollars, divided into Four Hundred shares, of Three Hundred and Fifteen Dollars each; and the fund to be raised, the said sum of One Hundred and Twenty six Thousand Dollars.
The said corporation shall exist for the term of five years from the date of the filing of this certificate in the office of the County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, unless sooner dissolved in the manner provided in the by laws or by law.
The business and concerns of said corporation, for the first three months of its existence, shall be managed by a Board of five Trustees, whose names are George B Taylor, L. L. Robinson, H. A. Gorley, E. Thomas, D. D., and Thomas B. Lewis.
The office and principal place of business of said corporation shall be located in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.
The right of increasing the capital stock, as provided in Section 15 of the Act above mentioned, is hereby reserved.
In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals, at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this twenty-third day of January, A D. 1867.

L L ROBINSON,	[L. S.]
E THOMAS,	[L. S.]
H. A. GORLEY,	[L. S.]
GEO. B. TAYLOR,	[L. S.]
J. F. MICHEL,	[L. S.]
OLPHA BONNEY, Sen.,	[L. S.]
THOMAS B. LEWIS,	[L. S.]

State of California, City and County of San Francisco, ss.
On this twenty-ninth day of January, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, before me, John White, a Notary Public in and for said city and county, duly commissioned and sworn, personally appeared the within named L. L. Robinson, E. Thomas, H. A. Gorley, Geo. B. Taylor, J. F. Michel, Olpha Bonney, Sen., and Thomas B. Lewis, whose names are subscribed to the annexed instrument as parties thereto, personally known to me to be the individuals described in and who executed the said annexed instrument, and they each acknowledged to me that they executed the same freely and voluntarily, and for the uses and purposes therein mentioned.
[L. S.] In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, the day and year in this certificate first above written.
JOHN WHITE, Notary Public.

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
This is to certify, that the University Homestead Association filed in my office their Certificate of Incorporation on the 29th day of January, 1867, at the hour of 3:30 P. M. Attest: WM. LOEWY, County Clerk.
By WM. HARNEY, Deputy County Clerk.

OFFICERS OF THE UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION.

E. THOMAS, - - - - - -	President.
LESTER L. ROBINSON, - - - -	Treasurer.
THOMAS B. LEWIS, - - - - -	Secretary.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

E. Thomas,	Lester L. Robinson,
Geo. B. Taylor,	Thomas B. Lewis,
H. A. Gorley.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—In Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.
In the matter of the Estate of JAMES FITZPATRICK, deceased.
Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the estate of James Fitzpatrick, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratrix at the place of the transaction of her business, at the office of her attorney, Geo. B. Merrill, Esq., No. 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco. MARY FITZPATRICK,
Administratrix of Estate of James Fitzpatrick, deceased.
San Francisco, February 2d, 1867. 4w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF WILLIAM SHANAHAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of William Shanahan, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his office, at the store of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California. Dated February 1, 1867.
WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the Estate of William Shanahan, deceased. f2 5t

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 12 OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 9, 1867. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

Gymnastics a la Japanois, an original story, by John Clerk; My Valentino, by "Trem;" Lost Day, a poem, by W. A. Kendall, Life in the Bush, a story; An Editor's Christmas Story; Paragons, an essay; "Black Sheep;" Lion's Mouth;" The Romance of little Willie Crane; Petrified Pork; Calisthenics for Girls; A Poet Annihilated; The Supreme Court Decision: Next Governor; Literary Gleanings; Dramatic Matters; Correspondence, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me" A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale" IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO

The Romance of Little Willie Crane.

A large amount of space in that valuable paper, the Morning Call, has been devoted to an account of the trials and sufferings of little Willie Crane. "One cognizant of the facts" writes a thrilling description of the atrocities practiced in our public schools, which recalls to our mind accounts of the tortures of the Inquisition and the horrors of the galleys. Little Willie, aged seven years, a pupil in the Union Street Primary School, is, it appears from the statement of "one cognizant of the facts," given to romancing, and the inventive faculty which he possesses in a large degree was the cause of his getting into serious trouble on the 31st ult. We gather the following particulars from the letter of "one cognizant of the facts," which appeared in the Call of Thursday:

"On the 31st of January, one of the lady teachers lost a pin. Search was made, but still the pin could not be found. A female teacher then asked if any one of the scholars knew anything of it. Little Willie raised his hand and told the teacher that he saw a girl take up the pin, upon which the teacher accused him of having the pin, and told him if he did not give it up she would 'skin him alive.'"

The author of this letter then states that "he said yes, he had the pin." When asked where it was, he could not tell, and we are told the following scene occurred:

"She stripped him and beat him, (breaking two sticks on him.) The child fainted from pain, and another teacher asked to give him a drink of water, but the humane whipper refused, and answered, 'Let him get out as he got in it, without water.' Willie's sister tried, and begged to go to him, but was denied. This was done at the school, in presence of the scholars."

Then he was dragged home by two teachers and a Spanish boy, and his parents being out, the house was searched, beds were pulled apart, and the pockets of clothing belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Crane were searched. We are told that the child's "body to-day, bears the bruises and marks all over him," resulting from "two sticks" having been broken over him. After a fruitless search of the house, the teachers delivered the boy over to Mr. Pelton, who "placed him in the station-house and preferred charges of petty larceny against him." The child was put in the dark cell, after having told a great many different stories as to the whereabouts of the pin. The mother "begged that he might not be put in such a dungeon, it would throw him into fits and he would die. The policeman's answer to her was, 'If you do not get him again, alive, you will dead.'" Then we are told that his father had to leave his work, and lost his situation. The case was postponed till the 3d instant, and in the mean time the pin was found by the teacher in one of her pockets. "One who is cognizant" makes out a strong case of ill treatment. Mrs. Aurelia Griffith, the Principal, makes answer; she says that Willie, on the pin—which was the property of an ex-teacher, being missed—volunteered the statement that a girl had taken it. On being urged to confess if he himself had taken it, he first said that he had, and had 'hid it in a hole by a pawnbroker's;' he next said that his mother had put it in the cupboard. Mrs. Griffith says:

"I advised the girl to look again there for it. However, even she did not search any other place. No one's bed or pockets were touched. I then sent the boy to the Superintendent, following as soon as I could go home and get ready."

With regard to the beating—with two sticks—the following statement is made:

"That the child was struck by me, or any of my assistants, is totally false. There is not one of my scholars, including Willie and his sister, (who both continue with me, notwithstanding the inhuman conduct with which I am charged,) can say I ever struck him even one blow. That I threatened to skin him alive, that I whipped him until he fainted from pain, and then refused him water, is so perfectly absurd that it requires no denial."

Mr. Pelton follows suit, but plays his hand badly. He, after confirming the statement of Mrs. Aurelia Griffith in many particulars, states that he took the boy into the dark cell and talked to him "in the kindest manner." He continues:

"He came from the cell with me, and as I was about leaving, his mother and sister came in and narrated the 'whipping,' 'search,' etc., etc. Being pressed with other business engagements, I left the boy with the Police Officers, by whom he was soon surrendered to his parents. The officers in charge thought the matter might, with propriety, be further investigated. I thought so, and left the boy with them, as stated."

We gather from the above statements that the ex-teacher is very careless. Mrs. Aurelia Griffith is apt to jump at hasty conclusions, and, we think, to lose her temper a little—Willie Crane is a wicked and silly little "story teller," and Mr. Pelton is a most careless and untrustworthy guardian of youth. His conduct in leaving the boy in prison was utterly unjustifiable, even if he was "pressed with other business engagements." The best way in which to settle this matter would be for Mr. Pelton, who appears to have caused most of the trouble, to find employment for the boy's father; let the ex-teacher be "cut" by her friends as a careless woman; let Mrs. Griffiths refrain from taking a child's testimony against himself, under circumstances similar to those narrated above; and let the martyred "Little Willie" in addition to his already-endured sufferings, have a good whipping; and "one who is cognizant of the facts" refrain from publishing children's stories as "facts."

Calisthenics for Girls.

Some one who signs himself, "One Who Knows," is much agitated by a suggestion made in a morning paper, that gymnastics are not practised in the Girls' High School. He writes to the Bulletin, and says:

"A recent article in a morning paper has complained that gymnastics are not practised in the Girls' High School. We propose to show, not only the disadvantages, but even the absolute wrong of introducing calisthenics into a school of young ladies. Among the ancients it was the custom to practice the athletic art nearly or entirely naked, as the word gymnasium clearly indicates."

"One Who Knows" does not clearly mark the distinction between "calisthenics" and "gymnastics." He may be shocked at the idea of girls indulging in any exercise to which a name signifying "naked antics" is given, but surely "calisthenics" are quite proper, as calisthenic is derived from two Greek words signifying "beauty" and "strength," and containing not the slightest allusion to nakedness. "One Who Knows," after saying that he "proposes to show the absolute wrong of introducing calisthenics into a school of young ladies," succeeds in showing nothing of the kind. He says that young ladies wear corsets, and are therefore unable to practise calisthenics without injury to their constitutions. It is not necessary for a young lady to practise the flying trapeze, or to hold fifty-pound weights at arm's length; but if a young lady will wear very loose corsets—as all young ladies should—and devote half an hour a day to swinging light dumb-bells adapted to her strength, brandishing the Indian clubs, and going through posturing exercises, she will expand her chest, add grace to her form, and in fact gain beauty and strength. "One Who Knows" knows nothing about the matter on which he "proposed" to write. It is "proposed," if calisthenics—not gymnastics—are introduced into ladies' schools, to adapt the exercises to the strength of the pupils, and the potent objections which this knowing correspondent hints that he could advance if he choose, would prove very weak ones. Calisthenics, as practised by ladies in the best schools in all parts of the world, have never resulted in injury in any case; and young ladies practise them in the attire which society approves of. For the sake of utterly horrifying "One Who Knows," we might observe that a company of trained female gymnasts—"The Saltatory Sisters" or "Summerset Sisters"—might draw even larger houses than did the Bnislay Brothers.

Familiar With the Classics.

The classical editor of the Times (the same accomplished individual we presume, who quotes one "Catullus" as a Latin author, and refers to one "Entellus" as a character in Virgil) commences an editorial in Wednesday's issue, thus:

"Familiarity with the classics has taught every one what a siren is. The man who listened to its music, forgot glory, patriotism, and died in an ecstacy of crazed delight."

Listened to its music indeed! Evidently the young gentleman's "familiarity with the classics" has not taught him the fact that "sirens" are of the feminine gender. We suspect, moreover, that it was rather a reference to Webster's Unabridged, than any "familiarity with the classics," that taught him all that he knows about these musical damsels. The circumstance that the youth appropriates Webster's language, and spoils it in the appropriation, seems to justify this suspicion. Webster says, that they who heard the sirens' song "forgot their country and died in an ecstacy of delight." This isn't quite fine enough for a schoolboy's taste. There must be more sounding words. It isn't enough to forget "country;" the phrase gains strength when "patriotism" and "glory" are tugged on to it. To die 'in an ecstacy of delight" isn't sufficient for this chaste and powerful writer, and so he improves it into "an ecstacy of crazed delight." Young gentlemen who are ambitious to excel in fine writing by amplifying definitions taken out of a lexicon, should bear in mind the fact, that there are a great many persons, now-a-days, who rejoice in the possession of an "Unabridged," and are in the habit of consulting it occasionally.

The Repentant Burglar.

During the last week, it has transpired that a suburban thief, who kept a ranch near Lone Mountain, where he herded his stolen goods, stole some silver spoons, on one of which, finding an inscription denoting that it had been used in giving medicine to a beloved child, now dead, he—the Christianlike and benevolent thief, tormented by the stings of a long forgotten conscience—actually re-burglared the house and restored the spoons. He should be sentenced to serve many years in the Customhouse, or in some other capacity under Government.

Petrified Pork.

We always rejoice when strange discoveries are made on the Pacific coast, which will serve to attract attention to the comparatively new and rapidly increasing States in this favored, wonderful, but too-little appreciated portion of the earth. The discovery of a cannon ball—which might fairly be supposed to be pre-Adamite—in this State, at the depth of many hundred feet, filled us with joy. The further discoveries of petrified carrots and a fossil cigar at an equal depth below the earth's surface, enraptured us. Such discoveries could take place nowhere save in the States of California and Nevada, and could not fail to draw the attention of the inhabitants of the older and more worn-out portions of the earth to this coast. In an exchange we find the following:

"S. H. Pugh found recently on Carson river, in Churchill county, Nevada, on the emigrant route, an article supposed to be petrified bacon. It weighs about two pounds, and when found it was a foot long and eight inches wide. It is hard enough to drive a nail, and was lying when discovered in the loose sand, a distance from the stream."

This story is not as satisfactory as it might have been made, by the exercise of a little skill and imagination on the part of the gentleman who published it. If he had, instead of saying that this piece of stone was "supposed to be petrified bacon," boldly stated that it was indubitably petrified pork, the story would have passed current with more ease. We have every reason to believe that not even the oldest and most experienced experts are able to detect the smoky flavor which distinguishes bacon from pork, after the bacon has been petrified for any length of time. We fear that there will be a general effort made to pooh! pooh! Mr. Pugh's petrified bacon discovery. We can hardly say of this, Se non è vero è ben trovato. We should have preferred that Mr. Pugh should find his streaked stone, which is "supposed to be petrified bacon," several hundred feet below the surface of the earth, or somewhere in the primary formation. Pre-Adamite pork, petrified, would be a grand geological novelty, and might lead to the sending of a special commission to this coast from one of the scientific societies of Europe; but a "streaky stone" which looked like bacon, found under a few inches of sand, can awake no interest in the scientific world. Why, oh why, didn't Mr. Pugh pitch that petrified pork down the deepest shaft in the deepest mine in Nevada!

A Poet Annihilated.

The literary coryphens of the Grass Valley National has gone forth upon the war-path after our young friend, Charles Warren Stoddard. After quoting Mr. Stoddard's quaint little lyric entitled "A Rain Song," which was contributed to Mrs. Wright's new California Magazine, and some eulogistic comments thereupon by the Dramatic Chronicle, the Grass Valley critic thus proceeds:

"We call such verses as the above 'trash,' and if they are exquisite at all, they are exquisitely silly and nonsensical. We do not ask anybody to take our dictum in the matter, but let judges of poetry read the lines for themselves, analyze them as we propose to do, and form their own conclusions. Look at the first verse. Though the author would shield his 'sweet-heart' from the snow and the winds, yet he could not forbid the rain coming. One would suppose that he was going to say that, although he could not shield her from the snow and the winds, yet he would shield her if he could. But, he has no such notion and declares that it is the rain which mostly troubles him. Although he would stop snow and wind, yet he can not stop rain. Does he mean to signify that it might snow and blow on her, at will, so far as he was concerned, but that he would be pleased if it would not rain on her?

The literary illuminator of the regions of quartzdom would do well, if the above furnishes a just measure of his critical ability, to steer clear of disquisition upon poetry and belles lettres. The poet's idea is palpable enough to persons of taste and appreciation. The "snow" and "sleet," and "the four fierce winds that blow" are things that beauty is to be protected against—but not surely against the gentle and refreshing "Summer rain." Alas! what terrible work these provincial editors make of it, when they venture upon an irruption into the uncongenial field of polite literature. We would earnestly recommend to the Grass Valley genius, a course of Kaime's Elements of Criticism, and Quackenbos' English Rhetoric.

"The Name of Jesus."

The Bulletin of Wednesday last published an extract from some work, the name of which we have been unable to discover, with the above caption. The opening paragraph of the extract we give:

"It is a remarkable fact that while the name of Jesus was one of the most common among the Jews, in the time of our Saviour, it has now almost disappeared as a name from all the nations of the earth. Strong as is the desire of parents that their sons should inherit the virtues of distinguished personages, and widespread as is the custom of naming children after them, as a fit expression of that desire, yet what mother presumes to name her son Jesus!"

Whoever wrote the above, was certainly unacquainted with Mexico. In that country there are hundreds of men who bear the sacred name, at the mention of which every head should bow. In our California courts, again and again, a ruffian bearing this most holy name is brought up, accused of murder, theft or assault. If the writer of the above really wishes to ascertain "what mother would presume to name her son Jesus," he must come to the Pacific coast, where he will find thousands of mothers who have not the slightest scruple about the matter.

LIFE IN THE BUSH.

SURVEYING and exploring a new district in Queensland, is a matter of some hardship and peril. In the evenings, after the day's work is over, when we have finished our "damper," salt beef, and tea, and are smoking our pipes round a blazing log fire, many a strange story is told. My men are old Bushmen, and are up to a thing or two; especially My Chainman.

He is a harum-scarum, reckless, handsome, genuine Irishman of very respectable family, induced to emigrate many years ago as a hopeless scapegrace. He has knocked about New South Wales and Queensland in all sorts of capacities. I fell in with him by chance. I was fortunate enough to save his life, engaged him, and believed him to be as devoted and fine a fellow as there is in the world.

A few days ago, My Chainman was journeying in the direction of Sydney, from a place in the interior called, I think, Jiuballah. Having stopped at several public-houses on the way, he found himself still on his journey, with a ten-pound note, half a sovereign, and a half-crown, in his pocket. About a hundred miles from Sydney, he found some confusion in a public-house which he had entered to obtain refreshment. The landlady was crying bitterly, and the servants were in a great fright.

When he entered, the hostess eagerly exclaimed:

"You are not one of thim, are you?"

"What do you mean?"

"Och, it's the Bushrangers I mane. You are'nt one of thim?"

"No. Have they been here, then?"

"Yes, half an hour ago, and cleared my house of all I had. Musha! The widdy's curse be upon them!"

"Have they gone down the road, or struck right into the bush?"

"Gone down the road to stick up all they meet wid."

"How many?"

"Three; sorrow less."

Now, My Chainman must go down to Sydney. He could not take the bush for it, as he did not know the country well enough. He might evade the Bushrangers by some lucky chance, either by the aid of night or other means. He was dressed, of course, in the gear of a thorough Bushman, and they might spare him on the old Scotch principle, "Hawks pyke not oot hawk's een." Besides, he might conceal his ten-pound note, and it would not break his heart to lose his half-sovereign and half-crown. On the whole, then, he saw nothing for it but to resume his journey. He chose his short sock as the best place for the bank-note, and thrust the note into it, without folding it up.

Forth he went, and rode rapidly on for about an hour without seeing the rangers; however, he distinctly saw the fresh tracks of four horses in advance. At an abrupt turn of the road, he was covered by three revolvers, and addressed by three voices:

"Dismount!"

No help for it. He got off his horse, and took a survey of the "glorious three." One was a very good-natured-looking fellow; the other seemed rather backward; the third was an unmistakeable ruffian.

"Where have you been? You're a digger."

"I'm just coming from the Wanoorah Diggin's."

These gold fields were noted for their poverty.

"How much money have you got?"

"One half-sovereign and one half-crown."

"Is that all?"

"That's all."

It was the good natured man who spoke in this dialogue.

"I think, Jim, we may let him off. The poor devil must be hard up, coming from those wretched diggings."

"We'll have something to say to him first," replied Number Three, whose accent was Irish; and this gave My Chainman some hope.

"Well, at all events, he must have a glass of grog." My Chainman accordingly drank a bumper that took his breath away.

"Walk before me into the bush," then said Number Three.

"Not a bit of it, Jim; let the poor devil go. Why, he's a countryman of your own. What do you say, Jack?"

"Never mind what Jack says!" replied Number Three. "Don't make an ass of yourself, Dick! I'll have my way in this."

He motioned to My Chainman to go on; and on he went until they reached a belt of scrub.

"Halt! Now, listen to me. It's my opinion that you are a schemer. If I find one shilling on you more than you have acknowledged to," (he swore a terrific oath,)"I'll blow your brains out on the spot. Strip!"

My Chainman owned to me that for a moment he felt a mortal terror, but he shook it off, and proceeded to undress.

"Take off your jumper first—not your boots. Now your flannel shirt. Throw them over to me."

He examined them thoroughly.

"Take off your boots. Throw them here. Now your trousers."

He found in the pockets the two coins. And my Chainman hoped that the search was over. Not yet.

"Take off yer socks!"

To hesitate was instant death. The ruffian shook both the socks. Let the reader fancy the beating of My Chainman's heart, meanwhile! As he had thrust the note into the sock without folding it up, and as the robber had caught the note with the thick sock between his finger and thumb, it was thus prevented from dropping out. To such small things a man may owe dear life itself.

"Now be off."

"What!" said My Chainman. "Would you send a man away stark naked, and in this weather, too?"

"You ought to be thankful for your life."

Just then, up came Dick.

"Haven't you searched him yet? What the devil's the use of keeping him in the cold?"

"You mind your own business, Dick."

"Jim," retorted Dick, "you know I can stand a good deal; but you're not the man to bide a quarrel with me when I'm roused. I won't allow you to do as you did last time. Give this man his boots and trousers; keep his jumper if you want it."

Thus they spilt the difference, and My Chainman was left on a bush-road without a horse, and only half clad. He had his ten pound note, however."

After walking briskly for about twelve miles, he came to a sly grog-shop, where he found two men conversing; one, evidently the host; the other, (he knew as well as if it had been revealed to him,) was the fourth Bushranger.

In the endless wilds of Australia, there is not a Bushman whose life does not often depend on "tracing;" and so wonderful do Bushmen become in this respect, that they can tell the date of every mark upon the ground. I have heard them debate as to whether a black's track was an hour old, or two hours. Now, My Chainman had seen the tracks of four horses in company, and he had carefully tracked the fourth up to this "humpy," close to which it was standing quietly tied by the bridle.

"If I don't ride that horse away from this, to-day," said My Chainman to himself, "may I never have the blessing of St. Patrick!"

The host was a little man; the Bushranger was a tall and muscular villain, with long black hair falling down his shoulders—a bad-sign, as it showed he had been long "out."

They had been talking on a subject that had excited the Bushranger, and that subject, as far as My Chainman could gather from the muttered words he overheard at his entrance, was that the police were on their way up, and not very far off.

My Chainman gave the the masonic sign; it was answered by the host.

"Hallo," said the Bushranger, "wher do you hail from?"

"I have come down the road."

"Haven't you got a horse?"

There was no use shamming here, so My Chainman at once replied:

"I was struck up and robbed twelve miles from this, by the Bushrangers."

"The devil! Are they so near? Isn't it fortunate, Casey, that I know this in time?"

"Why?" said Casey. "You are not going that way. You came from that direction yourself, a while ago:"

The Bushranger at that moment was lighting his pipe with a burning coal; and his back was turned. My Chainman gave a look and made a gesture which was perfectly understood by the shrewd little host.

"I must be going, old man," said the Bushranger, after his pipe had been successfully lighted. "Let's have a glass of grog all round first."

"All right!" said the little man. Three glasses of rum soon stood before the party. My Chainman put his hand forward to take up one of the glasses, but Casey, with an awkward apology about helping the gent, handed the robber that very glass, gave another to My Chainman, and drank off the the third himself.

My Chainman understood all this, and hoped that the stupifying potion would soon take effect. But no. The ruffian's constitution was as sound as the foundations of St. Paul's and the draught only increased his sharpness and penetration.

"Do you think I don't see through you?" said he, with a diabolical glance as Casey. "I am not sure of you" (this was to My Chainman); "if I was, I know what I should do."

"What have I done, sir?" said Casey.

"What have you done, you villian? everything. I'll have your life!"

"Now, although My Chainman did not think that the ruffian meant the threat literally, yet he made his little preparations. The fellow was armed to the teeth. He had two revolvers in his side belt, and a doublebarrelled gun stood close to him. A large sheath-knife hung on his hip. Every second increased the ruffian's fury. His curses and threats were appalling. Casey, the other side of the fire, sat, the picture of dismay.

"Why don't you answer me?" the robber at last shouted.

"Because," gasped Casey, "I have nothing to say."

"Nothing to say?" roared the Bushranger. "Take that!"

He drew a revolver, half rose from his seat, and, with wonderful quickness, levelled the weapon at Casey. But My Chainman was quicker than he. He had quietly picked up an American tomahawk which lay on a block beside him, and, just as the Bushranger had given the half turn to fire, down came the tomahawk on the back of his neck. The pistol exploded at the same moment. The wretched man gave hardly a quiver. He was dead in a second. The two survivors looked into each other's faces.

"Of course he was a Bushranger?" inquired Casey, after a long pause.

"Of course he was," said My Chainman; and he then told him the whole story. "But even if he were not, I did it in self-defence, for he would have shot me the next minute."

"You saved my life, however," said Casey, and that is everything to the purpose."

"I thought at first," said My Chainman; "that you were in league with the robbers."

"Probably I might have been forced to be so in time." was the reply; "but I have not been here long, and, rely upon it, I shan't be here long.

"What is best to be done?" said My Chainman. "Shall I ride on and meet the police, if they are on the way?"

"For the Lord's sake don't!" exclaimed the other. "His mates are sure to be in no time, and they'll torture me if they find this out."

"Get up behind me, and we'll both ride off," said My Chainman.

"Then I leave everything belonging to me to be plundered"

"Well, then, man, what is it you want? What's your advice?"

"Let us throw the body down that rack into the scrub there, and then clean up. You ride off. I'll pretend that their mate was after you. If you do meet the police don't say a word about it."

"But the horse and saddle may be stolen property?"

"You must chance that. It's the only plan."

My Chainman adopted the only plan, rode down to Sydney, and sold the horse.

"But now, sir," said he, "comes the strangest part of the story, and, if I didn't feel sure that you would believe me I never tell it. Years passed, and I happened to be traveling through a town where the assizes were going on. I heard that a great murderer was to be tried, so I went to hear the trial. As I live and must die, one of the officials of that court, and not the lowest either, was Jim, the Bushranger who stripped me!"

"Of course you communicated your discovery to the police?"

"My Chainman gave a dry cough, and, I rather think, got red in the face.

"I never much cottoned to the police, sir, at any time—least of all, then. Not so much for my own sake as for others."

"I see, I see," said I; "but I hope that was the only human blood you ever shed?"

"The only drop," said My Chainman, in some confusion, "saving and excepting one other case. That's a longer yarn than this."

MORNING CALLS IN INDIA.

I MUST say that calling in India, notwithstanding all its désagrémens of time and temperature, is sometimes productive of great amusement, and that the country would be more empty of occupation than it is without it. You are also, generally speaking, sure of obtaining admittance to the houses you visit. In a place where Europeans are forbidden by the climate to stir out of doors during certain hours, it is very difficult to find a plausible excuse for refusing to see visitors. Some few there are, of course, as in England, who make a point of never being fit to see by anybody—these few belong to the "very insane," and the apologies made by the native servants for their non-appearance are sometimes very amusing. The usual question on reaching the portico of an Indian bungalow is—"Can missus see?"—it being a popular superstition among the Europeans, that to enable a native to understand English, he must be addressed as if he were deaf, and in the most infantile language. If a lady desires on any particular occasion to be invisible, she has already given the general order. "Missus can't see," for the benefit of her visitors; but a native can never deliver a message pure and undefiled. He considers it not sufficiently polite, perhaps, that it should be unaccompanied by an excuse, so he generally invents one. "Missus washing head," and "Missus in tub," are two of their favorite devices for getting out of the scrape, and I have overheard a servant detailing such a circumstantial story of my being out, and where I had gone, and wherefore, that I felt a double criminal, lying on my sofa, to think I had unintentionally laid such a burden on his soul.—"Gup," in Temple Bar.

In Berlin, horse meat has found so much favor that the number of horses slaughtered in a year has already reached two thousand six hundred, and is constantly increasing.

PARAGONS.

THERE are some people whose good fortune it has been from very early years to be accustomed to perform every duty in an exemplary and thoughtful manner, and who may look back with just pride on a long course of virtue. It is a curious spectacle for men of the world to see the pattern creatures whom they have known from the beginning, sitting patiently on through life each under the shade of his own figtree, pleasantly ruminating on his own completeness. If following the advice of his parents and guardians is a title to the great prizes of life, a pattern being of the sort has done all that can be required of him. As a boy he obeyed his masters when he was at school, and his aunts when he was at home for the holidays. He neither ran into debt, nor tore his trowsers, nor smoked the weediest cigars with furtive enjoyment in a damp barn, nor sat up late to play thimblerig by the unhallowed light of a forbidden dip, nor learned his lessons by the help of cribs, nor pulled the hair of other little boys when they beat him in the school. He was always respectful to the masters, and careful of his clothes and of his pocket-money. As he grew older, he still preserved the same high standard of juvenile precocity. At college, he was invariably regular at chapel and lectures, never vexed the righteous soul of his dean, abstained from suppers and from cards, and left the University very much regretted by all his senior tutors. Such a noble career ought upon theory to lead, in after life, to distinction and success. And when we find that it leads to nothing of the sort, it really seems as if society were very ungrateful to those whose one anxiety has been never to do anything to offend it.

Virtuous young men of the kind are destined in all probability to see themselves distanced in the race by those who at school were little monsters, and who at the University were bigger, without being much better, than they were at school. The grown-up scapegrace has it all his own way at dinner or in a ball-room, wins the Victoria Cross somewhere at the antipodes before the paragon has ceased to be a very junior clerk in a Government office, and cuts out beauties and heiresses by the superior vigor of his conversation under the paragon's very nose. For a long time the paragon goes on comforting himself with the reflection that the success of his aggravating contemporary is an accident and a mistake. Some men, he thinks, make the running early in life, but the best men can afford to wait and bide their time. But, as years wear on, it becomes more and more difficult for the paragon to keep up this innocent little piece of self-delusion. Providence does seem to be going ahead with the scapegrace in a way designed perhaps to fulfill some mysterious purpose, but a way nevertheless which it is impossible to mistake. A cold perspiration breaks out on the paragon's forehead one fine morning, when the newspaper informs him at breakfast-time that the wicked scapegrace has attained celebrity and greatness. This is what comes of doing what one is told, and eating the bread of propriety. The world labels the unhappy being as a prig, if not as a goose, and concentrates its whole attention on the sayings and doings of his abandoned but successful rival. It is a sad, but still a certain truth, that the world is not very fond of paragons. It likes virtue drawn, so to speak, indifferently mild. The men who win its best things are the men who give it pleasure, and either amuse it or serve it well; while the paragon gives nobody pleasure, except his sisters, and maiden aunts.

A great distinction between maiden aunts and bachelor uncles is that the former admire the family prig, while the latter cannot abide him. In a quiet feminine circle in his own family the prig or paragon, has always been a source of just pride and gratification. The women of the family remember all his virtuous little ways ever since he was a boy. They recollect the many hymns and text of Scripture he learnt under their auspices, and they have got treasured up among their domestic archieves the kettleholders he worked when he was in weak health, and the prizes for moral conduct he brought home half-yearly from his class. Uncles do not care much about hymns or worsted-work, and never know what on earth to do with the prig when he is thrown upon their hands. His conversation is not exciting; he is a poor hand at whist; and they cannot have him to dinner without being oppressed with the faint perfume of mediocre respectability that seems to cling to his clothes. Society at large is entirely on the side of the prig's uncles. It values young people, not for their antecedents, but simply and solely for what they can produce in the shape of amusement or solid work. Wealth, beauty, fashion, rank, and even intellect have their market value, and can be sure of commadning a sure return. But virtuous mediocrity very unjustly is believed to have no price at all, and is a mere drug in the social market. By the time he has arrived at middle age, the paragon finds the lesson out by sad and sober experience, and, when it is too late to change, begins possibly to regret his past career. Nobody cares about paragons; and when they come to marry, their very wives end by being bored with their society.

Mankind is, indeed, so hard upon prigs that it is important to reccollect that, after all, they have their uses, and that the social machine would not get on without them so easily as might be conceived. As a rule, paragons do not accomplish very great or magnificent things. They have been always accustomed to run in a beaten groove, and to abstain from the very appearance of excess, whereas a slight infusion of excess is essential to make up a thoroughly successful character. Morality and religion forbid us to believe that it is necessary to begin by sowing wild oats before one sows any crop worth having. Wild oats are usually a mistake. It is so difficult to leave off sowing them precisely at the right moment, that the most prudent, as well as the most exemplary, course is to abstain from cultivating them at all. But an innate capacity for wild oats is perhaps a sine qua non of all energy of character. And this is one of the capacities which a prig appears usually to have wanted from his cradle. He not only does not sow wild oats, but he has not the least portion of wild-oat flavor in him. Discipline, and an anxiety to be correct and regular, have taken it out of him long ago.

Living by rule has become a part and parcel of his nature; and he cannot do anything except in harness, and with his moral bliukers on. Throughout the rest of his existence he never can get out of the pace which is drilled into him at starting, and his mission during life will be to keep step to the last. And it is this very characteristic which makes the despised prig so valuable a member of that society which always will persist in underrating him. A vast proportion of the business of the world is in reality performed by the possessors of humdrum virtue. It is to such lines of business that paragons and prigs usually devote themselves, and it is ungracious and unreasonable not to recognize the services they render.

Inferior Government offices may be selected as one specimen of the employments for which paragons may be said, for instance, to be pre-eminently fitted. It is highly important that the work which is transacted in such places should be done punctually, and according to the best and most received maxims of virtue. A spirit of dash and adventure is the last thing desirable for such an occupation. A bold fiery genius, who was for revolutionising and reforming his species, would be a serious bore and nuisance. He would be for ever inking the letters he had to copy, forgetting to date his despatches, muddling his accounts, snubbing deputations, and displaying insubordination in the presence of incompetent or unenergetic superiors.

What is wanted in the department is a good, sensible, accommodating punctual paragon. His duty is not to startle the office from its lethargy, or to distress it by his impulsiveness, but to be regular in his attendance, to write a fair copy-hand, to cross his t's, to be good at figures, to obey orders with exactness, and to be bland and dignified to the clerks and messengers.

It is not in the power of any Administration to fill up Government offices exclusively with such men as these. Younger sons have to be provided for, constituents to be gratified, and an honest competency to be distributed among hangers-on of the fashionable world. This makes it all the more important to have a number of steady and trustworthy paragons to run by the side of the wild young officials who have been let in, just as tame elephants in the East are told off to keep the wilder elephants in order. In such spheres of duty paragons accordingly have a distinct and admirable mission, and they never could undertake it successfully if they had not been brought up to some such noble work. The paragon, happily, is made for it. All through his life he has been religiously crossing his t's and dating his letters, and kind and conciliatory to his companions.

It is the fashion among less finished characters to look down on the humbler virtues of carefulness and punctuality. How very full of inconvenience and annoyance the world would be without such virtues, may be estimated in a moment by anyone who considers the extreme discomfort of being kept waiting for a train, or for his dinner. Without paragons we should always be kept waiting for something or other. Theirs is the class which observes the time for everybody and which sees that no avoidable annoyance is inflicted on more impatient souls.

Another sort of position which paragons would appear pre-eminently capable of filling is that of secretaries to large societies. Nobody could promote anything, not even the conversion of the heathen, without a bevy of attendant paragons. Getting out programmes, fixing the hours of committee meetings, corresponding with patrons and subscribers, is a business that makes heavy calls upon the humdrum virtues. We should think that a nobleman like Lord Shaftesbury, who has spent a useful and honored life in making his inferiors pious, would acknowledge in his confidential moments how much he owed to paragons and prigs. But for them, he might always be in danger of being the right man upon the wrong platform. He would be looking after the Jews when he ought to be looking after shoeblacks, and putting down Sunday bands when he ought to be putting down Ecce Homo.

Such institutions as Social Science Associations must be, we should imagine, a standing testimony to the order of human beings whose merits we have been discussing. We speak with absolute impartiality on this point, for we have not the wildest notion who on earth gets Social Science Associations up, but we cannot believe that they ever could be got up without the intervention of a whole regiment of prigs. Mayors of provincial towns have to be conciliated, the hours arranged for Lord Brougham's arrival and departure, lodging to be found for male and female orators, and communications of the most paramount importance to be maintained with hotel-keepers, philanthropists, and the Press. What would become in like manner, of the Paris Exhibition next year, but for similar assistance? The thought is an instructive one, and ought to reassure all parents who are anxious lest their sons should be paragons in vain. Humdrum virtue may not be admired or popular, but it will always have a vocation, and be well paid for application to it. When any father is tempted to repine at the spectacle of the success of scapegraces, and the social obscurity of paragons, he has only to think of Lord Shaftesbury and the Paris Exhibition. Little virtues make the world comfortable, just as little vices destroy its comfort. Little foxes spoil the grapes, but little prigs help all our grapes to ripen.—Saturday Review.

"CHRISTMAS BELLS."

I heard the bells on Christmas day
Their old, familiar carols play,
The wild and sweet
The words repeat
Of peace on earth, good-will to men!

And thought how, as the day had come
The belfries of all Christendom
Had rolled along
The unbroken song
Of peace on earth, good-will to men!

Then pealed the bells more loud and deep;
"God is not dead; nor doth he sleep!
The Wrong shall fail,
The Right prevail,
With peace on earth, good-will to men!"

—Longfellow.

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY.

THE Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company lately held its annual meeting, and the Directors presented a report which was in effect a history of the Company's proceedings from its foundation in 1841, to the present time. It is a history of progress from small beginnings to vast and complicated enterprises. This great Company, now only a quarter of a century old, representing the largest and most important firm of carriers between England and India, possesses a fleet of steamships equal to the navy of a second or third rate State. It owns no fewer than 53 excellent steamers of large tonnage and commensurate power, besides a squadron of auxiliary tugs and sailing transports. It has regular stations at almost every important seaport in the Eastern hemisphere. It carries upon an average about 16,000 first-class and 3.000 second-class passengers every year over a route of many thousand miles, It pays every year upwards of half-a-million sterling for coals, and keeps about 100 000 tons of this fuel constantly in stock. It feeds as well as carries its passengers, and its expenditure of stores in a single year comprises 15,000,000 lb. weight of provisions, 1,500,000 bottles of wine, beer and spirits, and 180,000 head of cattle and poultry. These figures will appear prodigious, but the fact is that upwards of 10,000 persons are victualled daily on board the Company's vessels. Every now and then, in great national emergencies, the Company performs transport service for the Government. During the Crimean War the Peninsular and Oriental steamers carried 60.000 men and 15,000 horses to their destination, and the same vessels at the time of the Indian mutiny carried regiment after regiment to the East with rapid and timely dispatch.

The enterprise was originally projected on a modest scale, probably without any expectation of its actual development. A capital of £1,000,000 was thought sufficient in 1841 for the purposes in view, and though provision was made for a supplementary stock to the extent of £500,000, it was not until 1847 that this resource was employed. Seven years later, however, authority was sought and obtained for increasing the capital stock by another million, making a total of £2,5000,000, represented by 50,000 shares at £50 each. The Company was also, even in those early days, invested with the privilege of "borrowing powers;" but its limits in this respect were not wide, and they have not been exceeded. Debentures to the amount of £800,000 must be added to the stock, so that the share and loan capital together amount to £3.300,000. Now upon this capital, calculating the shares at par, the Company has paid an average dividend of 9 1-2 per cent. during the whole period of its existence—a return which, if not extravagant, may certainly be deemed satisfactory. The gross expenditure of the Company is somewhere about £2,000,000; its gross revenue about £2,200,000, leaving the odd £200,000, or rather less, divisible as profit.—London Times.

ONE of the novelties of the London season is kangaroo hams, imported from Australia.

THREE hundred rabbits' tongues formed the principal ingredients of a new dish lately served at Compiegne.

LITERARY GLEANINGS AND GOSSIP.

NEW BOOKS FROM ROMAN'S.

"Liffith Lank; or Lunacy, Founded upon Incidents in the Adveuturous Life of Griffith Gaunt, Esq., by C. H. Webb," is the title of a neat brochure of some fifty pages, humorously illustrated by Eytinge, and comprising, as the name sufficiently indicates, a clever burlesque of the most salient points of Mr. Reade's much talked-of novel. No one at all familiar with Mr. Webb's writings, could hesitate for a moment in assigning the authorship of the performance to that gentleman, even had his name been withheld from the title page. Indeed, the three or four lines of dedication are quite sufficient to identify him. They run thus:

To the Hon. Henry J. Raymond:

Who first published this travestie in the New York Times, and who has cut out more, printed less of, and uniformly paid better prices for my contributions than any other editor living, this little volume is respectfully dedicated.

The prefatory "By Way of Explanation" is equally characteristic:

BY WAY OF EXPLANATION.

For the leading idea of this little story, let me frankly confess that I am indebted to Mr. Charles Reade. Liffith Lank, is, in great measure, the legitimate offspring, or rather offshoot, of Griffith Gaunt, which will account for any similarity that there may be between the two ramifications. For the general style and the topographical effects introduced, I am also indebted to Mr. Reade; but, having said thus much, all is said. For the illustrations I am only indebted to Eytinge—not having yet paid that eminent, excellent, and patient artist for his labors. Originally published in the New York Times, I was persuaded to consent to the republication of the travestie in its present form. And I will take this occasion to say, that I am ready and, in fact, eager, to be persuaded to consent to the republication of any thing I have ever written—provided some one else can be found to incur the expense and risk. If my little book amuse the public, I shall be pleased; if it pays, I shall be more than pleased; for > "My soul is not a palace of the past,

> Where priest-worn creeds, like Rome's grey Senate, quake,
> Hearing afar the Vandal's trumpet hoarse.
> The time is ripe and rotten ripe for CHANGE.
> Then let it come!" C. H. W.

"Idalia," a novel, by "Ouida." "Strathmore," and "Chandos," the novels by which this florid but vigorous writer first became known to the public, found hosts of admirers, and notwithstanding their exuberance of style, and wild extravagance of character and incident, it must be admitted that they contained scenes and descriptions of unusual power, and exhibited extraordinary fertility of invention. We suspect the author to be a young man of decided genius, whose taste has not yet matured. He exhibits the same partiality for gorgeous rhetoric that characterized Bulwer's earlier productions, and there is also a strong dash of the Guy Livingstone element in his style of portraiture and characterization. Another evidence of a crude and undisciplined taste is to be found in his constant habit of lugging in quotations from all languages, ancient and modern, and ostentatiously exhibiting his various reading by endless learned allusions, often forced and far fetched. In this respect indeed, "Ouida" is almost as pedantic, though not with so much awkwardness, as Miss Augusta Evans. Scraps of Latin, French, German, and Italian are lavishly scattered through nearly every chapter, half a dozen of which are graced with such titles as "Souffrir en Roi," "Netes Vous Pas du Paradis?" "Die Qualst Nich als Tyran: und ich? ich Lieb Dich Noch!" etc. The love of superlatives that revealed itself in "Strathmore" and "Chandos" characterizes the present volume. As John Travenna was "the keenest intellect in Europe," and Strathmore one of the "best shots," "best billiard players," etc., in England, so in "Idalia" we have the usual complement of Admirable Crichtons. On the sixth page we are introduced to an individual who brings down an eagle "with an aim which marked him as one of the first shots in Europe," after which the theme of his prowess is thus amplified:

"God forgive me. I have taken a life better than my own!"

"The words were involuntary, and unlike enough to one whose superb shot had become noted from the jungles of Northern India to the ice-plains of Norway, from the bear haunts of the Danube to the tropic forest of the Amazon," etc. And again, in the next paragraph but one: "The skill which you would have challenged the first marksman of Europe to have beaten, will look, for a second at least, oddly base and treacherous, and cowardly when the Lord of the Air lies like carrion at your feet." If, after all this, the reader is not duly impressed with the shotsman's skill with a rifle, it certainly is not the author's fault. "Idalia" is strongly marked by all the characteristics, beauties and blemishes of "Ouida" and those who have found pleasure in reading "Strathmore" and "Chandos," will find this new production no less to their taste.

"RACHEL'S SECRET," A NOVEL, by the author of "Master of Marton," New York, Harper & Brothers.

EUREKA MASK BALL.—The Third Annual Bal Masqué of the Eureka Social Club will be given at Platt's Hall, on Thursday evening next. Some fine prizes are offered for the best masks in attendance. An unusually large number of tickets have been disposed of.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS,

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.—At Maguire's Opera House. Griffith Gaunt was played to good houses on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. On Thursday night, Mrs. Sophie Edwin who has not, much to the regret of the public, for many months past made her appearance on the stage, came out of her retirement and played "Pauline" in the Lady of Lyons. Mrs. Edwin received a warm welcome at the hands of the many friends who had assembled to do her honor. The charming manner in which she played "Pauline" delighted everyone, and she received the honor of a call at the close of the third act, and again at the conclusion of the play. John McCullough read and acted "Claude" generally very well; he was better in the last two acts than in the commencement of the play. Mr. Edwards has become an immense favorite with the San Francisco public, and each new assumption of character serves more fully to confirm their good opinion of him. His impersonation of the bluff old "Col Damas" was a capital piece of acting. Mrs Harry Jackson, who accepts with the most charming good nature any part in the play, on the occasion of the last production of The Lady of Lyons, played the part which fell to her by right; on Thursday evening she played "Widow Melnotte," and made much out of that small part. Harry Jackson caused much laughter by his impersonation of "Glavis;" and Mrs. Judah was admirable, as ever, as "Madame Deschapelles." In the Stage Struck Barber, John McCullough gave a very clever imitation of Forrest; and Mrs. Harry Jackson made the audience roar with laughter by her acting in the part of "Jane Chatterly," with imitations of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean. Last night, Miss Alice Kingsbury made her re-appearance in Fanchon to an overflowing house, and received an enthusiastic greeting from the audience. This afternoon, a Fanchon matinée will be given for the last time: and in the evening, Miss Alice Kingsbury will appear in The Child of the Savannah and The Cricket on the Hearth. In the latter piece, Miss Kingsbury displays once more her skill in cricket-play. In the "Cricket" on the heath, and the "Cricket on the Hearth" she is equally at home. On Monday, Boucicault's last great success, The Long Strike, will be produced, and will probably make a great hit. Strikes are not uncommon among our workmen of San Francisco; they must all be interested in this play, which shows how a long strike was managed in England.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The Academy of Music will be opened on Wednesday evening next by a company from Maguire's Opera House, and Miss Amy Stone, an actress of the Maggie Mitchell school of acting, will make her first appearance.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.—At the Metropolitan Theater business has been good during the week. The Sheep's Foot was produced on Monday, in such a slovenly style, that many prophesied that it would fail to draw; however, on the third night, all the weaknessess had been removed, and the Sheep's Foot gave general satisfaction. Miss Emma and Miss Clelia Howson add much to the attractions of the play by their delightful singing.

George Pauncefort, one of the best actors at present among us, intends to give, in the course of a week or two, an entertainment of a novel description, and one which should meet with favor from such a cosmopolitan public as that of San Francisco. Othello is to be produced in the following manner:

Mr. Pauncefort will play "Othello" in English. That he will play it well is beyond a doubt. "Desdemona" will also be in English. Mr. Bonuet, our best French actor, will play "Iago" in French; "Cassio" will be played in German, by the well known actor, Mr. Niemeyer; and "Emilia" will be played in the same language by Mme Hermann; and Senor Lopez will play "Rodrigo" in Spanish. A somewhat similar performance lately given in New York, was very successful, and Mr. Pauncefort should have his house filled.

PLATT'S HALL is at present occupied by a band of musical artistes and sable comedians, entitled the New York Minstrels. There are some fine voices in the troupe, and duets, quartets and choruses are finely sung.

On Tuesday evening Mrs H. L. Weaver gave a literary entertainment at Platt's Hall, it consisted of readings from many of the best poets. Mrs. Weaver gained most applause for her reading of Yankee dialect poems by James Russell Lowell and others. Her voice lacks the strength necessary to give force to stirring passages. A large and fashionable audience was in attendance.

THE NEW IDEA on Commercial street, is shortly to be opened for the production of a new horse drama, entitled Gila.

TOUCSTONE.

MUSICAL FUND SOCIETY.—The annual concert and ball by this Society took place at Platt's Hall on Thursday evening. The orchestra was not so strong as it should have been in the string department, owing to the regular engagement of many of our best violinists at the theatres, preventing their attendance; but the performance, under the leadership of Mr. J. L. Schmitz, was very creditable to the Society, and appeared to be heartily enjoyed by the audience. The orchestral music consisted of Lindpaintner's "Vampyre" overture, the "Larghetto," from Beethoven's Second Symphony, and the "Coronation March" from Il Prophete; besides Schubert's "Serenade," for coronet, violincello and oboe, and an "Air," with variations, for French horns—both with orchestral accompaniment. Misss Emma Læmlein played Beethoven's 'Sonato Pathetique" with force and correctness, although we do not think it the sort of music in which she appears to the best advantage; it requires a greater maturity of style, and deeper experience of life, to give it full expression. Miss Rebecca performed Wallace's brilliant and graceful "Polka de Concerte" with fine effect; and in response to a persistent encore, the sisters played one of the favorite Gottschalk's four-hand pieces. The only vocal selection on the programme was Balfe's "Good Night, Beloved," admirably sung by Mr. Henri Herberte. At the close of the concert, the hall was cleared for dancing, which continued till a late hour.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR WRITERS ABROAD.

To the Editors of the Californian:

THERE is a coolness that is, to say the least, refreshing in the manner with which an English reviewer sets about his work when the subject is an American Author. If their fiat was acknowledged as final, and their judgment conclusive, our authors would certainly publish with fear and trembling.

As their political writers could see nothing but a succession of faults in all acts of our Government during the late war, so their critics see nothing of merit among our writers.

One after another, those whose ablilities are acknowledged at home, send forth the creations of their genius, and are immediately overwhelmed beneath a flood of English ink. Their last effort in this line is the utter annihilation of Professor Longfellow as a poet, by that most English of all their periodicals, the Saturday Review.

Now, we have been taught to regard him as a poet of fine imagination and pure culture, combining the poet and scholar, and have congratulated ourselves that he was worthy of a place among those who long ago had passed > ——"that fearful stake the poet casts,

> "When he comes forth from his sweet solitude
> "Of hopes, and songs, and visionary things,
> "To ask the iron verdict of the world."

But our trans-Atlantic friends, taking pity on our ignorance, have concluded to instruct us as to what is and what is not—for, "this sort of thing can't go on, you know; it is quite absurd, I assure you:" and so assuming the critic's scalpel, they have dextrously dissected some of the poems and discovered (to their own satisfaction, I hope) that "he is commonplace; a trifle above mediocricy; but, on the whole, very commonplace; no poet, but yet a very happy versifier."

Shades of the immortal "Scotch Reviewers," where are ye now! for years ago, if I mistake not, genial "Kit North" and that worthy coteric of sharp yet just critics who wrote for Blackwood, had pronounced Longfellow as in the first rank of living poets.

But as this later dicta must, of course, finish the Professor—for who would dare dispute authority given so selon les regles?—hear how he is dealt with: "The attenuated little volume, which has just appeared, contains a dozen or so pieces that may please the rather weak-headed young ladies who insist that Mr. Longfellow is the most delightful of all possible poets. * * * We could not expect Mr. Longfellow to fall much below the extremely moderate level to which he usually attains." And, again, in speaking of "Giotto's Tower:" "The idea is very pretty, the language is graceful as usual; but let us think what the idea comes to, and we find it is of the most ordinary stamp: there is no close and rich interweaving; simplicity is carried too far, because there is beneath the simplicity of form no hidden depth of meaning."

Poor Longfellow! how he is to be pitied. Observe the delicate style of the above extracts; the patronizing and self-satisfied air with which he disposes of Longfellow's claim as a poet, could scarcely be equalled by the Reviewer of the Times or Chronicle, and, perhaps, even they might take a lesson from the "happy dispatch" there given to the victim.

But, although he whom we were wont to class among those whose names were durable as is our language, has been thus rudely cast down from the pinnacle to which we had raised him, it is a pleasure to know that there is one among us who is appreciated by these all-observing critics! At last have they found him, and his name is "Artemus Ward;" and he is chosen as the embodiment of American humor. After having written and talked himself completely out with our public at home, he appears to have been installed among the Londoners as a first-class wit and humorist; his levees are reported thronged, and when he "speaks his piece," the literati as well as the general public are completely carried away by his grotesque humor. Lengthy criticisms of his style and manner are found in all the great Weeklies and Reviews, and all, or nearly all, speak in terms of unqualified praise.

Looking at their choice as a humorist, we may, perhaps, congratulate ourselves that they have not found a poet in Professor Longfellow, for they who pronounce him commonplace, rank "Artemus Ward" among the first of humorists.

WAHSTOEG.

[For the Californian.]

MY VALENTINES.

BY TREM.

ST. Valentine's Day is near at hand again, and recalls recollections of the valentines which I have dispatched in former years.

I remember well my first valentine. I was deeply in love with Jessie Cameron, the youngest daughter of our clergyman; I was eight years old, she was seven. My funds were low when that St. Valentine's Day came round, in consequence of heavy losses in playing marbles; and not being possessed of the cash necessary to purchase such a valentiue as I desired to send to my much loved Jessie, I determined to invest my small remaiuing capital in the necessary materials and manufacture one. A sheet of paper with embossed edge cost but little; I was the fortunate possessor of a box of paints; old envelope boxes supplied me with flowers aud gold and silver leaves with which to surround my central design. On three consecutive evenings I labored on that valentine, and when it was completed, receiving its finishing touch in the addition of three orange blossoms from my lately married sister's wedding wreath, I considered it perfect. Alas! I had a rival. Jack Derriman had a larger allowance of pocket-money than I; he it was, who had won all my marbles, including my favorite "taw;" he it was, who after assisting me in the manufacture of my valentine by the gift of a gorgeous pen-box, utterly destroyed the effect which I fondly hoped it would produce on the mind of my darling Jessie, by an act of the basest treachery. He loved Jessie, or pretended that he did; at any rate, he wished to cut me out. After helping me in the production of my home-made valeutine, he knowing well for whom it was designed, expended a month's pocket money on the purchase of one of the most gorgeous valentines which had ever been seen, and this he sent to Jessie. More than this: the traitor told Jessie that mine was a "second hand, patchwork affair," and drew invidious comparisons between it—on which I had bestowed so many hours of anxious thought and patient labor—and his, which had been purchased with "vile dross," as I observed to dear Jessie, when she told me what he had said to her. The traitorous Jack won the day. Jessie, dazzled by his valentine which had more gold about it than mine, accepted him as her sweetheart and left me to despair. I recovered from that blow. I have had many similar blows since, and have recovered from them also. I have never failed since the age of eight years of age to observe St. Valentine's Day, by sending at least one of the love-tokens which every lady is glad to receive. I have told you about my first valentine; I must now tell you about my last—that is, it will probably be my last, if things turn out as I expect them. On the morning of Sunday, January 21st, 1866. I, as usual, went to Grace Church; I am happy to state that my thoughts were fixed upon the service until nearly the conclusion of the sermon, when happening to turn my head to the left, I saw a young lady seated but a short distance from me whom I had never before observed, though as I before observed, I am a constant attendant at Grace Church. As I looked at her, she turned her head toward me, her eyes met mine, I felt that my fate was decided. I never saw such eyes before in my life. It is not the slightest use my attempting to describe her as she appeared to me that Sunday. I did not hear another word of the sermon after I met the glance of those eyes. The instant the service was over, I rushed—no, I did not rush, but I walked as fast as I decently could—out of church and waited the coming of my fate. Another glance which she gave me—simply, I suppose, because I had a wild maniac sort of appearance from intense emotion—when she reached the door of the church quite finished what the first one had commenced. I was really in love. I had fancied myself in love fifty times before, but now I knew that I was indeed a victim to that disease. There is no such thing as preventing yourself from falling desperately in love by trying to inoculate yourself with the disease in a mild form. Cow pox given by vaccination, no doubt prevents one from having small-pox in a malignant form; but the fact of having had love in a mild form once, twice, or even thrice, does not prevent anyone from having the disease in a desperate form. I was desperately in love. After much patient enquiry, I discovered the name of the angel—she is an angel—with whom I was in love. I saw her constantly and she saw me; we talked with our eyes; I dare not of course speak to her; I dare not write to her. In vain I enquired of all my acquaintances if they could procure me an introduction to Miss Lottie ——. I could not find anyone to help me. I was in despair. We met so often, and yet we could not speak. I was in despair. On the 10th of February, I was walking moodily down Montgomery street, revolving in my mind many plans already half-formed for begining an introduction to her on whom all my thoughts centered; I stopped suddenly before a stationery store, the window of which was all ablaze with valentines. I did not exclaim: "Fool, fool, fool, that I have been!" but I thought I had been a donkey not to have thought before of the idea which now flashed through my mind. Of course I might send a valentine though I must not write. I entered the store, chose the most costly valentine I could find and dispatched it at once. On St. Valentine's Day I received a valentine which consisted simply of a small sheet of embossed note paper, on which was written in a lady's handwriting, "James Smithson Byleson." I could not make out the meaning of this mysterious valentine for some time. I knew James Smithson Bylesou the Front-street merchant—almost everyone in San Francisco knows him, and he knows everyone—but why should he send me a valentine? Still thinking of the only one whom I had ever seen who was capable of arousing love in my breast to the extent of destroying my appetite for my dinner, the idea struck me that she might have sent this valentine. I went to James Smithson Byleson, I asked him if he knew Miss Lottie ——. He answered, "he rather thought he did, as he had stood up for her when she was christened." Joy! joy! I know I acted like a maniac on that occasion; but Byleson, though he had not stood up for me, had known me for many years, and was aware of my perfect respectability. He introduced me to the parents of my charmer; she never would confess to having sent me that blessed valeutine, but she never denied it. I know she loved me after becoming acquainted with her for a very few weeks. We were soon engaged to be married, and unless some entirely unexpected impediment presents itself, such as a horrible storm of rain, an earthquake or something of that kind, I shall marry Miss Lottie —— on Thursday next, the 14th inst.; and though I do not believe in the worship of saints, being a member of the Protestant Episcopalian Church, shall certainly feel very grateful to, and think most respectfully of, good St. Valentine.

"GRAPE CULTURE."

THE above is the abbreviated title of a volume of some two hundred and sixty pages, by T. Hart Hyatt, editor of the California Rural Home Journal. The book seems to evince some practical as well as theoretical acquaintance with the subject, aud can scarcely fail to prove useful to all persons owning a vineyard, or engaged in the manufacture of native wines. Mr. Hyatt undertakes to tell his readers "why, where, when and how to plant and cultivate a viueyard, manufacture wines, etc.," and he claims that the information he furnishes on these points is "especially adapted to the State of California." The following headings of a few of the chapters, or "parts" as the author prefers to designate them, will sufficiently indicate the range and variety of the contents: "The Best Soils for Vineyards;" "Location, Site, and Exposure for a Vineyard;" "Preparing the Ground;" Laying Out and Planting;" Pruning and After Culture;" Vineyards of Morocco and Spaiu Compared with those of California;" "The Author's First Vineyard in the Laud of the Moor;" "California Wines and Wine Vineyards;" "Diseases and Insects Injurious to the Grape;" "The Vintage, Gathering Packing, Marketing, etc." The book seems to have been somewhat hastily prepared, and newspaper articles on the subject, often of no particular authority or value, have been very freely used. An unusually complete index renders the volume convenient for ready reference on all the topics treated of. It is for sale at Bancroft & Co's.

A Cunning Dutchman.

A few evenings ago, a solid-looking Hollauder played a trick ou a fellow countryman, which was worthy of a smart down-east Yankee. The two—we will call them Hans and Fritz—went into the Faust Cellar, (where George keeps a weighing machine for the gratification of his fat customers) for the purpose of deciding a bet concerning their respective weights. Hans had bet Fritz a dozen of wine that he weighed 180 pounds—(knowing full well at the time, that Fritz had been present when he was last weighed about three days before, and knew that his weight then was but 176 pounds,) Fritz took the bet, feeling quite sure that Hans was not gaining flesh at the rate of four pounds a week. When the two reached the Faust Cellar, Hans was in no hurry to be weighed; but taking a seat, engaged Fritz in conversation. While talking to Fritz, he drank, one after another, at intervals of about seven minutes, ten large glasses of lager beer. When he had accomplished this—to any but a German, impossible feat, he told the unsuspectiug Fritz he was prepared to decide the bet. He was weighed, and turned the scale at 180½ pounds. Fritz paid the bet, but was much puzzled to account for the sudden increase in the weight of his friend. At last, after pondering for some time, he looked mournfully at Hans, placed his hand on his protuberant paunch, and with a deep sigh, exclaimed: "Ach! Poor Hans! I have thought 'twas so. Das ist nicht more fat. Das ist dropsy."

IMPORTANT TO LADIES.—The extensive dry goods house of Meagher, Taaffe & Co., have just taken their annual account of stock, and have determined to reduce their stock on hand in certain articles of dress and dry goods by marking them down to prices that defy competition. The following dress goods have been so reduced: 5,000 yards of good checked silks to $1 50 per yard; 4,000 yards extra checked silks te $1 75 per yard; 5,000 yards super plain colored silks (all colors,) to $3 per yard; also every description of black silks at unprecedented low prices. Cotton goods, cloths, sheetings, etc., and linen sheetings and shirtings; pillow linen, table damasks and cloths; towels and napkins; blankets: flannels, quilts, and every description of hotel and house-keeping goods have also been greatly reduced. This reduction is made by Meagher, Taaffe & Co., with a view to reduce their immense stock of these dry goods now on hand, by forcing their immediate sale. Bargains are always sure to find purchasers, and we assure the public that the above-named goods are offered at unequalled low rates. Meagher, Taaffe & Co. import their goods direct from New York and Europe, in connection with their wholesale house of this city, and buying at the lowest figures are enabled to undersell all other dry goods houses without loss to themselves.

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.

SAN FRANCISCO, February 1, 1867.

To the President and Directors of the Builders' Insurance Co.:

GENTLEMEN:—The Dashaway Association, of this city, as we believe, one of the most noble public institutions of San Francisco, and that has under its protection that best of Charities, the Home for the care of the Inebriate, is now in arrears. Our matured indebtedness on our Hall, on Post street, must by some means be paid off, and the Society is, through its Committee, now making an appeal to the public of San Francisco to assist us in this hour of need. And when we recall to the public mind the thousands of our best citizens that have, through this Organization, been restored from the lowest state of inebriation, we feel that the public will now cheerfully respond to our necessities. Will your noble, philanthropic body, that has already done so much for Charity, do a little for us, and by so doing assist us to continue our labor of Love, in redeeming the lost of earth.

Respectfully, yours,

J. B. BADGER,

Chairman of Subscription Committee.

ANSWER.

TO J. B. BADGER, ESQ.—SIR:—Your feeling appeal, of this date, on behalf of the Dashaway Temperance Association, has moved the Directors of the Builders' Insurance Company, and we respond ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS, enclosed.

Yours is a thankless, up-hill work, and yet is one of the most useful which any public or private Association can undertake. To save men, women, and children from the horrors of intoxication, is surely a work approved by Heaven. Temporary drunkenness is temporary insanity. Habitual drunkenness is habitual insanity. A few years of this habit leads to permanent madness. From persons habitually intoxicated nothing is derived for society. Everything they undertake or touch fails aud perishes. The employment they obtain is short lived. The good which they attempt, and MIGHT achieve around them, dies an abortion. Their example is more distructive than the cholera in its worst form. Most of the fires in cities, and the burnings and scaldings at sea, most of the homicides and robberies, the assaults aud divorces, spring from intoxication. It is destructive alike of health, honor, religion, honesty, and industry.

It is hardly possible to calculate the value of Temperance in the community; and on the other hand, it is equally hard to calculate the loss by drunkenness. One habitual drunkard is a loss to the community of ten dollars a day, because he looses his time and is a defaulter to the commonwealth, not being able to give any employment or profitable custom to his neighbors. Ten dollars a day of a leakage will compound to twenty thousand dollars in ten years. Ten thousand habitual drunkards (about the number we have in California) destroy every ten years two hundred millions worth of the National Capital, which is the common property of us all. To have saved a thousand persons and more, as you have done, from habitual intemperance, has conferred vast benefits on the commuuity, and makes us all your debtors. Therefore do we recognize you as an Institution every way worthy of support.

It will gratify the good man, GOVERNOR DOWNEY, who laid the foundation stone of your substantial Hall, to learn how well you have worked, and that you have nearly redeemed from debt the Temple erected to Temperance, as you have redeemed many hundreds from the horrors of intoxication.

Respectfully, the Managers of the Builders' Insurance Company, per THOS. MOONEY, President. California street, near Sansome, February 2, 1867.

REPLY.

SAN FRANCISCO, February 2, 1867.

THOMAS MOONEY, ESQ., AND GENTLEMEN DIRECTORS OF THE BUILDERS' INSURANCE COMPANY:—Your noble response to our appeal for aid is received, and to show the promptuess with which you acted in our behalf, your generous check for One Hundred Dollars bears even date with my note to you.

Gentlemen, we thank you for the money most heartily; but your noble words of encouragement have cheered our hearts as much, and more than the gold; and if all the moneyed Institutions of our city were actuated by the same noble sentiments that have dictated your letter, then, indeed, would our labors be easy and our burden light.

In the name of the Dashaway Association, and in the name of many a now happy fireside, rescued, through its benign influence, from degradation, misery, aud want, I return you our sincere aud grateful thanks.

It adds still another to the long list of noble deeds that are already recorded in letters of living light to your credit on the page of benevolent acts.

J. B. BADGER.

Chairman Subscription Committee, Dashaway Association.

MALARIA.—The decayed and decaying vegetation of newly settled lands, when damp, exhale a miasmatic poison which, absorbed through the lungs into the blood, causes the intermittent fevers and kindred diseases, which prevail in our Western States and Territories. But this great scourge of our rich alluvial bottoms in the West, is now robbed of its sting. Dr. Ayer has discovered an antidote which effectually neutralizes its venom; has combined it in a remedy—"AYER'S AGUE CURE"—which rarely, or, as some of our neighbors say, never fails. It is reliable both for prevention and cure. With it, men may live with complete immunity from the malignant effluvia which has hitherto rendered many localities almost unhabitable. Those suffering from CHILLS AND FEVER may find in it immediate relief, and those exposed will find sure protection from attack, by taking it in small quantities as a preventive.

COLDS, COUGHS, and all affections of the throat and chest cured in the most pleasant and speedy manner, by Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street.

THE sick are guaranteed cures in almost all cases, by Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. No medicines whatever, nor mesmeric jugglery.

THE motto of J. J. Knowlton's new gratuitous paper is: "Base is the slave who pays."

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER I.—LOOKING OUT ON THE TAUNUS.

IT was a beautiful day in the early autumn, and though "all the world" had not yet mustered at Hombourg von der Hohe groups of fluttering dresses, whose bearers were further adorned with perfect boots and exquisite hats, and could, for the most part, boast of the attractions of youth and prettiness, were abroad in the alleys, under the shade of the slim, graceful trees. The sounds of distant music from the bands dispersed about for the delectation of the visitors, and those of glad, careless voices in such leisure talk as suited the scene and the season, mingled themselves and came floating in upon the warm air at the open windows to regale the ears of such as had not gone out to share in the busy idleness of the majority of the sojourners at the Baths

At one of these open windows, which looked out upon a pretty prim little garden, the strollers might have observed three gentlemen in earnest and protracted conversation. One was seated in a large arm-chair, which occupied one of the sides of the bay-window; a second leaned against the open frame of the central compartment; and the third, a shorter and slighter man than either of his companions, stood upright between them, and as he spoke, turned his head and his keen eyes from one to the other with an animated and characteristic gesture. The gentleman seated in the arm-chair, a tall, frostily gray, scrupulously dressed, and polite elderly man, who constantly twirled a heavy gold eye glass in very white and bony hands, was Mr. Carruthers of Poynings.

The smaller, slighter man, who formed the centre figure of the group, was of somewhat remarkable aspect. Very wiry and alert of frame, well knit and upright, his figure had a certain youthfulness about it which was contradicted by his face—that of a man who had passed the confines of middle age. His face was handsome, thoughtful, and bore the impress of heavy trouble, and in the dark eyes, and generally in the straight and refined features, it presented a strong resemblance to Mrs. Carruthers.

Not unnaturally, for the gentleman in question was Mark Felton, Mrs. Carruthers's brother.

The third component of the group, a young man, who leaned against the frame of the open window and looked out, his face turned away from the speaker and the "other listener," his tall and loosely-built figure distinctly visible from the road, was George Dallas.

"Under these circumstances, and seeing that waiting was inevitable, and that I could do nothing in the matter actively," Mark Felton was saying, "I determined to come on here at once. All I heard at Poynings——"

"I hope you were properly entertained there?" said Mr. Carruthers, in the old of "of Poynings" manner.

"Perfectly, my dear sir—perfectly. As I was saying, all I heard at Poynings, and what George told me"—he cast a quick glance at his nephew here, in which there was already liking—"made me more than ever anxious to see Laura. Besides, I was exceedingly anxious to make your acquaintance without any further delay."

"A wish which I reciprocated, I assure you, Mr. Felton."

"In bringing George with me, I acted on my own judgment and on a conviction that you would regard the matter as I do. I believed you would consider him entitled to see his mother, and would be glad to learn from me that his prospects in life are as much improved as his inclination and determination to do them honor are genuine and strong."

"You are quite right, Mr. Felton," said Mr. Carruthers, who had begun to feel himself somewhat beaten by fate, and was, secretly, immensely relieved that his step son had made his appearance without having been sent for, and in such unexceptionable company. "It is necessary now, that Mr. Dallas—that—that George" (he got out the word with an immense effort, and it meant everything) "should be near his mother. I am glad to know he has found a friend in you."

"And I am still more glad to believe," said Mr. Felton, not precisely interrupting him, but taking advantage of a slight pause to speak—"I am glad to know that he found me just when he was learning to do without any one."

It is possible that a good deal of Mr. Carruther's trouble—and he had suffered severely since he had left England—had had its origin in a conviction, which had stolen upon him at first, that he had not been faultless in his conduct toward his wife and his treatment of her son. He had found out very soon after they had left Poynings—for in the deadening of her faculties, forgetfulness of her fear of him had come—how mistaken he had been in supposing that he had suppressed her love for George, her constant remembrance of him, or had supplied by all he had given her for the boon he had withheld. In her placid way, when she would sit for hours talking to herself, his wife had administered some very telling lessons to Mr. Carruthers. It was with an uneasy surprise that he came to feel how very dear she was to him, how indispensable to his life, how strangely the things which had held the first place in his estimation, behind which he had ranked her, and she had been content humbly to follow, fell away into complete insignificance. He actually forgot Poynings at times, and was not worried by fears that the lawn was not properly mown and smoothly rolled, or by visions of fallen leaves lying about in the sacred places.

His moral perceptions had been suddenly awakened and enlarged, from the recognition of his true share of blame in the calamity which had befallen them, to an exaggeration of of that share, which had rendered him almost oblivious of the provocation he had received. Had George Dallas suddenly appeared before his stepfather at Poynings, he might not have been well received; the influence of old habits and associations, in the sense of the promulgation of the old edict of banishment, might have successfully overpowered the new influences striving with pride and obstinacy in the by no means bad heart of Mr. Carruthers. But the occasion had been most auspicious. Here, in a foreign place, where Mr. Carruthers was positively oppressed with a sense of strangeness, and where no one was present to know anything about the concession he was making, he had but trifling difficulties to overcome, and the meeting between the three gentlemen had been kindly, unreserved and cordial.

The report of his wife's condition, which Mr. Carruthers had made to her son and brother, was not very reassuring. Had Mr. Carruthers been in a less charitable frame of mind he might have taken the silence and sadness with which George received his assurances on this point for sullenness; but he did not, he was actually learning to make allowance for the temperaments and the feelings of other people.

Mr. Felton and his nephew had arrived at Hombourg on the preceding evening, and Mr. Felton had communicated by letter with Mr. Carruthers, who had named an early hour on the following day for receiving his unknown brother-in law and his little-known step-son. Their interview had lasted some time, when Mr. Carruthers expressed his belief that good might result to his mother from seeing George.

The young man turned his face from the speaker, and made no answer.

"It will be necessary, of course, to have the physician's advice and permission in the first instance," said Mr. Felton, "before either George or I can see her. I suppose she is in good hands here?"

"In the best possible," replied Mr. Carruthers. "Dr. Merle is famous in the treatment of these strange mental maladies; indeed, it was in order to consult him that I changed my plan, and came here instead of going to the south of France as I had intended."

"So Miss Carruthers told me," said Mr. Felton; which simple observation caused George Dallas to start perceptibly, and to turn abnormally red in the face.

"Indeed," said Mr. Carruthers. "I did not know you had seen my niece."

"No?' said Mr. Felton. "I suppose she left it to me to tell you of her prompt politeness to an intruder. When I had seen your housekeeper, and learned all she could tell me, especially that my sister had not received my letters, and knew nothing of my return to England, I quickly made up my mind to join you abroad. Miss Carruthers being in correspondence with you, and therefore able to give me all information I wanted, was clearly the person I ought to see, so I started for the Sycamores, saw her—and a very beautiful and charming girl she is—heard from her all she had to tell me, and then went up to town to make acquaintance with my nephew."

Mr. Carruthers felt and looked rather conscious and uneasy while Mr. Felton was making the explanation. Clare had a considerable involuntary share in the self-reproach and regret he was experiencing. His wife had been, to a certain extent, sacrificed to her, and the remembrance disconcerted him. As for George, where was all his resentment against his stepfather now? Where was all his exultation that he and destiny united had outwitted the proud and pompous old tyrant, as he had called him in his thoughts, and brought about a meeting, which his inner consciousness told him had had no trifling result for either, between him and the jealously guarded heiress? It argued well for George's future that he felt deeply sorry at the moment the girl's name was mentioned. It was too late now, as George felt bitterly for such regret.

Clare would probably know him in his true character, soon, for he saw at once that Mr. Carruthers, having taken the generous resolution, had taken it thoroughly; and she would despise him for the deceit he had practised towards her, forgetting, in his hot-headed resentment against her uncle and infatuation with herself, that such knowledge must come, and such contempt come with it. Heavily the punishment of the past was falling upon George Dallas, even in this hour of reconciliation, or rehabilitation, of absolute good fortune. His uncle had been impressed in his favor beyond his expectations; he had learned not to expect much from young men and only sons; and George had been perfectly candid with him, so that the elder man had gained an insight into his character, full of encouragement and hope. Mr. Felton had told him that he should make his future safe, so far as pecuniary independence could secure it; and though George had suffered severely from want of money, and knew well from how much evil he might have been preserved by its possession, he did not over-estimate the extent of that security; so that the tide of fortune had indeed turned for the prodigal son. But the husks were still between his teeth, and bitter in his mouth. There were two women in the world infinitely dear to him, and he had injured them both; the one, probably, mortally; the other, basely, as he now knew and felt,—how severely time alone could tell. The fortune with which his uncle would endow him could not purchase the reversal of these facts; the respectability with which he could cover the past could not efface that stain.

"As a man soweth, so shall he reap;" and harvest-time was heavy for George.

Thus thinking, George's attention had wandered from the conversation between the others, and was only recalled by Mr. Felton's addressing him directly.

"Your mother was always in possession of your address, George, was she not?"

"Certainly," replied George, "until lately—until her illness. I left London for Amsterdam just before it commenced, and did not hear from, or write to her, beyond a few lines, until I got your letter, sir," turning to Mr. Carruthers.

"That decides it, you see," continued Mr. Felton, in pursuance of the remarks which George had not heard. "My sister evidently never received any letter or message from Arthur, or, as you suggest, she would have put George in communication with him. I can only conclude that he left England again to return to some of his Continental haunts. They were not too reputable," said Mr. Felton, bitterly; "and has not yet returned. I must only wait, and for every reason I had better wait here."

"Certainly," said Mr. Carruthers. "I am very sorry you should have anything to distress you, in addition to my wife's illness, in coming to England, especially in connection with your son."

A footman, one of the "suite" who had attended Mr. and Mrs. Carruthers of Poynings on their departure from that deserted locality, now entered, and announced that Dr. Merle had arrived. As it had been previously arranged that Mr. Carruthers should consult that high authority in their absence, the uncle and nephew took their hats, and went out into the prim little garden, whence they reached the shady road. There they paced up and down, passing and passed by the groups of loungers, some of whom were attracted by the pre,occupied and serious air with which the two gentlemen conversed.

"If I did not know that he had sufficient money to last for a longer time than I have been without news of him, and also that he has a happy knack of making money wherever he may be, in some way or other, I should at once communicate with the police," Mr. Felton was saying.

"Yes," said George, "but the worst of it is, we don't know what police to communicate with, whether English or foreign. If he had not taken his money out of the Liverpool bank, we might suppose him to be in England, but that looks conclusive, doesn't it?"

"It certainly does," said Mr. Felton; "the only clew I have is the fact that he did draw the money, and wrote me the line I told you of—" he opened his pocket-book mechanically as he spoke, glanced at a letter placed within the leaves, replaced the book in his breast-pocket, and went on—"promising further particulars. It is almost incredible that he should be in England, and not have written again. My letters, addressed to the Liverpool bank, have not been sent for. He got one when he drew the money."

"Yes, I know," said George. They had talked the matter over many times, and never drew nearer a conclusion. It was evident to George, on the present occasion, that the character of his uncle's apprehensions was undergoing a change. At first, he had treated his son's silence as only one additional example of the utter callousness and indifference to which the father was only too well accustomed. George, to whom his cousin was an utter stranger, had accepted his uncle's view of the matter, at first, unquestioned, but he had become unsatisfied and uncertain about it of late, and was anxious, without alarming Mr. Felton, to lead him to take active steps for obtaining information of the whereabouts of his son.

"I feel satisfied he left England again, and knows nothing of my movements. He will write out to New York, however, and, if he has only done so now, there will be some delay before he knows I am in Europe."

"Don't you think," asked George, hesitatingly, "he would send to Liverpool for the letters, if he were in any uncertainty, before writing to New York? I confess I don't like his leaving them unclaimed. None of the reasons which may explain his silence reach to an explanation of that. I don't think you ought to let much more time go over. If you had a likeness of him—" He hesitated very much here, and looked aside at his uncle, who turned sharply towards him, and said :

"Well! What! If I had a likeness—"

"You might have had it copied, and the photographs distributed to the police, so that if anything should be wrong"

"Wrong? In what sense, George? Do you begin to fear that anything has happened to him? You never said so at first."

"Because I did not think so, uncle, and I am not seriously uneasy now,—not at all; but I think a reasonable time has elapsed, and we ought now to make active inquiry. When he turns up, and finds out what trouble and anxiety he has given, he will be more considerate in future."

"Ah!" said Mr. Felton with a sigh, "I don't think Arthur is open to any conviction of that kind. What do you think it best to do now?"

"Well, uncle, you see you have been three weeks in Europe, and those three weeks make a considerable addition to the time since you heard from him. If you write by the next mail to New York for a copy of his photograph—You are sure you have not one with you?"

"Quite sure. Since I found I had not one in my desk, I have searched everywhere among my luggage, but I have not one."

"Well, then, if you write by this mail for a copy, and it is sent by return mail, if he has not turned up in the mean time, and things go on well here, I think you had better put the matter into the hands of the police. It is true you do not know whether Arthur is in England now, or abroad; but the last place in which you know him to have been is London, and from that information they must work."

"True," said Mr. Felton; and then continued, in a slow, reluctant tone, "I shrink from it, I confess. A matter which is placed in the hands of the police always implies something disgraceful; and though I don't expect to find that Arthur has disposed of his time and his money very creditably, I don't like to make so sure of it as I feel convinced a close investigation will make me."

Mr. Felton spoke with some agitation, and George thrilled with a mingled feeling of pity and dread, he did not know of what. But he said cheerily :

"Well, sir, let us hope there will be no occasion for making any such investigation. You can't have an answer for nearly three weeks, and a great deal may happen in that time. Arthur may be here long before then, to answer for himself, and laugh at us for our anxiety about such a citizen of the world, old and new."

"I don't like it," George thought, as he walked on in silence by the side of his uncle—"I don't like it. And it is very plain that I am not the only black sheep in the family flock, nor, I suspect, the blackest. I will see that he writes to New York, and I will tell Routh all about this when he comes, and hear what he says. My uncle will not mind my telling him now, I dare say."

"When do you expect your friend, George," asked Mr Felton, striking the chord of George's thought, after the fashion which everyone knows, and nobody can explain.

"To-morrow, or the day after, sir," replied George. "Routh wrote from Paris yesterday."

"I am sorry for Mrs. Routh," said Mr. Felton; "she's too secretive and too cautious, too silent and too cunning, for my fancy; but she is an interesting woman, and a wonderfully good wife, I am sure, though of the stony order."

"That is come to her lately," said George, in an eager tone, "since her health has failed so much. You cannot imagine what a different creature she was only a little while ago She was as bright as the sunshine, and as gay as a lark. She is, indeed, a wonderful wife,—the most devoted I ever knew; and her usefulness in everything, in all a woman's ordinary ways, and in many extraordinary,—in all Routh's business matters, is marvellous. Even her delicate health, though she has lost her good looks very much, and her spirits quite, has not made any alteration in that. I cannot conceive what Routh would do without her."

"M'm! I wonder if he is quite so uncertain," said Mr. Felton, dryly, and George's surprise. "I don't like your friend, and I don't trust him."

"What do you mean?" asked George. "Don't trust him? Do you mean that you don't trust his feelings or his conduct to Harriet?"

"Precisely so, my dear boy. Mrs. Routh is a devoted wife, but I am very much mistaken—and remember, I have been playing looker-on for a fortnight or so, and interested in my part, too, considering what you told me about yourself and these people—if she is not a very unhappy one. I do not pretend to explain my convictions, but I am quite clear about them. She loves Routh,—that's plain enough,—but she is miserable with him."

"Do you really think so? She is dreadfully changed, I I know, but I thought it might be only in consequence of her ill health. Miserable with him! At all events, he is not unkind to her. I know he is very anxious about her health, for he has left London, at much inconvenience and great risk of loss, to bring her here for the waters."

"And for a turn at the gaming-tables for himself, I fancy. Routh has to me the air of a man who has been constrained into temporary respectability, and is heartily tired of it."

"I am sorry you have so bad an opinion of him, sir," said George, who could not resist an uneasy impression that his uncle was right, and that the experiment of renewed intimacy with Routh was not likely to be brilliantly successful, "for I was thinking of consulting him about the best way of finding out Arthur's whereabouts."

"No, no," said Mr. Felton, quickly and emphatically; "say nothing to him about any business of mine; give the man no pretext to fasten an intimacy upon me. We want no cleverness of his kind in our work."

"Very well, sir," said George. He was discontented with his uncle, because he had formed what the young man knew in his heart was a just opinion of Routh, and discontented with himself because he could not combat it. "Of course I will speak of your affairs to no one without your permission. But one thing I must say for Routh, I do think he loves his wife."

"And I think he hates her," said Mr. Felton.

They had turned in their walk, and were close by the little garden gate as he uttered these words. At that moment it opened, and a servant appeared. He told the two gentlemen that Mr. Carruthers wished to see them, and they followed him silently into the house.

* * * * * * *

"I am quite clear that the experiment may be tried with safety and advantage," said Dr. Merle, at the close of a long conversation with Mr. Felton and George Dallas. Dr. Merle was an elderly gentleman, with a bald head, a thin face, and eyes as piercing, as strong, and as resolute as those of an eagle; a sort of man to be "quite clear" about his ideas and decisions in general. "I have felt persuaded all along that the state of Mrs. Carruther's nervous system was produced by a shock, though Mr. Carruthers had no knowledge of the fact, and could supply me with no particulars."

Here was a pretty state of things; Mr. Carruthers of Poynings obliged to listen to a stranger informing him that his own wife had received a shock on his own premises without his knowledge, confirming the opinions of two other presuming individuals, and totally indifferent to the effect upon his feelings. But Mr. Carruthers of Poynings bore it wonderfully well. He actually nodded acquiescence toward the presumptuous doctor, and did not feel in the least angry.

"Yes," repeated Dr. Merle, emphatically, "there has been a shock, no doubt about it. The nerves are still very weak, very much shaken, but the general health so much re-established, that I do not anticipate anything but the best results from the attempt to communicate a pleasant and happy impression to Mrs. Carruthers, though owing to her distressing state just now, that impression must necessarily take the form of a shock also. But"—and Dr. Merle smiled, and looked at each of his hearers in turn—"I think you will agree with me, gentlemen, that there is little, if any, reliable evidence that anyone was ever killed or hurt by an agreeable surprise. Mr. Carruthers has been so good as to convey to me that it would be an agreeable surprise to my patient to see him and her son together, and I am quite clear that the sooner the experiment is tried, and that Mrs. Carruthers knows there is also another pleasure in store for her"—with a bow to Mr. Felton—"the better."

George stood up, and followed his stepfather mechanically. His conviction, from the first moment he had heard of his mother's state, had been strong that she would be roused to recollection by the sight of him, and restored to a condition which would permit him to dissipate the delusion which had so terribly affected her. He only knew the secret—he only could undo the ill. Should this fail, he would reveal all to Mr. Felton and to his stepfather, whose altered conduct to him had removed the danger of any ill results to his mother from such a revelation.

Mr. Carruthers preceded George across a wide corridor to a large and airy room, where the windows were wide open—where white curtains fluttered in the air, scented by the breath of flowers. Just inside the door he motioned to George to remain there, and then approached a large chair, whose high back hid its occupant from George's sight. He stooped over the chair, and said, in a softer voice than the Poynings household had been accustomed to hear: "Laura, I have brought some one to see you this morning."

George could not see from where he stood, but he concluded there was a sign of assent, for Mr. Carruthers beckoned him rapidly forward, and the next instant he was by his side, and had seen his mother's face. Another, and his mother had started up, and with a piercing cry of "George! my son! my son!" had fallen senseless into his arms.

[To be Continued.]

The Chinese who were lately on a visit to England and France, are publishing their views of the two countries. The account is given in the Pekin Gazette, and will be shortly translated into English.

Genuine Japanese girls will serve coffee at the Paris Exhibition, in a genuine Japanese café.

CHIGNONS.

MARSEILLES is the great entrepot for the trade in human hair, more than 40,000lb. weight of this commodity being imported there annually, chiefly from Italy, and more particularly from Sicily, Naples, and the States of the Church, while a moderate quantity comes from Spain and certain departments of France. The French provinces which yield the largest supply are Brittany and Auvergne, and buyers go round on market-days, when the young demoiselle who wishes to dispose of her locks mounts a wine cask, and, unloosening her head-dress, showers down her hair. An active bidding follows. As the weight of hair in an ordinary chignon does not exceed three ounces and a half, the annual quantity imported into Marseilles alone would be sufficient for upward of a hundred and eighty thousand head-dresses. A large quantity of the hair arriving at this port is there made up and re-exported to Algeria and Spain. The hairdressers of Marseilles, all of whom are more or less engaged in the hair and chignon trade, are something like 400 in number: of these, four large houses manufacture among them 55,000 chignons annually for home consumption alone, 30,000 of which are sent into the interior, while the 25,000 are disposed of in Marseilles and the suburbs. One Parisian house in the Passage des Petits Peres retails no less than 15,000 chignons annually, at prices averaging from 12f. to 70f. each, although chignons can be purchased as high as 250f. Chignons of red or flaxen hair, which comes chiefly from Scotland, are the most expensive. When the hair arrives at the manufacturer's, which it does in large sacks holding something like 200lbs. each, it is thoroughly washed in hot water until every particle of grease is removed from it; it then has a final bath of potash, and when perfectly dry is passed through common flour. The number of chignons exported from France to England during the past year was 51,924, in addition to which there was exported a sufficient quantity of hair for 7000 chignons to be made up in England. The total value of the exports of hair and chignons from France during 1865 amounted to 1,206,605f., or upward of $230,000. England took the largest quantity, and the United States figures next on the list.

U. S. NATIONAL AND STATE DEBTS.

AT first sight nothing is more striking than the condition of the American finances. We are astonished at the spectacle of a great self-governed nation undergoing apparently without murmur or remonstrance, a load of taxation which is without a parallel in history. Not only is the actual amount of revenue raised for national purposes in the United States greater than has ever been raised elsewhere; it is furnished by a system of imposts of the most galling and extravagant nature. The intricacy and minuteness of our own financial system in our worst days are simple compared with those of the Union. The exercise of every trade is fettered by its peculiar burden; every act of sale is made the occasion of levying a tribute to the treasury. The total revenue thus acquired is far in excess of the current wants of the nation, and a surplus accrues of such a magnitude as to promise to pay off its stupendous debt before the generation passes away which saw it created. Candor must compel us to acknowledge that this result surprises us not only in itself, but because it runs counter to what we anticipated considering the quarter in which it is discovered. No one among us believed that the American nation would commence the redemption of its debt as soon as the war was over, and we had reason for our disbelief. The conduct of the greater number of individual States in past times cast—nay, the conduct of every State in the Union, with the single exception of Massachusetts, at this moment casts—a slur of suspicion upon the honesty of the collective nation. Where each member of the federation departs from its bargain, and refuses to pay debts at all, or pays debts borrowed in gold with paper promises worth from a half to two-thirds their nominal value, what security was there for honesty of the federation itself? Our doubts were justifiable—but the federation has hitherto put to shame our suspicion and, indeed, is showing an example which might stir up the nations of the Old World to emulate its conduct.—Times.

The Cholera in Europe.—The total deaths in London from the recent epidemic have been 5548, exclusive of 2692 deaths from diarrhœa, due in part to the cholera element. In the year 1849, when the population of London was about two millions and a quarter, cholera slew 14,137 people of all ages; in 1854 not less than 10,738 out of two millions and a half; and in the present year, when the population exceeds three millions, the deaths have been 5548, of which 3909 occurred in the East London district, and 1639 in the rest of the metropolis. Holland and Belgium have published down to a recent date, for which the Registrar-General is indebted to M. de Baumhauer and M. Heuechling, and the facts prove that the epidemic is as fatal as it ever was under unfavorable sanitary conditions. Thus in 22 cities and towns of Belgium and Holland, containing less than half the population of London, or 1,460,808 people, the deaths from cholera alone in the present year were 20,643.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS, J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1867.

THE SUPREME COURT DECISION.

AS we predicted at the time when the telegraph brought the first intelligence of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Indiana Milligan case, it turns out that there is nothing in that decision to justify the excitement and alarm which its announcement created. All that was actually decided by the Court, was—first, that upon the facts presented, a writ of habeas corpus ought to be issued in behalf of Milligan; second, that on said facts he ought to be discharged from custody; and third, that upon the allegations and showing appearing in the petition and exhibits, the military commission mentioned therein had no jurisdiction to try and sentence Milligan in the manner stated. Applying the legal principles laid down by the Court to the facts of the particular case, it was held that under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1863, entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases," the trial of Milligan as a treasonable conspirator, by a military commission, and consequently his conviction and sentence, was illegal and void, inasmuch as the constitutional civil tribunals were at the time of the trial in regular and unobstructed operation in Indiana, their powers and functions not being suspended or interfered with by the war which was raging in neighboring States. In this decision the Court was unanimous, for it is to be considered a "decision" only so far as the doctrines laid down apply to the actual questions involved. But Mr. Justice Davis, not content with passing upon the case before the court, availed himself of the occasion to deliver himself of certain general views which, though having some connection with the questions discussed during the argument, were not necessary to the decision of the particular case, and therefore were simply his own private opinion. The question was, whether the trial of Milligan was legal, under the Act of Congress already referred to, and the Court were unanimously in the opinion that it was not, on the ground that the act did not apply to States where the regular civil tribunals were in peaceful operation; but only to those where they were rendered powerless by reason of the existence of a condition of actual warfare. It being thus decided that the military trial in question was without authority in the Act of Congress, the case before the court was disposed of, and the Judges had discharged their whole official duty. Hence, when Justice Davis proceeded to declare that Congress could not have authorized such a trial, and that if the act had authorized it, such act would have been unconstitutional and void, the uncalled-for dictum was not the decision of the court, but the private opinion of the Justice. Still, the other eight Justices seem to have thought it well, since their associate had raised this abstract question, to express their own views regarding it, and four of them assented to the opinion announced by Justice Davis, while the remaining four, constituting a minority, held that Congress, under the authority to raise and support armies has the power in time of war to "determine in what States or districts such great and imminent danger exists as justifies the authorization of military tribunals for the trial of crimes and offences against the discipline or security of the army, or against the public safety." Unpleasant, and even startling as it is to find that a majority of the individuals composing the national judiciary hold opinions which would deprive the legislature of the power necessary to put down rebellion, it requires only a little reflection to lead to the conclusion that such views are purely abstract theoretical, and can have no practical effect whatever. The decisions of the war will outweigh the decisions of any court, however authoritative and august, much more will they outweigh the opinions of individual judges. Justice Davis and four of his associates contend that the military arrests and trials of civilians in the loyal States were unconstitutional in all cases, and that no exigency or necessity whatever can justify proceedings not warranted by the Constitution. One would think that even the most hair-brained abstractionists would by this time have realized that it is altogether idle to pursue this line of argument. Public opinion, and the ultima ratio of an appeal to arms, have settled that the nation had a right to do anything and everything necessary to save itself from destruction, and any attempt on the part of judges or courts to reverse that decision, will be found no less harmless than it is amazing.

HOW TO SAVE MONEY.—Send in your "statements" to Assessor Wheaton before the first of March. Read his advertisement on sixteenth page.

THE NEXT GOVERNOR.

The interior papers generally seem to be disposed to take up the battle-axe for Mr. Bidwell, as the next Governor of California. The Chico Courant sets the example, which has been promptly followed by quite a number of provincial journals. The Sacramento Union, and the San Francisco Bulletin have unmistakably indicated a leaning in the same direction. Mr. Bidwell is doubtless a man well qualified for the position. But has not the "interior" had at least a fair proportion of "Governors of California?" Is it not about time that San Francisco, the Commercial Capital of the State, and which pays one half of the entire amount of taxes of the Commonwealth, should have a hearing? We have nothing to say against Mr. Bidwell; but is it to be conceded as an indisputable fact that San Francisco has no citizen equally well qualified for the position of chief executive of the State? If such is indeed the case, we do not see that any valid objection can be urged against the "Statesman of Chico." But if San Francisco can furnish an equally worthy candidate, we think it no more than simple justice that her claims should receive due consideration.

NEW DAILY.—Yesterday afternoon the first number of The Daily Dispatch, a new evening paper, made its appearance. The Dispatch is somewhat smaller than the Morning Call, and a trifle larger than the Oakland News. In its salutatory, entitled "A Few Words with the Public," it says that before entering upon the hazardous enterprise of starting a new daily, its projectors have "carefully surveyed the field, sounded the public mind, considered the obstacles to be surmounted, and estimated the expense which must be incurred before the undertaking could be made remunerative." The result of this "survey" and "estimate" has, it seems, convinced the proprietors of the Dispatch that there is a field in this city for "a cheap evening paper." Time will show whether the views and estimates which have encouraged the proprietors of the Dispatch to undertake the perilous enterprise of starting a new daily paper in San Francisco, were sound and accurate, or otherwise.

SERIOUS CHARGE.—For more than a year past it has been a matter of general suspicion and popular belief that the police of San Francisco has refrained from interfering with the fashionable and aristocratic gambling establishments of this city. In yesterday's Call Judge Cowles is reported to have assumed the responsibility of lending his endorsement to this very grave charge against our police authorities. If the Call's statement is correct, it seems highly probable that a thorough investigation of the charges will become inevitable. It is quite certain, that notwithstanding the stringent laws enacted for the suppression of gaming houses, these establishments still exist and flourish in our midst. If they do so by the connivance of the police, it is desirable that the fact should be established.

[For the Californian.]

LOST DAYS.

I AM not one of those who cry
Come back, lost days! to days long dead;
Deeming fall fountains, fountains dry,
And dry ones full instead.

Regret cannot the past reflame,
Nor moments quenched again relight;
To mourn is adding shame to shame,
And darkness unto night.

The lost I bury with, good-bye!
And, few or many, none deplore;
And if I sigh, for this I sigh,
The dread of losing more.

It is enough the present day
Makes honor mine, or mine disgrace;
That in it I may win my way
To foremost praise and place.

For kindly fortune chance repeats
As rounds the future to the Now;
And ever as Time's hammer beats,
Fame waits the hero's brow.

And if no brow the crown shall wear,
'Tis not that fate has grown unkind;
For though unworn, the crown was there,—
The hero lagged behind!

Still constant as the constant day,
And golden as the golden Sun,
Is chance; and still the laurel bay
Of Glory may be won.

So as the days that are to come
May be improved with actions wise;
And from the many I may some Grasp and immortalize;

I to the last can cry content,
And to oblivion give the Past;
The bow of promise still is bent!
The die is yet uncast!

January, 1867. W. A. KENDALL

[For the Californian.]

GYMNASTICS A LA JAPANOIS, BY PROFESSOR JOHN J. JONES.

WHEN I engaged lodging at the respectable private house of Mrs. Honeydew, widow. No. 3,999 Stockton street, that lady informed me, in her blandest tones and with her most insinuating smile, that she had already let her only other suite of rooms to a very estimable young gentleman by the name of Jones, who held the position of Secretary to the Aggravated Accidental Insurance Company of New South Wales, and whom, she was sure, I would find a most agreeable acquaintance. That very evening I was introduced to Mr. Jones in Mrs. Honeydew's elegant parlor and before a fortnight had elapsed we were as intimate as if we had lived under the same roof for years.

Mr. Jones was a little above the medium height, lean, but muscular and active as a cat. His features were of a Roman cast, his complexion fair, his hair and moustache light, sandy in fact, his carriage lofty and graceful, and his dress, though not particularly fine except on Sundays, always scrupulously neat and becoming. His age was about twenty-seven, and if it were germane to the point of this narrative, I might add that he was, on the whole, rather good looking. He was generous to a degree, frequently asking me to drink with him, and take a cigar when he had a spare one. I speak of poor Jones in the past tense, because, though he may yet be in the land of the living, the place (No. 3,999 Stockton street) that knew him once knows him no more forever. "He has gone from our gaze like a beautiful dream," and his sudden and mysterious departure is mourned by Mrs. Honeydew, myself, and other hopeless creditors.

Every individual with any force of character has his or her idiosyncracy. Jones's developed itself in the direction of gymnastics and acrobatics. He was an active member of the well known "Club of Hercules," and never permitted any other engagement to interfere with his nightly practice at the Hall, except when he visited public gymnastic exhibitions elsewhere—a species of amusement of which he was enthusiastically fond, though he invariably decried the merit of the artistes, and boasted that he could have performed each and every one of their feats with much more skill and grace. He admitted the muscular strength of the gentlemen of the Martinetti-Ravel troupe, but considered them awkward and tame as compared with himself. And, to give the braggart his due, he was a clever gymnast, as I had an opportunity of knowing, having frequently at his solicitation accompanied him to the Hercules Club Hall and witnessed his performances. He was the facile princeps of the Club in all feats requiring quickness and dexterity, a skillful equilibrist, and could turn a double somersault on a tight-rope with rare ease and grace. He never regarded any feat as too difficult for him to attempt, and he once consulted me about the propriety of his giving a public funambulistic exhibition, in which he proposed to surpass the most venturous performances of M'lle Celeste, Blondin, or any other man. In short, though a generous friend, a genial companion and an accomplished man of business, Jones was a gymnasto-maniac.

When the troupe of Japanese gymnasts made their first appearance at the Academy of Music in this city, Jones and I went together to witness the exhibition. During the first part of the entertainment my companion was garrulous as usual, and gave vent to his contempt for the pagan performances in strong language. But when they began to exhibit their marvelous feats of balancing, my scornful critic became suddenly mute, and sat interested and taciturn until the curtain fell upon the final group. We were unusually silent during our walk home together, my companion's mind being evidently occupied by the wonderful things he had seen, and I musing upon the singular change which had been so quickly wrought in him. It had been our custom, before retiring to rest, to spend an hour or two together, smoking and conversing about the events of the day; but on this occasion, as soon as we reached our lodgings, Jones bade me a hasty "good night," hurried to his apartment and locked himself in. I was surprised at this singular conduct; but before many days I was enlightened as to the cause of it.

Jones continued to visit the Academy of Music every evening. Sometimes I accompanied him, but oftener I did not, as the exhibition grew tiresome to me after a few repetitions, and I had other engagements which I did not care to forego. I noticed farther changes in the appearance and demeanor of my friend. His potations, hitherto quite moderate, became more deep and frequent; his gait was unsteady, his dress disordered, and his eyes—when he raised them from the ground, upon which they were now almost constantly fixed in abstraction—gleamed with unwonted brilliancy. I could rarely engage him in conversation, and if I asked his opinion of the Japanese as gymnasts, he evaded the question. About this time I began to hear strange noises in his rooms at nights, as of bodies more or less heavy falling to the floor. Once there was a sound as of the smashing of crockery, followed by a rattling noise as if a number of articles of furniture had been violently overturned. I had retired to bed, but hastily dressed myself and went to see what was the matter. I found Mrs. Honeydew, our hostess, at Jones's door, en dishabille, on the same errand. I rapped twice before Jones vouchsafed a gruff "What d'ye want?" and when I demanded an explanation of the loud and unusual noises which had disturbed the repose of the household at such an unseemly hour, he replied that I "must have been dreaming, and had better go to bed again." As we could get no further satisfaction from him, Mrs. Honeydew and I wended our separate ways to our respective dormitories, and were disturbed no more that night, though we were frequently startled by similar noises on subsequent nights. I endeavored to draw from Jones a solution of the mystery, and with good-humored raillery accused him of having become a "medium," and turned his apartments into a rendezvous for boisterous spirits; but, though he took my jesting in good part, I could get no satisfaction out of him. In my own mind, however, I was convinced that he was privately practising the Japanese feats of balancing, using his parlor and bedroom furniture in lieu of the blocks, trays, tubs, and jars employed by the gymnasts from over the sea,

Not wishing to compromise my friend's reputation for sanity, I did not mention my suspicions to Mrs. Honeydew, although that good lady frequently engaged me in conversation in reference to Jones's strange and preposterous conduct, and more than once intimated that she had determined to give him notice to quit her house.

"I am sorry, Mr. Clerk," said this estimable woman, "to be obliged to request a friend of yours to leave my house"—

"You forget, my dear madam," I interposed, "that if Mr. Jones is my friend, I first made his acquaintance through your kind offices, under your own roof, and that you recommended him to me as a desirable associate. For his present mysterious behavior I am in no manner responsible, and do not wish to be implicated with him as a disturber of your domestic peace."

"You misunderstand me, Mr. Clerk," said she. "I have satisfied myself that Mr. Jones alone has been guilty of the outrages of which I complain. He is either a Spiritualist or madman. The furniture in his apartment—which cost me a great deal of money, Mr. Clerk—has been broken to pieces; the plastering on the walls and ceiling has been knocked off; and I have to buy a new basin and ewer for his washstand almost every other day. When I venture to speak to him about these things, he tells me to 'charge it in the bill!' Then, he makes such an awful racket at night that no one can sleep in the house, and the neighbors have complained of it, and he looks so wild out of his eyes, and I am a respectable woman and move in the best society, and I can't have such a character in my house; and—and—oh, Mr. Clerk, don't you think if he were to go away, you could get some quiet, gentlemanly friend of yours to take the apartments?"

While Mrs. Honeydew was speaking her excitement increased, and her utterance became more rapid, so that when she ceased she was in tears and out of breath. I scarcely knew how to reply to her. If I had taken her view of the case it would have been better for both of us; but unfortunately I didn't. My usual good nature got the better of me. After a moment's consideration, I said:

"Calm yourself, my dear Mrs. Honeydew, and believe me that Mr. Jones will soon recover from his strange mood. Although I have not lately been in his confidence, I am convinced that an unhappy love affair has temporarily upset his mental balance; but he will soon get over that—I see symptoms of improvement in him already."

"Poor fellow!" sighed the sympathetic lady. I had struck the right chord in her benevolent heart, and I knew that for a time, at least, she would submit uncomplainingly to Jones's vagaries. But I had deliberately framed and uttered a falsehood to screen him, and I was to pay the penalty.

To my great joy, Jones did begin to improve. A portion of his old gayety of manner returned; the midnight noises almost entirely ceased in his rooms; our landlady recovered her serenity, and I felt greatly relieved. In the meantime the company had been replaced at the Academy of Music by Risley's superior troupe of Japanese gymnasts. Jones went nightly to see them, and I accompanied him on two or three occasions. On the evening of their last performance, January 28th, he insisted that I should go with him "to see the Japs." He had secured seats for us, and I went. On our way to the Academy, he would have me stop at every respectable saloon we came to, and take a drink with him. He was in unusually good spirits; I caught the infection, and yielded too readily to his solicitations. He did not appear to be so much interested in the performance as upon former occasions, and at every interval he would go out—I with him, of course—to drink. When the entertainment was over he proposed that we should go to a popular saloon and partake of an oyster supper and a bottle of wine. My evil star was in the ascendant, and I consented. At what hour we reached home I do not know—the quantity of brandy and champagne I had swallowed made me oblivious. It was past noon when I awoke. Jones had already gone out, and with an aching head I walked down to the Aggravated Accidental Insurance Company's office to see in what condition the day had found him after the night's debauch. He was not there—the office was closed, although it was in business hours. I feared that he was sick, or that some accident had befallen him; but on the next corner I encountered him.

"Hello, Clerk!" he exclaimed boisterously; "how do you feel this morning, old boy? Hair pulls, eh? So did mine when I got up, but I'm all right now. Let's get a cocktail, and then go and have some breakfast."

While we waited in the restaurant for breakfast to be served, it occurred to me to ask Jones what he thought of the "Japs?"

"The Japs. be hanged! Between you and me, they are a lot of humbugs. I can beat them myself! Let's take a bottle of wine."

Fearful of a return of Jones's late disorder, I changed the subject. After breakfast—during which we drank a good deal of wine—he proposed that we should play billiards. I suggested that it would be better to wait until after business hours. "Hang business," said he; "let it take care of itself to-day." I submitted passively to his guidance, and we devoted the rest of the day and evening to pastime and revelry. Jones insisted on paying all bills, and he borrowed all the money I had—about fifty dollars. It was midnight when we went home, both of us in a high state of exhilaration. We went together to my rooms.

"Now," said Jones, after I had succeeded in lighting the gas, "let us wind up the evening's entertainment with some wonderful feats of equilibration, by Professor John J. Jones, of the Hercules Club. The Japanese be blowed! They may do well enough in their own country, but they won't pass here. You thought they performed some wonderful feats; but I'll astonish you!"

He kept his word.

Procuring the pillows from my bed, he placed them on the floor—one for his head and the other for his back. Then, removing his outer garments, he lay down, in position, and requested me to hand him a chair.

"Hadn't you better use your own furniture?" I suggested. "It is already damaged, and I'd rather not have mine broken up."

"Pshaw! Clerk, don't make a fool of yourself. I tell you I have practised these things until I can do them better than any Japanese that ever walked. If you are afraid of your furniture being injured, I'll give you a policy in the Aggravated Accidental!"

As my head was not so clear as it might have been, he easily persuaded me to humor his whim; and as he succeeded in balancing a common parlor-chair tolerably well, when he demanded my heavy rosewood spring-bottom rocking-chair for his next experiment, I handed it to him without hesitation. "Now," said he, after he had balanced it in an upright position for a moment or two, "I am going to toss it upside down and catch it on my feet. "Look out!"

"Don't!" I exclaimed, and started forward to seize it, but too late. With a quick motion of his muscular limbs he sent it whirling to the ceiling, which it struck with great force, loosening and bringing down a quantity of plastering. In its descent it brought down and demolished a large mirror in a handsomely ornamented gilt frame, broke a large fragment from the marble mantle-piece, bounded thence to my writing-desk, which it overturned, drenching the carpet with ink and strewing it with pens, paper, scraps of manuscript, etc., and finally landed on the floor, a complete wreck. I stood viewing the scene in speechless consternation; but some demon seemed to possess Jones. Springing to his feet, he shouted—"Accidents will happen! ceiling too low—better luck next time!" and rushing into my bed-room, he returned with my washstand. "This will do better," he cried. "Who'! whoop! hooray! Get out of the way with your Japanese humbugs, and give Professor Jones a chance!" At that moment he stumbled over some broken fragments of the rocking chair, and fell flat to the floor. The washstand, with its basin, pitcher, etc., were added to the general wreck. Jones lay quite still after his fall, and on examination I found that he was insensible, having struck his temple against some sharp fragment, stunning him and causing a frightful gash.

In the meantime, the horrible din had aroused the whole household. I heard suppressed screams and the sound of hurrying feet in the hall below, and soon female voices were shouting "police!" I was dreadfully frightened, and thoroughly sobered. I was in a terrible predicament for a respectable young man, and could see no way out of it. I thought of dragging Jones to his room, locking him in, and then barricading my own door; but before I could put the plan in execution, I heard the policeman's voice at the hall door, and presently his manly step ascending the stairs. I resolved to face the minion of the law, and rely upon my native shrewdness to get me out of my difficulty. So I threw open my door and met the policeman on the threshold. He was followed at a respectful distance by Mrs. Honeydew, Norah the housemaid, and the small fry of Honeydews, mingled alarm and curiosity appearing on every countenance.

I bowed respectfully to the officer. "You see how it is, sir," said I. "This young man, as Mrs. Honeydew knows, has been slightly deranged of late. We thought he had recovered; but to-night his malady has returned in a more violent form than ever. He has destroyed all the furniture in the room, and I fear has seriously injured himself. Hadn't you better examine him, sir?"

The officer assenting, we raised Jones from the floor, and laid him upon a sofa. The blood was slowly oozing from an ugly cut on the side of his head, but he breathed deeply and regularly, whence I inferred that his injury was but slight. After some discussion it was determined to lay him on his own bed for the night, and on the morrow measures were to be taken to test his sanity and remove him to more suitable quarters. So we bound up his wound and bore him to his couch. When the officer had gone and the house become quiet again I also sought my bed, but it was long before sleep visited my eyelids.

It was late in the morning when I awoke. As soon as I had dressed myself, I went to Jones's room. The door was open, although for security it had been locked on the outside. I entered; he was gone, and on looking around, I discovered that his trunks and other personal effects had been removed. I sought Mrs. Honeydew and inquired what had become of Jones. She did not know; she thought he was still asleep in his room. I hastened to the office of the Aggravated Accidental Insurance Company; it was closed. I went to the Police office and made inquiries; no one knew anything about him, and the officer who had been at Mrs. Honeydew's the previous night, would not be in the office until noon. Then I bethought me that the steamer sailed that day for Panama, with the Japanese on board, and that Jones in his delirium might have purposed to go with them. I ran down to the wharf, to find that I was just too late. The steamer was moving from the wharf, and there on the guards stood Jones, dressed in full Japanese costume, with a fan in his girdle. I would not have recognized him but for the triumphant smile which lit up his features when he saw me, and his sandy hair, which he had not had time to dye. Feeling naturally incensed at his conduct, I shouted:

"Jones, you rascal"—

"Good bye, old fel!" he interrupted, with a profound salaam. "You see I'm one of 'em—off to the Paris Exhibition—come back with lots of money and glory. Love to Mrs. Honeydew, and tell her"—the rest of his words were lost in the general confusion of voices, as the passengers interchanged farewells, for the hundredth time with their friends on shore.

I subsequently learned that Jones engrafted himself into the troupe in lieu of one of the Japanese, who was somewhat inefficient, and desired to return to his native land. He had procured an interview with Maguire and Professor Risley some days previous to the sailing of the steamer, for the purpose of testing his skill, and had exhibited so much dexterity—even surpassing the Japanese in their most difficult feats—that they engaged him at once and let the other go. I have no doubt that after he has dyed his hair he will be able to palm himself off upon the public as a genuine "Jap." I have been told that it was the purpose of Maguire and Risley to represent him in New York and Paris as a female Japanese—a deception which would be much favored by his light complexion. The pagan who was left behind, gives it out that he is a historian, and that he is busy writing up a book on California for the edification of the Tycoon's subjects. Of course I know all about that.

I have done forever with Jones. I have removed from my elegant apartments in the respectable house of Mrs. Harriet Honeydew, widow, No. 3,999 Stockton street. The fact is, the lady and I had a little difference. She insinuated that, as the intimate friend of Mr. Jones, I ought to pay for the breakage he had caused—the rent of his rooms, although she was a poor lone widow, she was willing to throw off. I applauded her generosity, but declined to imitate it. I would not pay a stiver on Jones' account, and that was the long and short of it. So we parted.

Mrs. Honeydew has furnished apartments to let to two single gentlemen—references as to sanity required. The Aggravated Accidental Insurance Company has not yet, I believe, advertised for another Secretary, and their office remains closed. There are rumors afloat that the Company's affairs are not in a solvent condition.

Should this meet the eye of John J. Jones, amateur gymnast, he will please consider himself fully discharged of all obligations to me—including a debt of fifty dollars, money lent—on condition that he shall never, under any circumstances, attempt to renew acquaintance with me.

JOHN CLERK.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.—The Feast of St. Valentine, the patron saint of lovers, falls on Thursday next. Already the signs of the coming festival are appearing in the stores and street. D. E. Appleton & Co., 508 Montgomery street, take the lead in the Valentine business, and dispose of many thousands of dollars worth of these amatory epistles every year. Gaily caparisoned horses dash through the streets, bearing mail-bags full of Valentines from Appleton's repositories. Cupid's postman is met with a smile at every door at which he knocks.

AN EDITOR'S "CHRISTMAS STORY."

BASED ON FACT.

I AM an editor; and I must say that, of all professions, that of editorsbip is the most difficult and the most thankless. Still it has its bright spots, its pleasant reminiscences.

Softening of tbe brain, hysteria, mania, monomania, paralysis, and apoplexy, are tbought to await tbe man or woman whose dire destiny has called him or her to this modc of earning bis or her livelihood. Breaking stones on tbe road is tbougbt to be easy in comparison to it. Statistics are said to inform us (and though a friend of mine maintains statistics are fallacious, I am a believer in tbem,) that a great proportion of the unhappy tenants of asylums are literary men, chiefly editors. Still, as I said, the editorial life has its bright spots.

And yet, on the whole, the condition of an editor, as Thackeray found to his cost, is a laborious and tbankless one. To tbose who love excitement, it is also somewhat dull and dreary. By a singular fatality tbe bouses in which publishers live, and wbere consequently tbe magazines or reviews which are their property are edited, are of the most lugubrious and mysterious kind.

The tenement is not a sbop, or a warehonse, or a cellar, or clnb, or private house, bnt it partakes a little of the characteristics of all tbese abodes. The male sex abound tbere; and however lively and debonnaire these identical men are up to tbe moment tbey enter, as soon as they cross these thresholds they are changed into mournful undertakers' mute, fatigued, hopeless-looking specimens of mortality. The higher one ascends these cavernous places, the worse tbey are. Tbere are strange echoes up the stairs; there is a buzz and murmur of voices, and yet there is an unnatural quiet as if dreadful surgical operations were being performed beyond closed doors; that sort of stillness which one feels is liable at any moment to break into violent screams; and altogether there is a strong savour of Hood's "Hannted House" permeating them from top to bottom.

In a back room, on tbe drawing-room floor of one of tbese honses, I have spent abont six bours a day for the last six years. The carpet bas been changed four times, for the marks of my steps pacing up and down, witb manuscripts in band, can, alas! too soon be traced on it. But the cbairs bave not been changed; tbe black horse-hair is worn in parts to wbite; the table-cover is dingy; the dust of twenty years looks down upon me from tbe window curtains; the panes of the windows are made partly of clouded glass, but whether by ingrained dirt, or an artificial process, I have never yet discovered. A dim religious light prevades tbe apartment.

I arrive at nine o'clock. On one table are the letters which tbe first post bas already bronght, on another tbe mannscripts. I sit in an arm-chair, before my desk, at a third. On an average I read and answer daily about three dozen letters; I read every day several manuscrips. What some of these letters, what some of tbse manuscripts are, words nre powerless to describe. There is a belief common, that the editor of a magazine, besides accepting or rejecting articles offered for bis magazine, can distribute patronage and shower pecuniary aid on all who apply to him. He is supposed to be at once and together a Crœsns, a Lord Mayor, and a minister of grace and justice. Some of the letters, though unutterably silly, are touchiug from the trust and confidence in blindness and sympathy which they reveal. Grent sorrow, like great bappiness, often teaches an Arcadian simplicity. But these are the minority. The majority are written by persons whose alpha and omega is their own puerile personality. And the manuscripts! To a Rochefoucauld, how much would their mere outsides betray! Desultory, untidy, careless persons send unstitched manuscripts, without addresses, or with false ones. Dcfiant of spelling, or subversive ol grammar, with neither beginning, middle or end, the melancholy spectacle, the pathetic record of their contents, would make angels weep. There are undoubtedly exceptions. It has occasionally bappened that an author who bas afterwards found a world-wide acceptance, began his first timorous steps in the field of public favor by sending a story to my periodical.

But do the public or the authors ever remember the patient laborer who toils through the reams of badly-written foolscap or cream-laid, to find the few pearls amidst all those shapeless oysters? I have always thought that Mrs. Hemans' poem of the Diver would find an answering chord in the breasts of many editors.

One bitter cold morning, a few days before Christmas, in the year —, I sate as usual at my desk. Among the heap of manuscripts was one, written on the softest cream-laid French white paper, in a childisb lady's hand. on lines which had been carefully erased afterward. It was a little story of no great literary merit, but there was an aroma of youth and of sweetness in every line. There was a promise in it; it was like the light in the sky before the sun has risen on a fine day—an omen, a portent of snnshine and warmth, but no more. I put it down as if I had touched the petal of a rose. There was a tiny scented note beside it—of course full of italics:—

——Street, Dublin, Dec. —, 186—.

"DEAR MR. EDITOR—I send you a little story. I am only sixteen, and papa and mamma do not know anything about it, but please tell me if it be worth anything. I want it to be printed; I want to be paid for it. It is not for myself, though, but I want the money to give my dear brother a nice little birtbday present.—I am, dear Mr. Editor, yours, etc., EMILY ——."

Then came the address and the signature. The writing of the note was less neat and regular than the manuscript. But tbere was the same fragrance of dainty youth about it.

I beld it a long time in my hand. I am an old man; at all events middle nged; perbaps something more; my beard is grey, my hair is grey too. I have no doubt tbat to the jeunesse dorée whom I occasionally meet I wear the look of Dicken's patriarch, but my beart is younger tban my appearance. Little distillations came, or seemed to come, from the paper I beld. Had I been a Foster or a Home I might perhaps have divined the writer; bnt, certes, it was with no common feeling of interest that I sat down and wrote my answer to the note. I returned the manuscript, but wrote gently and tenderly. I gave it as my hope and my opinion that, with a little more care and study, the youthful writer would achieve a success. I even promised to print that identical manuscript if it were a little revised and corrected, and I pointed out how it might be made available. I opened tbe window of my den after I had written my note. Tbe weeds piercing through the flags below had a less dreary look than they bad ever had before; a gleam of sunshine shone on them, and their frosty verdure borrowed sometbing of Picciola brigbtness from it. I posted my letter and the manuscript to the address named, and went home wondering if ever I should hear from the writer again. With that, bowever, all thoughts of tbe manuscript passed away. The antbor was too timid to reply.

* * * * * * *

On Christmas Eve I was asked as nsual to dine with an old friend of mine at St. John's Wood. He was a married man, with a pleasant comely wife, and several small children, male and female. We dined en petit comité

"The cbildren are not coming down to dinner," said my hostess, "for they are going to give ns a surprise afterwards."

I bowed and was delighted, both at the anticipation of plensure to come and of privation for the first time of considerable present annoyance. I need not say I was then a bachelor. When we went up stairs after dinner we fonnd the folding-door which divided the front from the back room closed.

They were opened after a while. The Cbristmas hymn was sung, and a German tree of the most brillinnt splendor was revealed; on its branches were hnng gifts worked and embroidered by the children for tbeir parents, and for the friends of their parents. The three little girls and their governess bad done it all.

While my friend and his wife were embracing and thanking the children, I had time to notice the governess. She was very young, almost a child herself. A mass of bright hair was gathered up in great waves at each side of her head, and fastened in a loose, thick loop behind. The bright curls were so arranged as to reveal the ear. The ear and cheek were, I should rather say tbey are, like those painted by Leighton in his "Painter's Honeymoon." Need I say more of their loveliness? But the pretty blue eyes looked as if they had cried a good deal; and there had been recent tears, for tbe eyclids were somewhat swollen. She was not sad at present, however, for she played on the piano for the children and for me, their old godfather, to dance to, and she joined with us in a game of blind man's buff. When the children retired, she retired also.

"What a charming person," I said.

"She is most excellent," said my friend. "Although she is so young, Miss ——— is the bread provider of her family. Her father and mother have, according to the cant phrase, seen better days; in fact, they are people of good birth, and once had a good fortune. They have a son and daughter. The son is a fine fellow also. Both tbe son and the daughter give the greater part of their earnings to their parents; but the son has not been very fortunate. My little governess, she is only seventeen (my children are so young they do not need a prim, regular governess, for they only study with her three hours a day), does more with her salary, mediocre as it is, than her brother can do with his hard work. He is a clerk in a bank."

"And she helps him also, I suppose?"

"I dare say she does, but I have never inquired, for she is full of reticence and reserve on those points I only know she would sit up all night, and work like a slave all day, to help both her parents and her brother. She is going home to-morrow; but he, I fear, cannot afford the expense of the journey. The parents live now in Socotland."

"Could we not help him?" I said bashfully.

My friend smiled. Both brother and sister spent Christmas at home.

My good fortune threw me a good deal after this with my friend's governess. Must I say that from that Christmas Eve I was never heart-whole?

The following Easter we were engaged, and before the next Christmas Eve which followed we were married. What an aim and a hope my life had now acquired!

We have a little suburban house, and I leave my wife every morning to pursue my editorial labors, and return every evening, forgetting my work and my worries, knowing that the sweetest heart and the fairest face I have ever known, await me in my modest but happy home. I have never heard again from the author of the manuscript which had so much interested me; and, truth to tell, had never thought of her since that Christmas Eve. Two or three years have passed since then, and we have two babies. Such babies! I will not rhapsodise; but if rosy flesh, and round contours, and lovely limbs can be called beauty, my girl and boy would win the prize in any show of babies in the world.

Their mother is always playing with them. She often puts her delicate, slender white hand under my baby's girl's foot, and the baby makes believe to stand on it. What a picture it is! the tiny toes, and the dent in the round little ancle, and the pearly instep, harmonize, yet contrast so gloriously with the taper fingers, and the blue veined white of that flower-like hand. It is like a rosebud laid on a white camellia. She then holds the baby-girl to me, and I kiss it before I go. My two-year-old boy toddles after me and gives me his chubby little fist to hold till I get to the door. And so we live. I could not help, as I sat at my labors a few days ago, recalling the picture of motherly beauty and woman loveliness I had left at home. How I wished all womanhood could be typified thus!

As I walked up and down the room reading a scratchy, scrawly manuscript, and fumbling over it in desperation, for the tiresome person who had sent it had by some ingenious carelessness mulcted it of its last page, my thought flew far and wide, and by some association I cannot attempt to explain, the pretty manuscript from the youthful writer who had sent me no more, was recalled to me.

Unconsciously the manuscript I held faded from my mind, and the other was present with me. I wondered what had become of her—had she written any more?—where and how was she?

Every moment I had become more and more possessed with this memory. I was so happy myself that I felt for all who seemed to have care and struggle in their lives. I looked out the address to which I had written before, and wrote to the unknown a few lines. I said that time had passed (five years, almost) that the youthful inexperience which had prevented the paper she had sent me from being accepted must now be corrected, and that I should be glad and willing to see anything else she had written, if she had written anything since then.

Within a few days I had an answer. The writing was in a feigned hand, quite unlike the round hesitating girlish hand I had remembered. The words were, however, as sweet and innocent as the first had been.

"It is so good of you," ran the note, "to remember me, but I do not write any more. I am so happy. I have such a dear, kind, good, noble husband [Oh, these womanly exaggerations, I thought, as I sat in my editorial chair], and such darling babies. I wrote, for I wanted to help my dear ones, but they have been better helped by others than I could ever have hoped to help them. If you seek to know me, you shall do so. If, when you go home, you see a woman with a rose in her hand, hold out yours, you will know me."

I smiled at the romantic fervor of this reply, and a desire arose that my wife and the writer of that letter should know each other, and then I went on with my stupefying avocations.

As I went home, I confess I looked about for a woman with a rose in her hand, but as might naturally be supposed, neither in cabs nor omnibuses did such an apparition manifest itself.

As I entered my own door I gave an impatient shrug at the idea of having been the subject of a foolish jest. But whom did I see standing just within the threshold of my home? my darling, with her fair, child-like face, and bright hair; and joy and youth crowning her with a triple crown, and in her hand was a rose!

"Dear husband," she said as I kissed her, "I think I loved you from the moment I had your kind, indulgent, and thoughtful note. I had written that absurd little story, for I sadly wanted a little money to pay for Gerald's return home at Christmas, to be with papa and mamma, and I had a foolish notion that I could write."

"And you were disappointed, my pet; what a savage I must have seemed."

"No; I felt how foolish I had been, and I cried heartily but I thought you good and kind, all the same. And Gerald got home too, and we had a happy Christmas after all."

I kissed her.

"But are you never going to write a story for my magazine again?"

"I don't know," she said, archly; "meanwhile, you can write ours if you like."

THE Faculty of Paris has just conferred the degree of "Bacheliere-des-Sciences" on a young lady named Mdlle. Maria Brassetti In France there are several feminine Bachelors of Letters, but the present is only the second lady who has succeeded in passing an examination in sciences before the Faculty. The first obtained her diploma about two years ago.

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermitteut fevers.
They purify the breath aud acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a heverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold hy all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels aud Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled hottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold hy all dealers, at $1.00 in large hottles, aud by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Ageuts.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminuate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has beeu counterfeited. Inquire for and take none but LYON'S, hearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervation, listlessness, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combiued. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaiuts they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedentary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spaviu, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Straius, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westhrook, und having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky. and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off and turning gray, and promotes its growth upon prematurely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.

E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no other.

DR. H. A. BENTON,

The ELECTRO-MAGNETIC PHYSICIAN, is now cosily fixed in his new quarters, over Congress Hall, Bush street, adjoining the Russ House, and is prepared to treat patients in all the best modes of curing. The Electro-Medicated and Hot Air Baths will do wonders in many cases, in breaking up obstructions, and if properly attended afterwards, will insure success.

BILLIARD TABLES.

JACOB STRAHLE IS DETERMINED TO FURNISH Billiard Tables cheaper, and on more reasonable terms than any other establishment on the Pacific coast, having secured repeated premiums for finish and durability of work, as well as for his latest styles of cushions. This shows conclusively that his tables are superior to any manufactured in the city. His manufactory is at 537 Sacramento street, near What Cheer House. *

JACOB SHEW & Co., No. 315 Montgomery street, near Pine, take First-Class Photographs, of all kiuds, at the lowest scale of prices adopted by the Associated Photographers. Photographs retouched in the highest style of the art.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is hut the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who bad suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolatiou which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. I in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

JOHN GORMAN,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

No. 619 Merchant street,

Above Montgomery.....(South side.)

VAN VLECK & KEITH,

Designers and Engravers

ON WOOD,

No. 611 Clay street, San Francisco.

WM. KEITH. D. VAN VLECK.

MRS. G. M. NICHOLS,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY,

No. 661 Clay street, 2 doors below Kearney,

San Francisco.

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,

Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices

536 In this City,
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactery manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO

YOU

WANT ANY

Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

RUSSELL & HOLDING'S

EXCHANGE,

622 Market street, between Montgomery and Kearny.

THE FINEST WINES AND LIQUORS ARE dispensed at the Exchange.

All the British Columbia papers on file.

N. B.—A commodious BACK ROOM for the accommodation of customers is one of the feature of the establishment ☞Families supplied, and Goods delivered Free of charge.

DR. HAYDEN,

Dentist,

653 Clay street, between Kearny and Montgomery,

San Francisco.

PIANOS!

PIANOS!

AT

AT PRICES FROM $150 TO $600,

AT WALTER S. PIERCE'S PIANO ROOMS, 536 MARKET STREET, opposite Second.

N. B.—The highest cash price paid for Second-hand Pianos

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

A Big Thing and no Humbug.

OF THE THOUSANDS OF COMPOUNDS BEFORE the public, "RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA" for the Hair, alone, does just what it promises.

Hon. Warren Chase, the Spiritualist Lecturer, says: "My hair and whiskers have been many years gray. RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA has restored both to their original color, black, and covered the baldness on the top of my head with a fine growth of black hair I have several friends who have used it with the same results, and I cordially recommend it as one of the few medicines that will do what its labels and circulars claim for it. WARREN CHASE."

October, 1865

Call for RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA, and for your own pleasure and comfort do not be put off with anything else, "said to be just as good."

JOHN F. SNOW,
24 Post street, San Francisco,
Agent for the Pacific Coast.

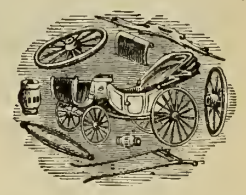
ALSO,

Coloring, Cleansing and Restoring of

FEATHERS, KID GLOVES, SILKS, FURS, WOOLENS, ETC.,

24 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny, SAN FRANCISCO.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,

No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 1?

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco.

FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard

TABLE

MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,

612 BATTERY STREET,

Between Jackson and Pacific, San Francisco,

Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements. Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description.

☞ All goods sold are warranted.

WM. WORTHINGTON,

House and Sign Painter,

Dealer in

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,

735 Market street,

Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

RESIGNATION OF AGENCY

OF THE

PHŒNIX INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF HARTFORD.

San Francisco, January 8th, 1867.

L. B DELL, HAS THIS DAY RESIGNED THE LOCAL Agency of the above company, and removed his office to DELL, CRANNA & CO.'S store, 511 1-2 and 513 FRONT STREET, where he is ready to effect insurance in either Home or Foreign companies, and furnish information on insurance matters free of charge. Thanking his friends and patrons for past favors, he respectfully solicits a continuance of their patronage in the future.

L. B. DELL, 511 1-2 and 513 Front street.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S

STEAM ENGINE WORKS

Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.

HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,

Portable Engines of all sizes,

Donkey Pumps, Etc, Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the

SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP

of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

THE BATH.

Off, fetters of the falser life!
  Weeds that conceal the statue's form—
This silent world with truth is rife,
  The wooing air is warm.

Now fall the thin disguises, planned
  For them to weak to walk unblamed;
Naked beside the sea I stand—
  Naked, and not ashamed!

Where yonder dancing billows dip,
  Far off to ocean's misty verge,
Ploughs Morning, like a full-sailed ship,
  The Orient's cloudy surge.

With spray of scarlet fire before
  The ruffled gold that round her lies,
She sails above the sleeping shore,
  Across the waking skies.

The dewey beach beneath her glows;
  A penciled beam, the light-house burns;
Full breathed, the fragrant sea-wind blows—
  Life to the world returns!

I stand, a spirit newly-born,
  White-limbed, and pure, and strong, and fair,
The first-begotten son of Morn—
  The nursling of the air.

There, in a heap, the masks of Earth—
  The cares, the sins, the griefs—are thrown,
Complete, as through diviner birth,
  I walk the snuds alone.

With downy hands the winds caress
  With frothy lips the amorous sea,
As welcoming the nakeduess
  Of vanished gods, in me.

Along the ridged and sloping sand,
  Where headlands clasp the crescent cove,
A shining spirit of the land,
  A snowy shape, I move;

Or, plunged in hollow-rowling brine,
  In emerald cradles rocked and swung,
The sceptre of the Sea is mine,
  And mine his endless song.

For Earth with primal dew is wet,
  Her long-lost child to rebaptise;
Her fresh, immortal Edens yet,
  Their Adam recognize.

Her ancient freedom is his fee;
  Her ancient beauty is his dower;
She bares her ample breasts, that he
  May suck the milk of power.

Press on, ye hounds of life, that lurk
  So close, to seize your harried prey;
Ye fiends of Custom, Gold and Work,
  I hear your distant bay!

And, like the Arab, when he bears
  To the insulted camel's path!
His garment, which the camel tears.
  And then forgets his wrath.

Lo! yonder badges of your sway—
  Life's paltry husks to you I give,
Fall on, and in your blindness say:
  We hold the fugitive!

But leave me to this brief escape,
  To simple manhood, pure and free,
A child of God, in God's own shape,
  Between the land and sea.

UNION BUSINESS COLLEGE.—This institution is designed to initiate young men in all the practical minutia of a business education. The pupil commencing as a merchant, keeping his own accounts, and closes his course of study at the head of a great commercial bank with one million of capital, the affairs of which he becomes proficient to conduct before graduating. The value of such a course of education in the future must become incalculable to many a youthful student. The chambers of the Union Business College are located in the building of the Merchants' Insurance Company, 208 California street.

CARRIAGE MANUFACTORY.—Messrs. Saul & McArron are now prepared to execute all kinds of work in their line. Having recently enlarged their establishment, they now offer better facility for the manufacture of stage coaches, thorough-braced express, milk-wagons, etc., than any other manufacturers in their line. Their work and repairing can be relied on, and they would be pleased to see their old friends and the public at their manufactory, Nos. 579 and 581 Market st., between First and Second.

"LOOK well before you leap," is very good advice in its way; but how can sickly-looking people follow it?

Poor Charles, who was lately splitting with laughter, has been spliced by the parson.

Why is John Morrissey like the Dead Sea? Because he is death on Faro.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel.

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

MASONIC TEMPLE,

Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!

Cures Without Medicines.

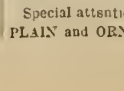
Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

A. J. PLATE,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

Guns, Rifles and Pistols.



ALSO,

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS, Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, &c., &c.,

NO. 411 SANSOME STREET,

Between Commercial and Sacramento Sts., San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES AT

PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

NEW MUSIC STORE.

WAREROOMS OF CHICKERING & SON'S

Piano-Fortes.

MASON & HAMLIN'S

CABINET ORGANS,

AMERICAN AND FIREIGN

Sheet Music.

VIOLIN AND GUITAR STRINGS,

Musical Instruments and Music Merchandise, Wholesale and Retail, at Lowest Rates.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO.,

421 Montgomery street, next door to A. Roman & Co., San Francisco.

WILLIAM BRODIE,

California Foundry,

FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,

San Francisco.

LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS

Of every description, made to order.

Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

MINERS' FOUNDRY

AND MACHINE WORKS,

FIRST STREET, between Howard and Folsom,

SAN FRANCISCO.

HOWLAND, ANGELL & KING,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Steam Engines,

MILL AND QUARTZ MACHINERY,

And Iron Castings of all kinds.

FULTON FOUNDRY & IRON WORKS

HINCKLEY & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

STEAM ENGINES,

Quartz, Flour and Saw Mills,

Mining Machinery, and all kinds of Iron and Brass Castings,

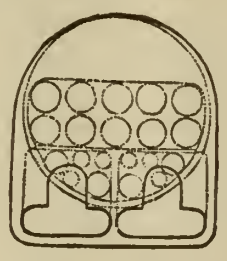
45, 47 AND 49 FIRST STREET

Between Market and Mission—San Francisco.

BRODIE'S IMPROVED

QUARTZ-CRUSHER.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF

HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS

Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Cold Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

PIONEER WORKS.

KITTREDGE & LEAVITT,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Fire Proof Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc.,

Corner Fremont and Market street, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of Second Hand Fire Proof Doors and Shutters.

Also, manufacture to order the California Burglar and Fire-Proof Safe, with the Burglar's Lock invented by Mr. W. C. Bussey, of Jackson, Amador county, Cal. No Key required to open this Safe. It is done by Mathematical Calculation. Call and examine for yourselves, at our Works,

THIS LOCK PUT ON SAFES NOW IN USE

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOSEPH H. WEED,
V. KINGWELL.

SAN FRANCISCO

Foundry and Machine Works,

Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,

Manufacturers of

MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,

Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.

ALSO,

Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,

Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight; without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,

Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S

SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 P

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush stre
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) c ner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Thi
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Mark
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery stre

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgom ery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pi
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corn
California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor C
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pin
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and Californ
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis and 124 Market

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry s

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 5 Third stree
below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 524 Market, opposite Secon
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery s

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 120 Montgomery street.
Dam & Southerland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Mark
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Bessou, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnguy & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howar
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scale
120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G. Brown, 116 Montgomery
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacrament

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOOD AND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 850 Howard street.

WARD'S NAUTICAL EXPERIENCE.

NOTES FROM HIS "LOG BOOK."

In overhaulin of my old trunks the tother day, I found the follerin' jernal of a vyage on the starnch canawl bote Polly Ann, which happened to the subscriber when I was a young man (in the Brite Lexington of youth, when par ain't no such word as fale) on the Wabash canawl:

(Monday, two P. M.)—Got under wa.—Hosses not remarkably frisky at fust. Had to bild fires under 'em afore they'y start at all. Started at last very suddint. causin the bote to lurch very violently, and nockin me orf my pins. (Saler frase.) Several passenjers on board. Parsed thru delightful country. Honist farmers was to work sowin korn and other projuce in the fields. Surblime scenery. Large red-headed gal reclining on the banks of the canawl, bathin her feet.

Turned in at fifteen minutes past eleving.

(Toosday.)—Riz at five, an' went up on the hoop deck. Took a grown person's dose of wicker with a member of the Injianny Legislature, which he urbanely insisted on allowin me to pay for. Bote tearin thru the briny waters at the rate of 2 Nots an hour, when the boy on the leading hoss shouted—

"Sale hoe!"

"Whar away?" hollered the capting, clearing his glass, (a empty black bottle, with the bottom nockt out) and bringin' it to his eagle eye.

"'Bout four rods to the starbud."

"'Jes so," screeched the capting. "What vessel's that air?"

"The Kickin' Warier, of Terry Hawt, and be darned to you!"

"I, I, sir," hollered our capting. "Reef your arft hoss, splice your mane jib-boom. and sail your chambermaid! What's up in Terry Hawt?"

"You know Bill Spikes?" sed the capting of the Warier

"Wa'al, I reckin'; he kin eat more fride pork ner any man of his heft on the Wabash. He's an ornament to his sex!"

"Wa'al," continued the capting of the Kickin' Warier, "what do you think of that?" as he parsed along a black bottle over to our capting.

"The country is indeed in danger," sed our capting, raising the bottle to his lips.

The wessels parted. No other incident that day. Retired to my chaste couch at five minits parst ten.

(Wensday)—Riz airly. Wind blowing N. W. E. Hevy sea on and ship rollin' wildly in consequents of pepper-corns havin' bin fastend to the forred hoss's tale.

"Heave two!" roared the capting to the man at the rudder, as the Polly gave a friteful toss. I was sick and sorry I'd cum. "Heave two!" I hearn him holler again, and stickin my head out of the cabin window, I hev.

The hosses becum dosile eventually, an' I felt better. I went below to breakfast, but vittles had lost their charms. "Take sum of this," said the capting, shovin' a bottle towards my plate, "it's whisky. A few quarts allers sets me right when my stammick gets out of order. It's a excellent Tonic." I declined the seductive flooid.

(Thursday)—Didn't rest well last nite on account of an uprore made by the capting, who stopped the Bote to go ashore and smash in the winders of a grosery. He was bro't back in about an hour, with his hed dun up in a red handkercher, his eyes bein' swelled up orful, and his nose very much out of jint. He was bro't aborde on a shutter by his crue, and deposited on the cabin floor, the passenjers all risin up in their births, pushin' the red curtains aside & lookin' out to see what the matter was.

"Why do you allow your pashuns to run away with you in this onseemly style, my misguided friend?" sed a sollum lookin' man, in a red flannel nite-cap. "Why do you sink yourself to the Beasts of the field."

"Wall, the fack is," said the capting, risin hisself on the shutter, "I've been a little pre foodiced agin that grosery ever sum time, Bu I made it lively for the boys, Deacon! Bet your life!" He larfed a short, wild larf, and called for his jug. Sippin' a few pints, he smiled gently upon the passenjers, sed "Bless you! bless you!" and fell into a sweet sleep.

Eventooaly we reached our jerney's end This was in the days of Old Long Sing, be4 the iron horse was foaled. This was be4 steembotes was goin' round bustin' their bilers & sending people higher nor a kite. Them was happy days, when the people was intelligent and wax figgers and livin' wild beests wasn't scoffed at.

"O dase of me boyhood I'm dreamin' on ye now!"

ARTEMUS WARD.

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR FEBRUARY.

February 9th—GOLDEN AGE, Captain W. F. Lapidge, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray,
February 18th—GOLDEN CITY, Captain Jas. T. Watkins, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Harris.
February 28th—MONTANO, Capt. Jos. Sutton, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Furber.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on April 3d, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

The steamship HERMANN, Capt. M. P. Nolan, will be dispatched on Friday, March 1, for Yokohama, carrying passengers and freight, and the U. S. mails.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER

MOSES TAYLOR,

WILL SAIL FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, From MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on

FRIDAY, - - FEBRUARY 15, 1867,

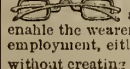
Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship SANTIAGO,

(2500 tons) For NEW YORK.

The AMERICA will sail on March 5th.

For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets.
Up stairs, San Francisco

PRESERVE YOUR SIGHT.



PERFECT SPECTACLES exactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minute employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill-suited or common Spectacles.

PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent pre-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.

Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between Jifornia and Pine

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE

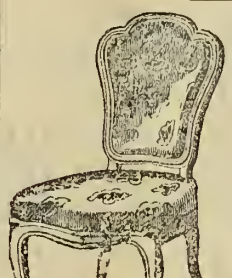
At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO.



WE ARE NOW CLOSING out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth; and Main street, Stockton.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

Splendid Presents

TO SEND ABROAD.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS

.....OF.....

California Scenery!

A SERIES OF OVER

ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!

ILLUSTRATING

The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.

PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,

And Published by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 & 319 Montgomery Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Seaborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

FAUST CELLAR,

Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets, San Francisco.

A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.

FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,

SUCCESSOR TO
WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine
Wines, Liquors and Segars,
NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,
Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warraated to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

TRUMP & BRADY,

No. 615 Market street,

In Basement of St. Lawrence House, opposite Montgomery,

STEAM AND GAS FITTING,

PLUMBING, ETC.

Gas Letters and Reflectors made to order. Ships, Stores, and Dwelling fitted up with Steam, Water and Gas Pipes, at the lowest rates.

Pumps Repaired, and all kinds of Jobbing done at the shortest notice.

All Work warranted, or no charges made.

Occidental Restaurant.

J. E. SORBIER & CO., - - PROPRIETORS,

536 Washington street,

A few doors below Montgomery.

B. MACKAY,

ARCHITECT,

NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

R. A. THOMPSON,

DEALER IN

Coal and Charcoal,

816 and 818 Mission st., near the corner of Fourth,

SAN FRANCISCO.

REMOVAL!

Wightman & Hardie's

DRY GOODS AND CARPET WAREHOUSE

HAS REMOVED

To No. 220 Sansome Street,

TWO DOORS SOUTH OF CALIFORNIA.

Removal.

D. J. OLIVER

Has removed from Washington street, to

HIS NEW BUILDING

ON THE

NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STREETS,

Where he offers for sale

THE LARGEST STOCK OF

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

101, 103 and 105 Front street. 110 Pine street.

Removal. Removal.

THE HOWE SEWING MACHINE AGENCY

HAS BEEN REMOVED TO

NEW STORE,

No. 137 KEARNY STREET, S. W. corner of Sutter.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc

WILSON & EVANS,

No. 513 Clay street,

Importers and Dealers in

FIREARMS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION,

SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Pouches, Eley's Cups, Wads, and all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing-Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Linen and Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.

WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY

NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warranted to give satisfaction.

WILSON & EVANS.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

D. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnvereiu Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

R. A. THOMPSON,

DEALER IN

Coal and Charcoal,

816 and 818 Mission st., near the corner of Fourth,

SAN FRANCISCO.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,

Practical Card and Seal Engraver,

AND PLATE PRINTER,

No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

Belduke & Co.,

(Formerly of Concord, New Hampshire.)

LONG IN THE EMPLOY OF THE CELEBRATED firm of L. DOWNING & SON, having arrived in this city for the purpose of the Manufacture of

CONCORD CARRIAGES,

And having on hand a large assortment of EASTERN MATERIAL, we are prepared to receive orders for the same. CARRIAGES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS, equal in style and Durability to those imported from the East. Special attention given to setting axles in Concord style. CARRIAGE SPRINGS MANUFACTURED TO ORDER. All the work from our establishment warranted to give entire satisfaction. Also, we are prepared to furnish Concord Harness made to order at our establishment.

NO. 820 FOLSOM STREET,
Between Fourth and Fifth.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of

LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,

37 and 39 Webb street,

Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of

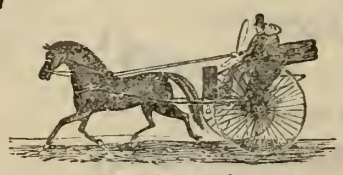
WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,

A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.

Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.

H. CASEBOLT.

WILLIAM TRUMBULL,



Manufacturer of

Saddles, Harness and Collars,

North-west corner Davis and Commercial streets.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

A good assortment, made from the best Materials, in the highest style of Workmanship, constantly on hand.

Manufacturing and Repairing done promptly, on reasonable terms. ☞ Country Trade solicited.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,

LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 515 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

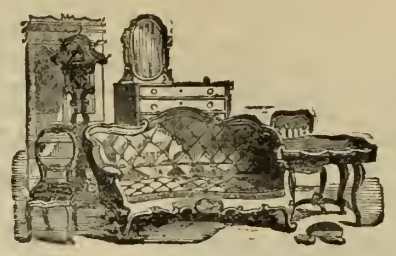
Main street, . . . Petaluma.

EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

N. P. COLE & CO.,

WHOLESALE

Furniture Warehouse,



No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM

PRICE 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.

PRICE 50 CENTS.

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,

Cor Sansome & Commercial streets.

Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicides, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA AND YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE OF POTASS.

THE

Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla"

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,

N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

CLEANSE THE BLOOD.

WITH CORRUPT, DISordered or vitiated Blood, you are sick all over. It may burst out in Pimples, or, Sores, or in some active disease, or it may merely keep you listless, depressed and good for nothing. But you cannot have good health while your blood is impure. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA purges out these impurities and stimulates the organs of life into vigorous action, restoring the health[illegible]ng disease. Hence it rapidly cures a variety of complaints which are caused by impurity of the blood, such as Scrofula, or Kings' Evil, Tumors, Ulcers, Sores, Eruptions, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose, or Erysipelas, Tetter, or Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Cancer or Cancerous Tumors, Sore Eyes, Female Diseases, such as Retention, Irregularity, Suppression, Whites, Sterility, also Syphilis or Venerial Diseases, Liver Complaints, and Heart Diseases. Try AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and see for yourself the surprising activity with which it cleanses the blood and cures these disorders.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound "Sarsaparilla," and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. We think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. We can only assure the sick, that we offer them the best alterative which we know how to produce, and we have reason to believe, it is by far the most effectual purifier of the blood yet discovered by any body.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is so universally known to surpass every other remedy for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease, that it is useless here to recount the evidence of its virtues. The world knows them.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware.

Main street, Petaluma.

THE "Fat Contributor" is writing "Easy Lessons in Geography" for one of our exchanges. The following is on EARTH.

The earth is an old subject, we don't know how old. Wise men have endeavored to ascertain its age in various ways, and have succeeded very well, only differing in their calculations a few thousand centuries or so.

We have several reasons for writing upon the Earth, the principal one being the the imperfect facilities afforded for getting upon any other planet to write. Nothing prevents our writing upon the sun, or the moon, except the difficulty in getting there.

The Earth is the third planet in order from the sun, and the largest within the belt of the planetoids. We have wondered, sometimes, why the Earth did not have a belt all to herself, being the Champion of the Universe.

The ancients looked upon the Earth as a flat disc, swimming upon water like a piece of toast in a basin of milk. Once upon a time a a lot of adventurous young ancients started out to find the jumping off place, and continuing on a straight line they were astonished to find themselves in the very spot whence they started. They informed their parents of the circumstance, and they, after about a century of painful and laborious thought upon the subject, came to the conclusion that the Earth must be round, "because if it ain't," triumphantly asked a jolly old ancient, "how could the boys ha' got round it? There was no getting round that, and the Earth has been of a spherical form ever since.

It is estimated that about two-thirds of the surface of the globe is covered with water. Although millions of living creatures slake their thirst daily, the quantity of water has not been materially diminished for centuries past, at least not since the introduction whisky-shops, which prove a great saving of water, and therefore of immense benefit to navigation.

The greatest distance from the Earth to the sun is 96,000,000 of miles, and the least distance something over 94 000.000 miles. A saving of 2,000,000 of miles could be effected if a railroad should ever connect the two planets, by taking the least distance. This would shorten the time consumed in running, and reduce the expenses very materially. Any railroad man will tell you that.

The Earth moves around the sun from West to East, consuming 365 days and 6 hours in every revolution, traveling nights and Sundays. Joshua, it will be remembered by some of our oldest citizens, once commanded the sun to stand still, and she is standing still. It ain't every fool of a planet that can get around the the sun. The Earth does it, however. She would get around most anything,

The Earth turns upon its axis, making one revolution every twenty-four hours, except in Mexico—there they have a revolution two or three times a day.

It is the revolutions of the Earth that make night and day, to everybody but printers and editors who work on morning papers—it is all day with them.

After digging a certain depth into the bowels of the Earth the temperature becomes warm, and it grows warmer as you warm to your work, so that at the depth of thirty miles everything is like molten iron at a white heat. There is good reason for believing that people who cheat the printer, and who try to get into shows without paying for it, are sent thirty miles into the bowels of the Earth when they die.

The earth is not such a dismal place to live upon as many try to make out. So far as our knowledge extends—and we probably know as much about it as anybody—it is far preferable to any of her sister planets as a permanent residence. At least, we are satisfied with it, and intend to remain here so long as we are "on earth."

It has been decided, in one of the French courts, that to call a woman a "female," is to insult her, and the offense is fiuable.

Fireman's Fund

INSURANCE COMPANY.

ABSTRACT from Statement for Year ending Dec. 31, 1866:

Capital stock, all paid up, - -	$500,000 00
Surplus, - - - - -	181,139 39
		$681,139 39
ASSETS.
Loans on Real Estate, - -	$471,404 00
Loans on Personal Property, -	79,685 92
Real Estate owned by Company,	78,738 30
Cash on hand and in Bank, -	26,817 30
Other Securities, - - -	27,138 45
		$683,784 97
LIABILITIES.
Amount of personal accounts, $973 73
Dividends unpaid, - - 1,671 85
	2,645 58
		$681,139 39
Am't of losses paid during the year, $57,290 12
Amount of losses unsettled, -	5,339 40
		$62,629 52
Dividend declared for 1866		$87,500 00

THE FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE COMPANY beg leave to call the attention of the public to their ANNUAL STATEMENT, feeling satisfied that a careful examination of the same will convince people of its stability, and induce many to patronize the Company.

The greatest amount taken on any one risk is $50,000, and when any risk is considered too great a portion is reinsured in responsible Companies.

Desirable risks taken at REDUCED RATES.

Losses paid in United States Coin.

W. B. BOURN, President.
D. J. STAPLES,
Vice-President and Executive Officer.
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.

OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL

Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pres't.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

GREAT WESTERN

Life Insurance Company.

OF NEW YORK.

STOCK and MUTUAL

The Security of the Stock Plan, with all the Advantages of the Mutual System.

POLICIES AND DIVIDENDS ARE NON-FORFEITABLE.

Thirty Days Grace for Payment of Premiums.

J. W. BRUMAGIN.
General Agent for California,
Office 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

DR. FONDA SAN FRANCISCO EYE INFIRMARY,

PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUsively for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.

P. W. FONDA, M. D.,
Surgeon in charge Infirmary,
223 Kearny street between Bush and Sutter.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,

(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)

NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,

From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.

Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of

Asphaltum Work,

Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—In Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JAMES FITZPATRICK, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the estate of James Fitzpatrick, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratrix at the place of the transaction of her business, at the office of her attorney, Geo. B. Merrill, Esq., No. 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco. MARY FITZPATRICK,
Administratrix of Estate of James Fitzpatrick, deceased.
San Francisco, February 2d, 1867. 4w

RHEUMATISM CAN BE CURED

BY USING

Healy's Rheumatic Liniment,

Which is warranted to cure the most obstinate cases of CHRONIC OR INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.

It relaxes the muscles, removes the pain, and restores health and vigor to the system.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb 6, 1866.

MR. HEALY—Dear Sir: Having witnessed many cures effected by your Rheumatic Liniment, I take great pleasure in universally recommending it to those in search of a really good article.

Yours, &c., FRANK V. SCUDDER.

MR. FRANK HEALY: I suffered considerable rheumatic pains in both shoulders for a long time. I tried many remedies to get relief, but to no purpose. I was advised to try a bottle of "Healy's Rheumatic Liniment," which I did, and it has greatly relieved me. I am now using the second bottle, and am confident that in a few days I shall be well.

Yours, &c., R. PAGE,
316, Montgomery street.

San Francisco, Feb, 9, 1866.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 13, 1866.

TO F. HEALY: I have heard much and seen practical proofs of your Liniment, and I endorse all you claim for it. L. GOETZ,
335, 337, Pine street.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 12, 1866.

Dear Sir: I have used the bottle of Liniment you sent me, and it has done me good. Please send me another. WM. HORR,
718, Battery street

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT is for sale by all Druggists on the Pacific coast.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Wholesale Agents, CRANE & BRIGHAM, and R. H. McDONALD & CO., SAN FRANCISCO.

AGENTS WANTED TO CANVASS FOR THE only official Southern History of the War. THE LOST CAUSE, by E. A. Pollard, the popular Historian of the South, and editor of the Richmond Examiner during the war. Complete in one large royal octavo volume, with

24 FINE STEEL PORTRAITS,

giving a full and authentic account of the rise and fall of the late Southern Confederacy. Written under the encouragement of Generals R. E. Lee, Johnston, Beauregard and others. The work is being liberally patronized by leading men of all classes, eager to hear and thus arrive at the truth of history, which it is impossible to do from the many histories written only from a Northern stand-point.

"THE OTHER SIDE,"

Agents and the public are cautioned against any other work purporting to be this one. To energetic men and women a rare chance is offered to make money. Don't fail to send for circulars of this great and important work. Address

F. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days, otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS W. SUTHERLAND, deceased.

It appearing to the said Court by the petition this day presented and filed by Alexander R. Baldwin, the Administrator of the estate of Thomas W. Sutherland, deceased, praying for an order of sale of Real Estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the Real Estate to pay the charges and expenses of administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on TUESDAY, the 12th day of February A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of said day at the Court room of said Probate Court at the City Hall, in said city and county of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated January 10th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
Of the City and County of San Francisco, }

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true, full and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 10th day of January A. D. 1867

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
J. F. HUTTON, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. j12 5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

LUCY J. PRINCE, Plaintiff, vs. LOUIS M PRINCE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LOUIS M. PRINCE, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Hon. Court, dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and awarding to Plaintiff the sole custody of Louis Prince, the child of said parties, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this eighth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED]
D. P. BARSTOW, Plaintiff's Attorney. no10-3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

CECILE PEBELIE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELIE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelie, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you, by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff be permitted to resume her maiden name, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[L. S.] By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHN F. LOGAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Mary Banks and Catherine Rogan, claiming to be the nearest relatives and heirs, being the aunts of John F. Logan, deceased, setting forth that the administrator has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said John F. Logan, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the fifth day of March, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said John F. Logan, deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said fifth day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated January 30th, 1867. feh2-4w

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said Court, this first day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk
[Seal and Stamp.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF WILLIAM SHANAHAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of William Shanahan, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his office, at the store of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California. Dated February 1, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the Estate of William Shanahan, deceased. f2 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE HAMILTON THOMPSON, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of GEORGE HAMILTON THOMPSON, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the U. S. Surveyor General's office, Pioneer Hall, Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, January 25th, 1867.

G. HOWARD THOMPSON,
Administrator of Estate of George Hamilton Thompson, deceased, j26 5t

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

No. 221 Montgomery street,

Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,

San Francisco.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

RUDOLPH STEINBACH, Plaintiff, vs. JOSEPH L REED, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, and the complaint filed in the said city and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JOSEPH L REED, CAROLINE L. REED, CHRISTIAN L LIEN, PETER S. McNIEL, SARAH J McNIEL, EDWARD STRODE, NEWELL WINANTS, JOHN C. FRY, JAMES RYAN, S. CLINTON HASTINGS, Administratur of the Estate of Austin E. Smith, deceased, WILLIAM SMITH, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days, otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to compel the defendants to set forth the nature of their several claims in and to the lands and premises described in the complaint, and that adverse claims of said defendants may be determined by a decree of this Court, that it be declared and adjudged that the defendants, or either of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said lands or premises, and that they be forever debarred from asserting any claim thereto adverse to plaintiff, and that he is the owner thereof in fee, and for such other and further relief as to equity shall seem meet.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 24th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-six. WM LOEWY, Clerk
[SEAL.] By W. R. SATTERLEE, Deputy Clerk.
Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. d22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ELIZABETH BARRETT, Plaintiff, vs. CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the sum of $30,000, being the one half of the common property of the parties, be adjudged to belong to and be delivered to this plaintiff; and that the care, custody and education of the children of the said parties, viz: Cornelius William and Arthur Joseph, be awarded to the plaintiff; and that pending this suit, the defendant may, by order of this Court, be restrained and enjoined from selling, or in any manner disposing of the common property referred to in the complaint—that is to say, $60,000; and that defendant be ordered to pay plaintiff $250 per month for the support of herself and children, and the further sum of $1,000 as attorneys' fees for the prosecution of this action, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply ro the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judical District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[SEAL.] By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
PIXLEY & SMITH, Attorneys for Plaintiff. d29 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUdicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovenamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree ndjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, in wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment ducketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and be put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j19 3m

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE, - - Sole Proprietor and Manager
CHAS. TIBBETTS, - - Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES, - - - Stage Manager
W. STEVENSON, - - - - - Treasurer

ENGAGEMENT OF THE WITCHING ELFIN STAR,
ALICE KINGSBURY!
—SUPPORTED BY—
Mrs. Sophie Edwin, Mrs. H. Jackson,
Mr. J. McCullough, Mr. H. Edwards,
And a Full Corps Dramatique!

THIS AFTERNOON, FEB. 9TH,
KINGSBURY MATINEE!—FANCHON!

THIS EVENING, FEB. 9TH,
Miss Alice Kingsbury in the Great Plays of CHILD OF THE SAVANNA!
....AND....
CRICKET OF THE HEARTH!

MONDAY, FIRST NIGHT OF
THE LONG STRIKE!

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle, - - $1 00 | Orchestra, - - $1 00
Parquette, - - 50 | Upper Circle, - 25
No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery, Museum,

CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,

On Mission and Valencia streets.

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

"SHERMAN'S

March through Georgia."

ADMISSION, - - - TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

THOS. NAST'S GREAT PAINTING now on Exhibition at the Fine Art Gallery of SNOW & ROOS, 219 Montgomery street. (Russ Block.)

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.

MISS S. A——'S VALENTINE:

"Take this little flower; take it and think of me!
Think, in the hours of loneliness, of the one who gave it thee;
Place it within thy bosom, let it never be forgot,
But let it whisper oft to thee, "Forget me not."

MISS A. M. C——'S VALENTINE:

"The brightest smiles that ever fell
Are not so dear as thine to me;
And oh! these lines but faintly tell
The love that fills my heart for thee."

TO —— ——:

Think not this gift is idly pour'd
To pass a weary hour away;
Or that the giver in the end
Will in his friendship e'er decay!

'Tis sent in all sincere esteem,
And with the purest heartfelt prayer
That heaven's most enduring beam
May guard and shield thee from all care.

MISS MARY B——N'S VALENTINE:

How dear the dream
In distant hour of ill,
Should all be changed,
To find the faithful still.

ST. VALENTINE'S ADVICE.

To the unmarried of the nation,
As they would avoid the mortification,
And shun the appellation
Of old maids and old bachelors in this generation,
To make direct application,
Without any flirtation,
To APPLETON'S station,
Where VALENTINE holds his oblation,
For an appropriate communication,
Which will afford a gratification,
In the highest acceptation,
And be a sufficient remuneration
For the money spent on the occasion,
From the smallest to the greatest valuation.

VALENTINES in extra fine French Boxes—also in solid Rosewood and Mahogany cases. Sold with or without jewelry.

VALENTINES of every conceivable variety; Valentine Cards, Valentine Mottoes and Stationery.

THIRTY New and Original California Comics.

COMICS,.....5 cents.

VALENTINE WRITERS, Comic and Sentimental.

APPLETON'S VALENTINE EXPRESS,
With ten Horses, will deliver Valentines every hour of Valentine's Day in every part of the city.

D. E. APPLETON & CO.,
508 Montgomery street.

Branch Depot, 103 Montgomery street, one door north of Sutter. Other Depots will be announced in the daily papers.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S
FEBRUARY
LIST OF PUBLICATIONS.

Idalia, a Novel, by "Ouida," author of "Strathmore," etc.
Swingin' Round the Cirkle, by Petroleum V. Nasby.
Rachel's Secret, a Novel, by the author of "The Master of Marton."
Poems, Grave and Gay, by George Arnold.
Six Hundred Dollars a Year, a Wife's effort at low living.
The Dead Letter, by Seeley Register.
Liffith Lank, or Lunacy, by C. H. Webb, (Inigo)
Amateur Drama, by Geo. M. Baker.
King Rene's Daughter—a Danish Drama, by H. Hertz.
Margaret Hamilton, by Mrs. Newby.
Robert Severne, by Wm. A, Hammond.
Elements of Art Criticism, by G. W. Samson. D. D.
Life and Letters of John Winthrop, Vol. 2, 1630—1649.
The Way of the World, a Novel, by Wm. T. Adams. (Oliver Optic.)
Out of Town, a Rural Episode, by Barry Gray.
Hesperia, a Poem, by Richard Henry Wilde.
Parlor Tableaux and Amateur Theatricals.
American Leaves, Notes and Thoughts of Life, by S. Osgood
Forcesythe Wilson's Poems—The Old Sergeant, etc.
Thh Giraffe Hunters, by Capt. Mayne Reed.
Breathings of the Better Life, edited by Lucy Larcom.
Cardock Nowell, by Richard Doddridge Blackmore
Iufautile Paralysis, by Chas F. Taylor, M. D.
St. Elmo, a Novel, by A. J. Evans, author of Beulah, etc.
Laboulaye's Fairy Book.
Mugby Junction, Dicken's New Christmas Story.
Olive Logan's New Christmas Story: J. Morris's Moucy.
Lizzie Lorton, by E. Linn Linton.
A Quiet Neighborhood, by George McDonald, M. A.
The New Gospel of Peace.
History of a Mouthful of Bread, by Jeau Macé.
Oil on the Waters.
Madonna Mary, by Mrs. Oliphant.
Bernthal; or, The Sou's Revenge, by L. Muhlbach.
Mark Rowland, by Hawser Martingale.
Fairies of our Garden, by Author of "Child Life in Italy"
Young America Abroad by Oliver Optic—Outward Bound.
Macaulay's Speeches and Poems, 2 vols., new edition.
Bride of Lewellyn, by Mrs. Southworth.
Phillip II of Spain, by Chas. Gayarre.
The Vegetable World, Louis Figuier.
Griset's Grotesques; or Jokes drawn on Wood.
200 Sketches, Humorous and Grotesque, by Gustave Dore.
Parsons on Partnership.
The Egyptian Dream Book and Fortune Telling.
Private Journal and Diary of John H. Surratt.
Ben Bunline, a Novel, by Sir Admirable Fisher.
Book of Praise, by Roundell Palmer.
Hopefully Waiting, by A. D. F. Randolph.
The Character of Jesus Portrayed, by Dr. Daniel Schenkel, 2 vols.
Fuz Buz the Fly and Mother Grabem.
Flowers for the Altar, by M. W. Reynolds
The Book of the Sonnet, edited by Leigh Hunt and S. A. Lee, 2 vols.
The Family Christian Almanac, 1867.
The Church Almanac, 1867.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
Booksellers, Publishers and Importers
No. 417 and 419 MONTGOMERY ST.

SAUL & McARRON,
Carriage Manufactory,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.
A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

JOHN TAYLOR,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
WINES AND LIQUORS.
NO. 16 THIRD STREET,
Between Market and Stevenson Streets., San Francisco

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION.

INCORPORATED JANUARY 23d, 1867.

THE OBJECT OF SAID CORPORATION IS THE purchase of forty-three full Blocks and fifteen Sectional Blocks of Land in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in what is known as the "University Mound Tract Survey," on file in the office of the City and County Recorder of said city and county, as follows:

FULL BLOCKS.

Numbers Twenty-one, Forty-four, Forty-five, Forty seven, Sixty one, Sixty-two, Sixty-three, Seventy-five, Seventy-six, Seventy-seven, Seventy-eight, Seventy nine, Eighty-five, Eighty-six, Eighty seven, Eighty eight, Eighty-nine, Ninety, Ninety-two, Ninety-three, Ninety four, Ninety-five, Ninety-six, Ninety seven, One Hundred, One Hundred and One, One Hundred and Two, One Hundred and Four, One Hundred and Five, One Hundred and Six, One Hundred and Seven, One Hundred and Ten, One Hundred and Eleven, One Hundred and Twelve, One Hundred and Thirteen, One Hundred and Fourteen, One Hundred and Fifteen, One Hundred and Sixteen, One Hundred and Seventeen, One Hundred and Eighteen, One Hundred and Nineteen, One Hundred and Twenty-eight, and One Hundred and Twenty-nine.

FRACTIONAL BLOCKS.

Numbers Eight, Nine, Sixty, Sixty-four, Eighty-three, Eighty-four, Ninety one, One Hundred and Three, One Hundred and Eight, One Hundred and Nine, One Hundred and Twenty-two, One Hundred and Twenty-three, One Hundred and Twenty-four, One Hundred and Twenty-five, One Hundred and Twenty six; and the same being a portion of the Bernal Ranch—the improvements thereof—and the subdivision thereof into lots and parcels suitable for Homesteads, and the distribution of such lots or parcels among the shareholders.

For further information, READ THE PROSPECTUS containing Act of Incorporation, Articles of Association, etc. All persons desirous of securing lots in the UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION, are requested to apply at once at their

OFFICE, IN STEVENSON'S BUILDING, CORNER OF MONTGOMERY AND CALIFORNIA STS.

As shares are being rapidly taken, and the opportunity will soon be lost. Prospectus and maps can be obtained free of charge, at the office of the Association.

OFFICERS OF THE UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION.

E. THOMAS, D. D., - - - - - President.
LESTER L. ROBINSON, - - - - - Treasurer.
THOMAS B. LEWIS, - - - - - Secretary.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

E. Thomas, Lester L. Robinson,
Geo. B. Taylor, Thomas B. Lewis,
H. A. Gorley.

By order of the Board.

THOMAS B. LEWIS,
Secretary University Homestead Association.

UNION BUSINESS COLLEGE.

(MERCHANTS' INSURANCE BUILDING,)

408 CALIFORNIA ST.

THIS Institution is designed to prepare Boys and Men for business pursuits, and to impart a thorough commercial education. It is conducted upon thorough business principles. The student, upon entering the college, is furnished with a capital in cash and merchandise, rents a place of business, opens an account with the bank, insures his goods in the insurance office of the College, and enters upon the arena of business. He commences speculation, carrying out all the details of trade, buying and selling goods, depositing in and checking from the Bank, making and negotiating notes, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., recording the transactions and keeping the books in a regular and scientific manner. From this he advances to other capacities, until he finally takes his position in the Union Business College Bank, a regularly established institution, complete in all its appointments, and having in circulation of one million in college currency. This course saves from four to six weeks time in copying useless manuscripts. There is no vacation, and students can enter upon any business day during the year. The public are invited to call and examine the various Departments. Sessions day and evening.

JAMES VINSONHALLER, President.

Important Notice
TO
TAX-PAYERS.

THE ATTENTION OF EVERY CITIZEN OF THE City and County of San Francisco is called to the following provisions of the Law in relation to the assessment of REAL ESTATE AND PERSONAL PROPERTY for State and City and County Taxes:

"Between the first Monday in February and the second Monday in March, EVERY PERSON, corporation, association, company or firm, owning, claiming, or having any interest in, or having the POSSESSION, CHARGE OR CONTROL of any real estate, or any PERSONAL PROPERTY, shall deliver to the City and County Assessor, at his office, a statement under oath, of all such real estate or personal property, and the CASH VALUE of such personal property." (Statutes 1862, page 57.)

"All property, both real and personal, of every kind, nature, and description whatever, within this State, whether owned by individuals or corporations, and whether its owner be A RESIDENT OR NON RESIDENT of this State, is liable to taxation; and all persons, corporations, and associations doing business in this State, either as principals or partners, whether special or otherwise, and not residents of the State, shall be assessed and taxed on all sums invested in any manner in said business, in this State, the same as if they were residents of this State; and said taxes shall be collected from the property within this State of said persons, corporations, associations, or firms." (Statutes 1866, page 803.)

Printed copies of the form of statement, as prescribed by law, can be obtained at the Assessor's Office, City Hall, without charge. WILLIAM R. WHEATON, fe9 City and County Assessor.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF AUGUSTA SAAL.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of Augusta Saal, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at the office of his Attorney, R. W. Hent, Esq., northwest corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets, in the city and county of San Francisco. Dated February 9th, 1867.

H. O. GOUGH, Administrator of the Estate of Augusta Saal, deceased. fe9 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF ELLEN O'CONNELL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of Ellen O'Connell, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his office, No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco. WM. A. QUARLES, Administrator of the Estate of Ellen O'Connell, deceased.

San Francisco, February 9, 1867.

W. & C. BARTLETT, Attorneys for Administrator, 323 Montgomery street. fe9 5t

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, made on 6th day of February A. D. 1867, in the matter of the Estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, minors, the undersigned, Guardians of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on THURSDAY, the 14th day of March, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the counting room of J. C. Merrill & Co., Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title, interest and estate of said minors Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, of, in and to all the undivided two ninths of the lot of land situated in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz: Commencing on a point on the westerly side of Berry street, one hundred and thirty-seven and a half (137 1-2) feet northeasterly from the northeast corner of Berry and Third streets; thence running northeasterly along said westerly side of Berry street one hundred and thirty seven and a half (137 1-2) feet to a point; thence at a right angle northwesterly two hundred and forty (240) feet more or less to a point in the easterly line of King street; thence at a right angle southwesterly along said line of King street one hundred and thirty-seven and a half (137 1-2) feet; and thence at a right angle southeasterly two hundred and forty feet, more or less, to the point of beginning.

And offers or bids for said property, in writing will be received at said place, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county, from this date till Thursday the 14th day of March, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon, by the undersigned. J. C. MERRILL,
Guardian of the Estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, minors. 19

Dated February 8th, 1867.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of FRANCOISE P. BETUEL, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Francois M. Betuel, the Executor of the last will and testament of Francoise P. Betuel, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the devisees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Francoise P. Betuel deceased, appear before the said Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the devisees of the said Francoise F. Beutel, deceased, according to law:

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before the said eleventh day March, A. D. 1867 in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 5th, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
Of the City and County of San Francisco, }

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true, full and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 8th day of February A. D. 1867

[SEAL AND STAMP.] WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
19 5t By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

GEO. F. & WM. H. SHARP, Attorneys for Petitioner.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California

In the matter of the Estate of JOSEPH W. KERR, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Honora Kerr, the Administratrix of the Estate of Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, setting forth that she has filed her final account of her administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, Anno Domini, 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, according to law:

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published once a week, for four successive weeks, before the said 11th day of March A. D., 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated, February 5th, 1867. 19 5t

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of said City and County, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order on file and of record in my office.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 8th day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[SEAL AND STAMP.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
HAIGHT & PIERSON, Attorneys for Petitioner.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of John Couch, the Administrator of Sarah McLaughlin, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his annual and final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered that all persons interested in the estate of the said Sarah McLaughlin, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said City and County, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order for distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Sarah McLaughlin deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County.

M. C. BLAKE Probate Judge.

Dated San Francisco, February 8th, 1867.

I. N. THORNE, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. fe9 5t

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No. 13 OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 16, 1867. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: Of the Poet and His Golden Clime, by Charles Warren Stoddard; My Omnibuss, by "Trem:" Mr. Toby Tompkins' experiences, by Prentice Local Art Items, by Astræa: Literary Gleanings and Gossips; Lion's Mouth;" President Lincoln's Negro Barber; Wicked Sunday papers; A Critic Broke Loose; England in Trouble, Ravages of a Mania; The Author's Benefit; Editorial, Dramatic Affairs etc. POETRY: Crows' Feet, by Emily Lawson; Flowers, by Isabel A. Saxon; SELECTED: My Railway Collision; Australian Jim Walker, a story; Scene in Palestine; hunting with the Lasso "Black Sheep;" Horses of the Desert; Surrat's behavior in Italy; Musical Faculty of Birds; Poetry, etc.

[For the Californian.]

CROWS'-FEET.

WHEREFORE are these ominous hushes!
Where are now the lark's song-gushes,
Where the silvery-throated thrushes,
Are they dead?—or are they dumb?
Or, are bird-notes holier, dearer,
And the gates of heaven nearer
Whence the lark-songs echo clearer
Ere the crows'-feet come.

Are the dandelions growing?
Are the apple blossoms snowing?
Round the fragrant thistles blowing
Do the bees grow quarrelsome?
If we find the four-leaved clover,
Will it tell us of our lover?
Ah, its prophecies are over
When the crows'-feet come.

Pearly rillets thrill and tangle
Childhood's daisy dotted dingle,
Friends throng youth's enchanted ingle,
Time flies—never wearisome;
But the autumn streams go fretting,
Friends change—early joys forgetting,
Hope on hope, like moons are setting,
When the crows'-feet come.

In that ingle's magic gleaming
Love looks in delicious dreaming,
Pleasure sits in careless scheming,
Softly ticks life's pendulum—
Till at last, through gleams and flashes
Dream-built castle sways and crashes,
Flares and falls, and leaves but ashes,
And the crows'-feet come.

Sunward sails the fickle swallow,
Bluebirds, blackbirds, robins follow,
All the wood sound hollow,—hollow
Echoing the pecker's drum;
White moss drops its veil like laces
Pityingly o'er leafless places,
Even on Nature's cheerful faces
Do the crows'-feet come.

But her Spring comes wreathed and hudded,
All the wide plains flower-studded,
All the temples music flooded,
All her insect life ahum;
But our Spring,—while we are learning
Of its first blooms crimson burning,
Flames and flies, no more returning,
And the crows'-feet come.

—EMILIE LAWSON.

San Francisco, February, 1867.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

Ravings by a Maniac.

Valentine day has come and gone. No person of sense sends these things now. I wonder who does send them? Valentines are old-fashioned, flat, stale, and unprofitable. I would not rank upon my list of friends, the man who send a valentine.

William Crane has become the famous boy of San Francisco. His biography is being prepared by an editor who intends to start a new daily—for nothing. The Superintendent of Public Instruction, and several half-starved school marms, are doing all they can to blacken little William Crane's character. It is now reported that dungeons and instruments of torture, similar to those belonging to the inquisition in Spain, have been discovered in several of our Public Schools. The sad ends of several little boys, who from time to time, have disappeared while being educated at the expense of the State, will soon be brought to light.

Think of meetings to encourage foreign immigration! There are not people enough now slowly starving to death in this city. Keep away. Our lunch tables are nought compared to what they were four or five years ago.

The rains have gone and the winds have come. Dirty boots have given place to dirty faces. Two collars per day. Eyes full of grit. Barbers grumble. Gravel on the physiogomies of the people dull their razors. Where is the weather that will suit us all?

The Chief of the Police told the mob to go home. Mobs are always told to go quietly home—and starve—starve quietly so as not to disturb the neighbors.

I heard a minister last Sunday tell his congregation, that unless they walked in the path of the righteous, they would go to perdition. Everybody seemed to agree with him and believe what he said. Still when they came out of church, many of them criticised that man who thus threatened them with eternal punishment, for his bad delivery and faulty grammar—just as if a criminal should criticise the judge who sentences him to death! But I am only a maniac!

The Author's Benefit.

After a dramatic performance has realized a large sum of money for the management, and the novelty of the play has worn off, the author generally has a benefit, and the public generally respond liberally and show their appreciation by a large attendance at the theatre on "Author's night." A certain gentleman residing on this coast, became the author of a performance which afforded, not only much pleasure to the public at large, but life, strength and health to many thousands of men who were in sore strait. By selling and reselling again and again a sack of flour, Mr. Gridley realized the sum of $170,963 for the Sanitary Fund. This flour enclosed in a buckskin sack on which is painted "Austin Sanitary Flour," has come back to this coast. The Stockton Independent of Thursday says:

"The flour has been in store for some time in Sacramento, and was brought here by the steamer Arrow, on Monday night. Captain H. S. Sargeant took it to his store, on Hunter street, yesterday morning, and many called during the day to look at it. Notwithstanding the fact that it has passed through the tropics twice, and has been carried over twenty-three thousand miles, it is as fresh and good as the first day it was manufactured. It was made at General Bidwell's mills, at Chico."

The public have heard with sorrow that Mr. Gridley, who devoted so much of his time to the service of the nation, is reduced to poverty.

When the "Gridley sack" was last put up at auction, at the Metropolitan Theatre, in this city, a large sum was realized from the immense audience present. Why should not the author of this happy idea receive a benefit? Why not put the "Sanitary Flour Sack" up at auction once more, for the benefit of Mr. Gridley. Give the public but a slight excuse for crowding the theatre—a little vocal and instrumental music, and, perhaps, a sketch of Mr. Gridley's travels in the East with his sack of flour, which could be written by one of our litterateurs, and read by one of our elocutionary artists—and we are sure that many dollars would be taken at the doors, and we think that the "Sanitary Sack" would at the conclusion of the entertainment, once more excite a lively bidding and realize a handsome sum for the patriotic Mr. Gridley.

England in Trouble.

The news from England, by cable, is most distressing. Englishmen marched in a great Reform procession on Monday last, carried the American flag, and played "Yankee Doodle" and "John Brown," neglected to cheer the Prince of Wales, though he showed himself at the window of the United Service Club; and carried banners bearing such dreadful inscriptions as "Manhood Suffrage," "Liberty for those who dare demand it," "Trust in God, and keep your powder dry," and others equally alarming. Disraeli has actually once more turned his attention to the preparation of a Reform bill, and more horrible than all, on St. Valentine's Day, while Dizzy was giving his opinions on the subject of Reform, a rumor reached the House of Commons that the Fenians had carried the war into England, and had taken the city of Chester. The Duke of Cambridge hurried to the War Office, hoping to be in time to save the immense stores of Cheshire cheese, in the city of Chester, from being devoured by the ravenous Feniaus. Worse and worse! There were rumors that the Fenians would (if they could) blow up Liverpool Docks. Oh, this is terrible news. Troubles are coming thick and fast on that wicked old John Bull. However, his constitution is a pretty good one, and will probably be strong enough to stand up against these shocks.

The Difference.

The cry of the English people at present is, "Re-form;" in the United States, every one cries, "Re-construction." There is considerable difficulty experienced in both cases in finding the right way to do it

Wicked Sunday Papers.

Any right minded and properly-brought-up little girl, will say that it is very wicked to tell "stories." Of course it is wicked to tell "stories" on a week-day, but to tell a "story" on Sunday, when one ought to be at church asking pardon for the sins committed during the past week, is especially wrong. We fear that each of the Sunday papers of San Francisco has told a story. The elder of them published last week, a long advertisement announcing that it had the "advance sheets of Miss M. E. Braddon's latest and greatest story entitled Nobody's Daughter, or the Ballad Singer of Wapping." The younger of the two Sunday papers, also announced that it had received advance sheets of "Miss M. E. Braddon's latest and greatest etc." We knew "the tricks and the manners" of these wicked Sunday papers, so with ten cents in our hand, we walked down to Loomis' literary emporium, and purchased the latest number of the London Journal. The story which the two Sunday papers are publishing as "Miss M. E. Braddon's latest and greatest work," is a story told about Honorn Eversleigh, Sir Oswald Eversleigh Lydia Graham, and other parties. We found in No. 1141 of the London Journal, the eighteenth and nineteenth chapters of a story about Honora Eversleigh, Sir Oswald Eversleigh, Lydia Graham and other parties. We found that the story in the London Journal was commenced in No. 1133 of that publication; and is the same story which is being now published by our Sunday papers, from advance sheets under the title of Nobody's Daughter, or the Ballad Girl of Wapping. We also found that in the London Journal it is headed:— Diavolo, or the Woman's Battle, by the author of The Black Band, etc." We were not aware that Miss M. E. Braddon's "latest and greatest work" was Nobody's Daughter, and further, we were not aware that she was the "author of the Black Band." In our opinion, Miss M. E. Braddon has to answer for the production of quite enough trash which she has really produced, without being wronged by our San Francisco Sunday papers. It appears to us wrong—we may be over-punctilious—to take a trashy story "by the author of the Black Band" from the London Journal, change the title, and tack Miss Braddon's name to it. As to the policy of announcing a story as published from advanced sheets, after eighteen chapters have been received in a public print sold in this city, we have nothing to say.

A Critic Broke Loose.

Chief Ridge of the Grass Valley National, a few days since, went after our "wondrous boy," Charles Warren Stoddard, with tomahawk and scalping knife in the most ferocious style of provincial journalism. The Chief himself aspires, or did aspire in his youthful days, to "build the lofty rhyme," and he seems to be jealous of the rising geniuses who in the popular metropolitan judgment are eclipsing their predecessors. Accordingly, he sails into our young protegé in a venemous critique of the "slashing" style, occupying a column and a quarter of his provincial organ. The little Chronicle having recently advertised Stoddard as one of the "regular contributors" to that ambitious sheet, comes dutifully to his rescue as follows:

"The literary editor of that ponderous sheet, the Grass Valley National, is going into the field of poetical criticism with a perfect rush. His amazing gyrations in this new sphere of usefulness, reminds us powerfully of a bull calf charging round in a crockery shop. He makes as short work of our indigenous poets as a hungry snapping turtle would at a jar of gold-fish, or wicked old blacksnake of a nest of chirping young robins. His last victim is our young friend Stoddard, to a critical analysis of whose "Rain Song" he devotes a column and a quarter of his high toned "periodical"—newspaper is no name for it. Of course the "tuneful boy" is ruthlessly demolished. We advise him not to dream of anything so rash as to bring out his contemplated volume of poems until he has propitiated the Olympian sage Grass Valley. Perhaps the best course would be to engage the good offices of his friend "Bret," as embassador and mediator. If "Bret" would indite the thunderer of quartzdom a mild intercessory epistle, in his happiest vein, we think it might produce a soothing effect on the literary Warwick of the Mines. At any rate, there can be no harm in the experiment."

President Lincoln's Negro Barber.

The news received by telegraph is often unsatisfactory from its paucity of details. An instance is afforded of this in the following, which appeared in the Alta of Tuesday last:

Negro Appointment.

NEW YORK, February 11.—Solomon Johnson, colored, formerly President Lincoln's barber, has been appointed a first-class clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

This news, with the sensation heading "Negro Appointment," will of course cause intense indignation among the "Democrats," who were a few days ago engaged in beating defenseless Chinamen. If Solomon Johnson's sole claim to be appointed a first class clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, was the fact that he was President Lincoln's negro barber, any dissatisfaction which this appointment might give rise to, would be well-founded. The telegraphic despatch does not of course tell us all the particulars of this appointment. Solomon Johnson the barber may, like Othello, have "done the State some service." He may possess an intellect which entitles him to a higher position than that of a barber. It is not the fact that Solomon Johnson, President Lincoln's negro barber, was capable of giving an easy shave that has elevated him to the dignity of first-class clerk in the Treasury; but other merits, on which the telegraph is silent.

AUSTRALIAN JIM WALKER.

THIS name was avowedly an alias, but Jim always evaded any attempt to discover his real patronymic, which I have no doubt he had willfully buried in oblivion, lest he should reflect disgrace on his family. I know that he never wrote to, nor received letters from, them. He told me once that he wished his friends to think him dead; and I have reason to believe on more than one occasion he refused to notice advertisements in colonial papers, calling on him, by his true name, to communicate with them.

Jim's history—as I gleaned from him one day, when a trifling act of kindness had opened his heart—was a sad, but common one. He was the child of very respectable parents. The captain of the vessel in which he came out offered to take him back on credit; but Jim's pride forbade his acceptance of this kindly offer; he feared to be taunted with non-success; "and" said he, "I'd have died rather than suffer that."

And, indeed, he seemed likely enough to die. A few occasional shillings were picked up by splitting wood for fuel; but often he dined with Duke Humphrey, and slept in Nature's ante-room. At last, a settler recommended him to go up the country, and ply from station to station in search of employment. He was sure of board and lodging, gratis; and at any rate, he might as well perish in the bush as on the banks of the Torrens. Jim followed this advice. "I had no swag, not even a blanket to carry," said he; for I had parted with these long before. When I started out of Adelaide, a few pence, a plug of tobacco, an old clay pipe, a sharp knife, and a clear conscience, were all my possessions. I sunk my name forever; I determined to forget it; and I have forgotten it—except at times. The second day, I got a berth at Grey's station, under Mount Lofty; and when he asked my name, I said Jim Walker, and Jim Walker I've been ever since."

The great event in Jim's colonial career occurred when he was a shepherd on the Glen Lyon Run, which is situated on the borders of the Tatiara district. The blacks inhabiting that locality were justly dreaded for their untameable ferocity, which civilising influences were apparently unable to counteract; the Tatiara natives were noted for their savage onslaughts on defenceless Europeans. At the time of Jim's adventure, these attacks were numerous and deadly, so that the white settlers rarely ventured abroad unarmed.

Jim was appointed to one of the out-stations; and as the country consisted principally of large open plains, he had a pretty easy time of it. The hut was snugly ensconced in a nook of the low rocky hills which formed the northern boundary of the Run. On these hills grew a few stunted she-oaks and dwarf honey-suckle trees, interspersed with dense scrub, which afforded no inconsiderable screen from the hot winds. A single water-hole—the only summer vestige of winter torrents—was near at hand, and immediately in front of the hut was the nightly folding ground.

Jim's only companion in this lonely spot was Willie, the hut-keeper, a quiet, Scotch body, with whose homely conversation Jim was fain to be content; save when one of the overseers rode over from the head station, or a bullock-driver brought down stores, or a chance wanderer passed. The latter was, however, a very rare occurrence; for the locality was much out of the usual track.

One afternoon as Jim and his trusty dog Sandie followed the sheep homeward, he was surprised at not perceiving any signs of Willie. Imagining that the hot weather had overpowered that usually vigilant personage, Jim shouted loudly for him to "wake up," and help to fold the sheep. Receiving no answer, he hurried to the hut.

At the entrance he beheld a scene which to quote his own expression "made all the blood in his body run cold." There was poor Willie, lying on his face, nearly naked, and bedabbled in gore. It was some time before Jim could muster courage to approach his old chum. When he did, he found that he was dead, and nearly cold; and a broken spear in his side betrayed that he had been murdered by the natives. The hut itself had evidently been rifled; every particle of food, the store of flour, sugar, and tea, the blankets, knives, and every useful moveable, had been carried off. But what Jim mostly regretted was, that the pistol, an old-fashioned pepper-box revolver, was missing. Fortunately, he had taken his gun in the morning to shoot a few birds, if chance offered during the day; and, therewith, all the powder and shot remaining on hand. Still, six extra shots were not to be despised; and he felt that the loss of the pistol added to his danger.

Now, all the horrors of his own position burst upon him. The head station was fully ten miles distant, and what enemies he might encounter on the road it was impossible to foretell. However, stay in the hut by himself he could not; so he resolved to fold the flock, and then to set off through the bush, to give information of the event, and obtain assistance. In pursuance of this resolution he went out, and with the aid of the dog succeeded in folding the sheep.

Hoarse with shouting—for your true bushman can do nothing without making a great uproar—Jim went to the water-hole to drink, preparatory to starting on his perilous journey. He was just rising from the recumbent position necessary to enable him to reach the water, when Sandie gave a loud growl; and, at the same instant, Jim saw the shadow of a human figure reflected in the water. Cautiously gazing around, he beheld several dusky forms moving through the thick undergrowth of the opposite range. His first impulse was to fly; but aware of the necessity of concealing his alarming discovery, he mastered his emotion, and ordering the dog to follow, walked quietly back to the hut.

Barricading the door, as well as circumstances would permit, Jim sat down on one of the old stumps which supplied the place of more convenient seats; and striving to divest his mind of untimely fear, debated within himself the propriety of attempting to elude the wily savages who were in the immediate vicinity. But the more he thought of it, the more impracticable it appeared. To run the gauntlet through an unknown number of enemies, was almost certain death. On the other hand, to remain quiescent presented only the prospect of prolonged torture, and final destruction. However, there was no help for it at present, and unable to form any decisive plan of escape, Jim did the very best thing he could; he made his little fortress as secure as possible, and awaited the result.

The hut was built in the ordinary bush-fashion, of huge, upright slabs of timber—the lower ends being inserted in the earth, and the upper nailed to strong beams. The interstices were filled with the fibrous coating of the stringy-bark-tree, daubed over with clay to render it wind-proof. The roof consisted of large sheets of bark, and the only window was an aperture about a foot square. This, Jim filled with an old sack, which the natives had probably overlooked. The chimney occupied nearly one side of the hut, and was built of sods, supported on the exterior by a closely-slabbed wall, to the height of six feet; the upper portion closing inward on all sides to the top, was composed of rough palings, or slips of bush-timber, split to a moderate thickness.

The interior formed only one room, about twelve feet long and ten feet wide, which sufficed its inmates for all purposes.

Night speedily closed in, and in darkness and silence sat Jim with the mangled corpse of the hut-keeper in one of the sleeping berths wherein he had laid it, and the dog crouching uneasily at his feet. The poor brute was with difficulty kept from howling aloud, and once or twice he ran to the door and moaned uneasily. He evidently comprehended that danger was nigh.

How long Jim remained in this state of suspense he could never be positive. It seemed like half a lifetime, he said. After a weary interval Sandie growled sullenly, and sat erect; his ears thrown back, and his eyes glistening in the darkness like balls of fire. Listening, attentively, Jim heard a faint noise as of some one treading on dry twigs. Then Jim knew that the savages were coming.

Next moment the latch of the door was cautiously lifted, and a gentle pressure made against the fastenings. With a beating heart, Jim held the dog, and by gestures forbade him to move or bark. The wonderful instinct of the animal enabled him to comprehend these mute commands, and he lay down quietly on the floor.

Soon the sack, which Jim had placed in the aperture, was noiselessly withdrawn, and a dark visage appeared in its place. And now Jim could scarcely hold the excited dog, who would fain have sprung at the intruder. But the hole was two small to permit the entrance of his foes, and feeling that every grain of powder in his scantily-furnished flask would be required, he even refrained from firing, and on the withdrawal of the intrusive head refilled the aperture with a block of wood.

Whilst so engaged the natives uttered a yell so unearthly that Jim shook with terror; indeed, he afterwards acknowledged that he was near swooning. Almost simultaneously a rush was made at the crazy old door, which nearly gave way, and it appeared certain that another such shock would burst it in. To lie still, and be worried like a badger, was not in Jim's nature. With his sheath-knife he cleared a space between the slabs sufficiently large to admit the muzzle of his gun, and in such a position as to command the approaches to the door. By the clear starlight he perceived some ten or twelve naked savages grouped in front. Again, yelling hideously, they rushed forward for another assault. As they came on, Jim levelled his piece, and fired both barrels. In all probability this saved the door, for two of the assailants fell screeching to the ground, and the shock was but slight. Sufficient damage, however, was inflicted to break the upper hinges, and force the door from its proper position.

Sandie, more valorous than prudent, sprang into the breach thus formed, and was thrust down by his master, just in time to escape a shower of spears which the enraged blacks hurled at the opening. The jeopardy from these weapons was now imminent; but, by a vigorous effort, Jim pushed the door into an erect position and re-secured it with poles hastily torn from the rough bunks, or sleeping berths, of the hut. Then, re-loading his gun; he repaired to his impromptu loophole.

He had done mischief to his wild enemies. Their wounded had been carried into the scrub, and a smaller party came warily out to reconnoitre. Creeping round the side of the hut, they came on again, but this time no yell preceded the assault. Before they reached the door Jim fired in amongst them, and again they retreated, howling like wild beasts.

After this, all was quiet for nearly an hour, and Jim even began to hope that he was rid of his persecutors. To make all sure however, he closed the little aperture more securely, shored up the door with every available piece of timber, and placed an old flour-barrel in the fireplace, to give due notice of any attempt at ingress by the way of the chimney.

Insensibly, sleep overpowered him, and he was drowsily nodding, when the loud and angry barking of the dog indicated the approach of some new peril. Starting up, Jim listened with that preternaturally acute sense of hearing, which nothing but the consciousness of danger can possibly induce. The only sound that reached him, was the rustling of leaves, such as would be produced by the wind sweeping through the trees. Sandie still barked. Repairing to the loophole Jim gazed out for information. Nothing met his gaze in that direction; but the rustling wind-like sounds approached nearer and nearer. Feeling uneasy, he cautiously opened another chink at the rear of the hut, and peered forth.

For a few seconds Jim fairly doubted the evidence of his eyesight. It was as when Birnam Wood marched toward Dunsinane. Not a living soul could he perceive, but a line of great bushes were advancing—apparently of their own accord—to the hut. Jim scraped the hole a little larger; and, when the strange procession came within range, he discharged his gun at it. Instantly all the bushes fell prostrate; and the savages emerged from their leafy covert. With a shout which blended the scream of pain and rage with the hoarse cry for vengeance, the blacks ran forward, dragging the bushes after them. In a second, the latter were piled against the walls of the hut; and a transient silence followed, during which the captive was left to speculate on the object of this maneuvre.

His doubts (if he had any) were soon resolved. A peculiar crackling sound, succeeded by a broad glare of light, perceptible through the crannies of the frail tenement, informed him, that the terrors of fire had been brought to bear against him. The natives had been into the ranges in search of dry boughs; and with these, mingled with the inflammable resinous branches of the gum-trees, they now proposed to burn him out of his shelter. Bitterly he regretted not having taken advantage of their short absence to effect his escape. It was now too late. For a short space he remained in a state of stupefaction,—utterly overwhelmed by the increased horrors of his situation. As the flames caught the dry combustible wall, and bark roof, he deemed himself utterly lost; and it was only by a violent effort that he, at length, shook off the benumbing influence of the intense terror which had seized upon him.

A little reflection convinced him, that in one bold effort lay his sole chance of preservation. Reconnoitering the premises, he observed that the flames were confined to the rear and roof of the hut. Through the chink in the front wall, he perceived the savages lying in wait near the door; but, occupying such a position as to be out of the reach of firearms. "They thought to smoke me out, as they do wombats," said Jim, "and to spear me as I crawled out of my den; but, I determined to have another trial for it, and if I died, to die, like a man, in the open air."

Seizing a small bar of tough wood, he inserted it between the blazing slabs at the rear, and found that they readily yielded to his efforts. The dense smoke now filled the hut, and the burning embers from the roof fell around him in showers. But, regardless of all, save life itself, he stripped off his blue serge-frock,—an article which serves the bushman for shirt, vest, coat, and paletot, all in one—and carefully wrapped it round the lock of the gun. He then, by a vigorous effort, detached two slabs from their upper fastenings, and stealthily drew them within the hut;—the slight noise attending this operation being disguised by the cracking of the burning timber. Gazing through the surrounding belt of fire and smoke he discovered that none of his enemies were in view; all of them—as he had anticipated—being collected on the opposite side of the hut. Now was the moment for escape. One danger yet remained to be obviated. How to still the furious barking of the dog he knew not; yet this would at once acquaint the savages with his escape; when instant pursuit, and death would inevitably be the result. It was, therefore, absolutely necessary to secure Sandie in the hut. "I could not bear the thoughts of doing this," Jim used to say, when relating this incident; "it seemed so cruel to the poor, faithful brute.". Still, secrecy and silence were indispensible; the first great law of nature—self-preservation—crushed the generous impulses of sentiment; and the dog was sacrificed to secure his master's safety. Desirous, however, of affording the animal at least a chance of escape, Jim tied him up with a cotton handkerchief only—in the hope that his exertions would enable him to free himself before the entry of the savages.

This done, Jim took up his gun, and stepped out through the flames. As he emerged, one of the natives glided round the corner; and, surprised by the intended victim's unexpected appearance, stood for a moment irresolute. Before he could speak or move, Jim felled him to the earth with a blow of his fist; and, without waiting for the result, darted off, under cover of the dense smoke, for the ranges.

He had surmounted the first tier, and was crossing the valley beyond, when the outcries of the blacks proclaimed that his flight had been discovered. The hope of yet saving life lent new wings to his feet; and, at any rate, he had considerably the start of his pursuers. Before he had proceeded very far, something came dashing through the scrub behind him, and he turned to confront the expected foe. To his great delight it was the dog.

Onward sped the two fugitives, the man and the dog. Ten bush-miles lay between them and safety, and the pursuers were light of foot, and fleet of limb. Jim had not tasted food since mid-day, he was fatigued with toil and watching, and suffered much pain from numerous burns on his arms and shoulders. But hunger, thirst, weariness, and pain, were all temporarily obliterated by the necessity of extreme exertion, and, as mile after mile was passed without any evidence of pursuit, hope—which never deserts the brave—grew stronger in the fugitive's heart.

Although no indication of the natives were apparent, Jim was too well acquainted with their nature and habits to relax his speed. Wily as serpents, and as noiseless too, they might be close at hand, yet invisible. Onward, therefore he flew; life was in front; death near behind. How far, or during what time, he continued his flight, Jim could never tell. He believed that he was approaching the head station, yet nowhere could he discern the traces of any human habitation. At length, fatigued and breathless, he was compelled to pause. Had the savages been yelling at his heels, he could not have proceeded.

He sought the shelter of a rocky mound, near at hand, and lay down in its dark shadow, intending to rest for a brief interval only. But he unwarily sank into a deep sleep.

From that dangerous slumber, Jim Walker would probably never have awoke in this world, but for the faithful guardianship of his dog Saudie. Aroused by the barking of that vigilant compaunion, he opened his eyes just as the grey light of morning was spreading over the horizon. Above his head the rock rose perpendicularly to the height of about fourteen feet. Over the margin appeared a human head, which caught his startled gaze as he awoke. Instinctively he recognized the presence of his pursuers. The savages had tracked him to his hiding-place.

Springing to his feet, he darted forward with renewed velocity; and as he did so, a spear whizzed by close to him. Jim felt that he had throwu away another chance of life by halting in the open country. Shelter there was none; for the track of flight lay now over a treeless plain. Again and again spears glanced by him, and, looking around, he saw that he was pursued by three savages, one of whom was considerably in advance of the other. With set teeth and straining muscles, the hunted man pressed on, desperation and agony in his soul. The savages rapidly gained upon him; and, although a stern chase is always a long chase, nothing could prevent their closing with him, before many minutes elapsed.

Suddenly he turned and fired at the nearest black. The shot was fatal. With a loud screech, the savage leaped up into the air, and fell to the earth, mortally wounded.

Almost immediately thereupon, a faint sound, as of the bleating of sheep, reached the fugitive's ear. He was near assistance. He strove to shout aloud, but his voice failed. A low hill was before him, and in the valley beyond was the home-station, could he but reach which his life was safe. The space between was short, but in that space were crowded unnumbered hopes and fears. The savages were fast nearing him. Once more facing round, he fired, and in the excitement of the moment, missed. It was his last shot, and now in his speed lay the last remaining chance of escape.

He scarcely dared to hope, yet mechanically continued to fly. A thousand wandering thoughts of happy days, of boyish sports beneath an English sky, fond reminiscences of home, and recollections of a mother's love—a mother too early lost; passed with wondrous rapidity before his mental vision, he said, in the brief agonizing moments of that fearful struggle for life.

He reached the hill unharmed, and had accomplished nearly half the ascent, when a spear entered his shoulder, and threw him, stunned and bleeding, to the ground. The next moment the savages were upon him.

Saudie, faithful to the last, flew at the throat of the nearest foe, and forced him back to the earth. Frightened at this novel assailant, the fellow shrieked for help, and with a single blow of his tomahawk, his comrade laid the honest brute senseless and disabled. But the temporary diversion in Jim's favor, saved Jim's life.

As the savages turned from the dog to their human victim, Bang! bang! came two shots from the summit of the hill, and several white men rushed forward to the rescue. The hunters now became the hunted; and I need scarcely add, that neither of them escaped.

The last shots fired by Jim had fortunately been heard by a hepherd employed at the head station; apprehensive of danger, he immediately aroused the other men. Little time was lost in dressing, for the simple reason that bushmen seldom undress; and starting in the direction of the hill, they arrived just in time to deliver Jim from the hands of his enemies.

The spear-wound in Jim's shoulder speedily healed; and Sandie, though long despaired of, eventually recovered from the effects of the savage's tomahawk. A perceptible limp always remained to bear witness of his courageous attack; Jim was right in saying, that Sandie's lame leg was as honorable to the noble dog as scars to a soldier. He was of little use afterwards as a sheep dog; but Jim would not part with him. He elevated him to the rank of a special pensioner, and never ate himself until he had fed the companion of that eventful night.

I may add, that a party sent over to the old hut found it burnt to the ground, and all the sheep driven off. With the assistance of neighboring settlers, the greater part of the flock was ultimately recovered; but not until after many days hunting for them, and several sanguinary encounters with the Tatiara blacks, whereiu more than one European received wounds.

SCENE IN PALESTINE.

I WAS traveling over Anti-Lebanon. It was a bright summer day, and near noon. Weary and way-worn, I rode down from a bare mountain ridge into the wild and beautiful valley of Hebron, and dismounted beside a little fountain, under the "shadow of a great rock." A group of some fifteen or twenty shepherds were there, too, resting during the heat of the day, and their flocks, amounting to several thousand sheep and goats, filled nearly the whole of the valley. At first I was greatly annoyed by the too near approach of both men and animals; but when the time came to lead the flocks away to pasture again, I watched their motions with intense interest.

The shepherds arose, went into the middle of that dense mass of animals, and then separating, walked away slowly in different directions. As they went each kept uttering a peculiar cry or call. The sheep heard, and they too began to separate one from the other. I observed the whole mass was agitated as if the sheep and goats had been driven thither by some unseen power. Gradually they form a series of dense, moving columns, following in the footsteps of the shepherds, and drawn after them with their voices. I also observed that while each shepherd wound his way through the united flocks, some of the animals fled at his approach, frightened at his voice, others hastened toward him, "for they knew his voice." In a short time they were led off, and the fountain was completely deserted, not a sheep or goat ventured to lag behind.

Then the calls of the shepherds were heard echoing from rock and cliff, now loud and clear, now dying away in the distance; while the flocks were seen, obedient to the calls, following in long, distinct streams the guides whom alone they knew and trusted. As I sat there gazing with mingled wonder and pleasure on that strange and instructive scene, another beautiful Scripture illustration was realized before my eyes. One shepherd led his flock, by a zig-zag path, up the almost perpendicular bank of the glen. Behind it two young lambs trotted along at the feet of their mother. At first they frisked about and jumped lightly from stone to stone; but soon they began to fall behind. The poor little things cried piteously when the path became steeper and the rocks higher, and the flocks more and more distant. The mother cried too, running back and forth—now lingering behind, now hastening on before, as if to wile them upward.

It was in vain. The ascent was too much for their limbs. They stopped trembling on the shelving cliff, and cried; the mother stopped and cried by their side. I thought they certainly would be lost; and I saw the great eagles that soared in circles round the cliffs far overhead, sweeping lower and lower as if about to pounce upon their prey. But no! The plaintive cries of distress had already reached the ear of the good shepherd. Mounting a rock, he looked down and saw the helpless little ones. A minute and he was standing by them; then taking them up in his arms, he put them one on each side, in his bosom, in the ample folds of his coat, which was bound round the waist with a girdle.

The lambs made no attempt to run away from him. They seemed to know what he was going to do when he lifted them in his arms; and the little creatures lay there with their heads out as contentedly as an infant in its mother's bosom, while the shepherd scaled the dizzy heights again, and took his place at the head of the flock. It may be easily imagined with what deep interest I have ever since read the beautiful words of Isaiah—"He shall feed His flock like a shepherd. He shall gather the lambs with His arm and carry them in His bosom."

A SHOT from a three-pounder Whitworth gun has been known to travel a distance of five and a half miles before grazing.

IT is proposed to construct six lines of horse railroads over the suburban parts of London.

"CARISSIMO."

Just beyond the Julian Gate,
Stands an old and ruined seat,
With some Latin and a date,
'Neath a broken statue's feet.
There, from out a battered mask,
Once a fountain used to flow,
There by day the lizards bask,
There by night the lovers go.

There I heard them over night,
Billing, cooing—all alone;
I was hidden out of sight,
Where the banks slide sheerly down—
Sitting on an olive's root,
In a dream of love and pain,
Eating Memory's bitter fruit—
Living the old times again

Little Nina's voice it was,
Whispering "Carissimo"—
Once I did the same—alas!
That was twenty years ago.
'Twas the very voice and tone
Once her mother used to have,
I could not repress a groan,
Thinking she is in her grave.

Then they heard me, found me there—
Nina fell upon my breast,
Kissed my cheek—but I forbear—
You who know me, know the rest.
They are happy—from the tree
Falls the fruit when fully grown.
She is happy to be free—
I am wretched left alone. —W. W. Story.

IN ABSENCE.

Watch her kindly, stars—
From the sweet protecting skies,
Follow her with tender eyes;
Look so lovingly that she Cannot choose but think of me;
Watch her kindly, stars!

Soothe her sweetly, night—
On her eyes o'er wearied press
The tired lids with light caress;
Let that shadowy hand of thine
Even in her dreams seem mine;
Soothe her sweetly, night!

Wake her gently, morn—
Let the notes of early birds,
Seem like love's melodious words;
Every pleasant sound my dear,
When she stirs from sleep, should bear;
Wake her gently, morn!

Kiss her softly, winds—
Softly, that she may not miss
Any sweets, accustomed bliss;
On her lips, her eyes, her face,
Till I come to take your place;
Kiss and kiss her, winds!

A "ROMAN [FRENCH] FATHER."

THE principal in a celebrated criminal trial which years ago attracted great interest, died day before yesterday. He was a man in easy circumstances. He was a widower. He had an only son. He owed twenty thousand dollars to a gentleman, who came to his house to receive the debt. He lived in the environs of Paris, some distance from any other house. He paid the debt in the presence of his son, giving one hundred bank notes of one thousand francs each. The creditor remained some time after receiving the money, supped at the house, and it was late before he quitted his debtor to reach the last carriage for Paris. He had not gone five hundred yards from the house when he was assailed by an armed man, who ordered him as he valued life to deliver the money about him. An order supported by a pistol rarely falls idly on the ear of an unarmed man. He surrendered his money. He went to a neighboring inn and stayed the night. He was sure the highwayman was none other than his debtor's son. As soon as day broke he went to his debtor's house and told him his suspicions. A violent nervous tremor seized the debtor; in a voice almost inaudible from emotion he invited the creditor to go up stairs with him. They entered his son's bedchamber. The young man was asleep. His boots and pantaloons were covered with mud. On the chimney-piece were two double barrelled pistols. In his coat pocket was the creditor's purse containing the one hundred bank bills of one thousand francs. The father grew pale as death at this discovery, took one of the pistols and blew his son's brains out as he lay sleeping. He delivered himself to justice, was tried, found guilty, and sentenced to the hulks for life. The crown commuted the sentence and after two years imprisonment released the unhappy father. He lived all alone, seeing nobody, receiving nobody. His abode was in one of the most sequestered streets of the city. He never quitted the house except at night, and then he walked on the most deserted quays. He never smiled, scarcely ever spoke except to give orders to the old char-woman who cleared his room and prepared his meals. Death was no unwelcome visitor when he ended that weary sorrow-laden life.—SPIRIDION in the Boston Gazette.

LITERARY GLEANINGS AND GOSSIP.

"REMINISCENCES OF AN ERRATIC GENIUS."

THE infirmities, and more repulsive idiosyncrasies of Edgar A. Poe's character, have been sufficiently portrayed with abundant particularity by his biographers, who seem, indeed, to have been so zealous and so conscientious in the discharge of what they doubtless conceived to be their duty, as not to have permitted the slightest circumstance tending to prove the poet a moral monster, to escape their vigilance.

The Rev. Dr. Grisworld, in his biographical sketch, punctiliously records every five dollars that the needy and improvident man of genius ever borrowed of him, in which he follows the precedent of Amos Cottle in his "Reminiscences of Coleridge." But he improves upon the example of the poetically inclined bookseller, by publishing all poor Poe's begging letters, by means of which these paltry loans were procured—letters which show most painfully to what an extent the writer had become demoralized by the pressure of his necessities. Even N P. Willis, who might, one would imagine, have been able to take a more intelligent and charitable view of such a character as that of Poe, felt called upon to assume an austerely virtuous tone of high moral disapprobation, when he came to write of him. The fashion having been thus set by those who were Poe's "best friends" when he was living, and who assumed the duties of his biographers after his death, what wonder that every scribbler who pens book-notices for the newspapers religiously follows the tradition, and considers it incumbent upon him to deliver moral lectures on the poet's personal character whenever it becomes necessary to make mention of his literary productions. One witness, however, has recently come forward, in the person of Mrs. Weiss, to furnish a few lights, feeble ones it must be admitted, to relieve the gloom of the portrait. Mrs. Weiss seems to belong to that class of sentimental ladies, very rare in our day and steadily becoming rarer, who entertain an undue and almost idolatrous reverence for mere literary genius: and this amiable enthusiasm has probably tended in some degree to color her impressions of the author of the Raven. She thus describes her first introduction to him:

"We lived then in our own sweet cottage-home in Virginia, and this was in August, when the place was a bower of vines and roses, and cool, deep shadows brooded about the house and through the pleasant rooms; and the corn-fields that summer waved in their rich and luxuriant beauty almost up to the door, like a miniature forest, shutting us in from the world with a delightful sense of quiet seclusion. I remember it all, because he noticed and enjoyed it.

How well, too, I remember my introduction to the great poet! A shy and diffident girl toward strangers, it was blushing, and almost trembling that I entered the parlor where he awaited me, accompanied by his sister, Miss Rosalie Poe, the adopted daughter of Mrs McKenzie, a near neighbor of ours. As he rose to meet me, my first impression was that he was a gentleman—pre-eminently a gentleman—for nothing could surpass the polish, courtesy and refinement of his whole manner and appearance, both then and afterward I saw him. This, I said, was the first impression produced at the first glance, as I entered; but when he advanced, and I stood face to face with him, my sole idea was of his eyes. Such eyes—large, deep, and luminous, with a strange depth and light—and yet, withal, I thought, was a something of subtlety in their expression. I have seen other such eyes.

I had but little conversation with the poet on this, our first interview. As I observed, I was shy and retiring, and shrank rather into the background, leaving my mother and sister to entertain him, while I was quite content to steal a glance now and then at the poet, or to observe the wonderful play of his countenance. There was at one moment a singular softness and gentleness in his expression; while the next, the eyes would assume a cold, icy look, and his thick mustache curl with as near approach to a sneer as his perfect good-breeding would admit; and this last was when speaking of certain person whom I knew he accounted his enemies. On the other hand, I was struck with the warmth and apparent depth of feeling and gratitude with which he spoke of the kind reception he had met with from certain former friends and acquaintances in Richmond, chief among whom were Mr. Robert Sully, the artist (nephew of Mr. Thomas Sully) and Mrs. Julia Cabell, sister of Mrs. General Scott. Mr. Sully, though himself, not professing to have many friends for whom he entertained any great regard, spoke always very affectionately of Poe."

Speaking of the misanthropy and cynicism attributed to him, Mrs. Weiss says:

"I never saw in him any trace of that bitterness, gloom, and misanthropy of which he has so often been accused. On the contrary, whatsoever he may have been at other times and in other scenes, he was always, when with us, gentle, warm-hearted, and cheerful, even to gayety. One very striking trait, which we all observed, was his gratitude for any little attention, kindness or evidence of sympathy. He seemed never to forget a kindness, as his enemies say that he never forgot an injury. Certainly, Mr. Poe appeared a happy and most amiable man, on those pleasant evenings at our home."

The sevants, themselves, seemed to share the reverence of their mistress for "a poet." Uncle Dick, a venerable contraband, is described as discoursing to the sable society of the kitchen in the following strain:

"Well, for once in my life I'se been igstinguished! I'se waited upon the great Mr. Poe, the pote, at tea, and picked up his pocket-handkecher, and wiped the dust off his boots when he lust come, and he said 'thanky, my man!' Them dusty roads ain't fit for potes to walk on. A pote oughter have a chariot and four, and me to drive 'em!"

The poet having been induced to give a parlor recitation of "The Raven," his colored admirers gathered in force at the doorways and open windows, and seemed to enjoy the performance hugely. Mrs. Weiss says:

"The negroes, as is well known, are extremely susceptible to the influence of all musical and harmonious sounds, and this most musical poem, most musically and solemnly recited, produced upon them an effect which did not soon wear away. Some days after, my maid came with a petition from the cook waiter that 'young misses' would be so good as to read 'The Raven' for them, and to this reading they all came, and listened with the most solemn attention, firmly believing that every word of the poem was 'a true story.' One youth inquired 'if that ar raven was raly gwine to live forever?' and wondered that Mr. Poe 'did not take a broomstick and get him off dat door and out of the room in no time!' These criticism and expressions or sympathy, afterward repeated to the poet, seemed to afford him much pleasure."

Mrs. Weiss sums up her reminiscences as follows:

"What the faults were of Mr. Poe's character, I can judge only from what I have read. As I knew him, he was a most amiable man, a gentleman in all respect; refined, considerate, generous and warm-hearted; with many noble aspirations and impulses, probably not expressed to many as freely as to me and the few who could understand him. For young as I was, I felt instinctively how much of good and noble there was in that nature; while his genius won my admiration and respect, and his loneliness and friendliness my warm interest, as must ever be in the hearts of the young.

I have in my possession a miniature crayon portrait of Edgar A. Poe, copied by myself, most carefully, from a daguerreotype taken a few days before he left Richmond. It is pronounced a perfect likeness of the poet, and among the cherished mementoes of my friends, there are but few which I prize beyond it."

SYMPATHY WITH NATURE.

The London Saturday Review has an article under the above title, which seems to be designed as an counterblast against Swinburnism in literature. At least, we understand the following passage to refer to the naughty poet:

"A school of younger men has arisen—nor do they lack a consecrating bard—who persuade themselves that sympathy with nature means, and means exclusively, a fiery revelling in her sensuous delights, added to an abject grovelling before her sterner mood. What they call sympathy is, in fact, a mixture of a drunken fondness for bright colors and heavy scents, with a dismal conviction that these are only meant to befool us while we are being crushed under the feet of malignant, ruthless gods. In time, the thought of the malignity and ruthlessness becomes as attractive to them as the joys which they frantically purvey for their senses. Among other reasons for this is the deep consolation which reflections upon the malignity of fate bring to minds inflamed with spite and detestation against their kind. The man whose belief never goes beyond the gratification of his own senses cannot fail to despise and hate all who arrange the objects of life on wider principles. He likes to gloat over the cruelties of destiny, because, though visiting himself too, they will curse these objects of his hatred, and repay them for the vile sin of exalting reason, instead of feasting and inflaming their senses. It pleases him to reflect that the gods are 'too great to appease, too high to appal, too far to call,' and he is willing to defy them for his own part, for the glee which they provide for him in the distresses laid upon his neighbors. In such cases love of nature is only another name for hatred of the human race."

The essayist pursues his theme in the following strain:

"The new sympathy with nature, so far as it means antipathy to man and contempt for him, is one of the most violently explosive social forces that have ever been discovered If the idea of self-denial is to be expunged from the list of the things worthy of contemplation, and the practice of self-denial from the list of things worthy of cultivation, then society must inevitably fall to pieces. If all men and women are to insist on drinking to the dregs the cup of every desire of their animal nature, without a thought of the effects which may flow from their gratification, then it is plain that the most of the business of the world will come to a standstill. People will have no time to labor, and they will have no inclination either; for, self-control being a pale-blooded and trumpery virtue, there can be no reason why the idle should not help himself to whatever he may want from the stores of the industrious There can be no more deadly and baneful influence than one which teaches men to prefer anything under the sun to the happiness of the whole mass of the sensient creatures Beauty truth, justice, every virtue, every pursuit, every taste—they are all good because, and just in so far as, they augment this stock. Whatever makes a man indifferent to the extension of happiness and the corresponding curtailment of the too wide domains of pain and misery, is doing the worst ill that can possibly be done to his whole character. After all, the end of everything is living. Conduct is at once the aim and the test of all our learning and thinking and striving. The man lives most perfectly whose most constant happiness is found in the consciousness that, in doing the best that he can for himself, he is also doing the best that he can for every being that is capable of having good done to it Supposing it were true, as fiery poets of despair are never weary of crying aloud to us, that Nature hates us, and that the gods are never found by our prayers. Is not this all the more reason why we should be as stern and implacable as they say, but at least she has been kind in implanting the capacity for pity in the souls of the creatures she has abandoned. The single boon may in some sort atone for the lack of all other good gifts, if there be such a lack. Granting that we are left alone on the face of the earth, does it follow, or is it reasonable to suppose, that the only thing for us to do is to borrow all our motives and mould all our passions from the examples of tigers and tigresses? Everybody admits, it may be said, that pity is a duty, and insist on a truism. But truisms need to be repeated in the face of a mischievous parodox. They are only useless when everybody concedes them. An evil spirit has arisen which scoffs at pity, inviting us, instead of helping, to stand easily by and laugh at the great human comedy."

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS,

BOUCICAULT'S latest drama, The Long Strike, was produced on Monday last; and has been played to crowded houses every evening during the week. The plot of this drama has been published so often by various papers in this city, that it is needless to give a synopsis. Every audience, that has witnessed this play, has most unequivocally endorsed it as fully worthy of its author, Dion Boucicault, the most perfect master of the art of dramatic composition living. The Long Strike will not retain its hold on the stage in America, as long as many other productions of Boucicault, inasmuch as it was written especially for the benefit of the manufacturing classes of England. The Alta appears to consider that if Mr. John McCullough, who is a good and painstaking actor, is not afforded an opportunity to carry off the honors of every play in which he appears, there is something wrong in the play. In consequence of this desire to "help" Mr. McCullough, it says on Wednesday:

"Witnessing The Long Strike a second time only confirms the judgment already pronounced—it is unartistic, and beneath the great reputation of Boucicault: he makes the sending of a telegram of thrilling interest, and spoils a scene where a man is tried for life. The nearer the hero is made to resemble the Manchester workman in his appearance and manner the less likely is he to win applause or commendation. Mr. McCullough did well, but Jem Starkie is not a character in which to 'show off,' especially as he has less than six lines to say in the last act."

The drama is pronounced "unartistic" solely because, for the purpose of introducing the very best and most thrilling scene in the play—where a dispatch by telegraph is made the means of saving a man's life—a minor character "Johnny Reilly," played by George Pardey, is in the last act brought into such prominence as entirely to overshadow the rather mild hero, "Jem Starkie," played rather more mildly than necessary by Mr. McCullough, the Alta's only pet. We are quite sure that Mr. McCullough is too modest a gentleman, and has too much knowledge of his profession to have in any way prompted the inconsiderate and unpractised critic of the Alta, to thus enter a public complaint against Boucicault, because he, (Mr. McCullough) enacting the lover of the heroine, has "less than six lines to say in the last act." The Long Strike is a very artistic performance, and the sending of a telegram is the most thrillingly interesting scene in the play. Those who have, after witnessing Miss Alice Kingsbury's impersonations many times, become tired of her—just as children sometimes get tired of candy or other nice things—and have expressed an opinion that she is capable of playing "nothing but Fanchon," must reconsider this opinion after witnessing her impersonation of "Jane Learoyd." In this character she is all that could be desired; she plays the pathetic parts beautifully, and delivers the impassioned passages, not in the tone of a tragedy Queen, but just as they should be spoken by an uneducated factory-girl. The Lancashire dialect she has been unable to learn, but as it would be as Chaldaic to nine-tenths of the audience, perhaps this is not to be regretted. Mr. Edwards' impersonation of "Noah Learoyd" is one of the most finished pieces of acting ever presented on the California stage, and when he—as well as the ill used Mr. McCullough—is entirely cut out of the acting in the last scene, he still retains the sympathy of the audience by looking the broken-hearted, distracted old man. George Pardey, as "Johnny Reilly," an Irish sailor, threw himself into the part with such enthusiasm that the most severe critic must excuse him for being too noisy. His conception of the character was, on the whole, far better, we will venture to say, than that of two-thirds of those who have preceded him in it. The audience saw that he was in earnest, forget he was acting, and applauded vehemently. In a melodramatic play like The Long Strike, every actor is allowed to take his part and make the best he can of it. Few could have made more fun out of that of "Johnny Reilly," than did Mr. Pardey. He richly deserves the call before the curtain, which he always receives. Boucicault knew what he was about when writing this play; he was well aware, when he introduced "Johnny Reilly" in the last scene, that the "call" must come to his share, and not to that of the two characters who are objects of interest to the audience in the first and second acts. Mr. Anderson plays "Moneypenny" rather extravagantly, but then he makes everyone laugh, and, possibly, if he did not play the character according to his first conception, it would not be half so amusing. Harry Jackson has a little bit of acting to do as "Captain Wolfe," and does it very well. Many such captains as Harry Jackson represents, sail from the Mersey every month. H. D. Thompson was not very well made up for "Richard Radley," who is spoken of as "Young Radley;" he looked too old, and acted the part too villainously. "Radley" was only a rather fast young snob, not a villain. W. Barry was very funny in "The Gentleman from Headquarters." E.C. Melville gave the very best representation of an English policeman ever seen on this stage, and even on the first night all engaged in the piece, filled their respective parts well. The scenery is very finely painted; and the piece is put on the stage in a most creditable manner. This attractive play will be repeated this afternoon and evening. On Monday, Little Barefoot will be produced, with Miss Alice Kingsbury in the character of "Amrie." On Tuesday, the play of The Orange Girl will be produced, and will afford Miss Kingsbury an opportunity of appearing in a new role.

On Wednesday evening, Miss Amy Stone and Mr. H. F. Stone made their first appearance in California, at Maguire's Academy of Music, in the play of The Pearl of Savoy. In the first two acts, Miss Stone failed to make a favorable impression on the audience in the character of "Marie;" she read the part badly, and acted it flippantly. She sang several songs, but did not succeed in pleasing our critical San Francisco public, who have heard so many really good singers on the stage. In the third act, Miss Stone proved if she was not a first class vocalist, she was certainly a fine dancer, and gained a most enthusiastic encore, by her execution of a Savoyard dance. In the same scene, Mr. H. F. Stone, who, in the part of "Pierrot," had evinced very little talent as a comedian, proved that as a clog-dancer he is immense, and was rewarded by immense applause for the clever manner in which he performed a wooden-shoe dance. Miss Stone appeared to the best advantage in the fourth act, when she becomes insane after meeting her father; in this scene she displayed considerable power. George Panncefort played "Father Lanstalat" very well; Miss Kate Denin was extremely clever in the comic part of "Chanchon," displaying a degree of comic talent for which few had given her credit, and the play was, as a whole, tolerably well performed. The quartette on the first night, sang very badly. The Pearl of Savoy was repeated on Thursday night. Last night, The Hidden Hand was produced.

At the Metropolitan Theater, the business has been light during the week. The Sheep's Foot was withdrawn on Friday, and the ballet of the Vivandiere and the pantomime of the Magic Trumpet were performed on the occasion of the benefit of the California Grenadiers. A large audience assembled and the performance went off satisfactorily. To-night, pantomime of Raoul; or the Magic Star, will be produced. We fear that the public will miss the beautiful singing of the Misses Emma and Clelia Howson, and the fine quartette from the Twelve, and will long for some performance which will delight the ear as well as the eye. Pantomimes are very well for a short time; but such pieces as the Sheep's Foot in which the audience can easily follow the story of the play, and at the same time listen to really first-class vocal singing, are very likely to gain a more enduring popularity.

The third annual masquerade ball of the Eureka Social Club, took place at Platt's Hall on Thursday evening. The hall was filled with masquers, many of whom sustained their assumed characters with much skill. Mr. Saulberg of the Hebrew Observer, carried off the prize destined for the best male mask, by his clever impersonation of a "Japanese." To Miss Summerfield's "Fanchon," was awarded the lady's prize. The ball was one of the most successful of its kind ever given in this city.

On Thursday evening, Mrs. Lizzie Parker Northrup will give her annual concert at Platt's Hall. Mrs. Northrup will be assisted by the best available vocal and instrumental talent in this city. TOUCHSTONE.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS.—The beautiful weather which we are enjoying at present, causes crowds to flock daily to this delightful spot, to roam through the shady walks, visit the fine zoological collection and examine the rare plants in the conservatories.

MRS. LAURA CUPPY.—Thousands of person in this city, who have listened with delight to the talented lectures of Mrs. Cuppy, will be rejoiced to hear that the report that she has accepted a six-months' engagement in Sacramento, is untrue. Mrs. Cuppy's engagement in the Capital city, where she now lectures every Sunday evening to crowded houses, will terminate in a few weeks; and she will then resume her popular Sunday evening lectures at Maguire's Opera House, in this city.

THE ANATOMICAL MUSEUM.—Since the establishment of this museum, the rising generation in this city have devoted themselves to the interesting study of anatomy.

LETTER FROM MRS. GENERAL GRANT.—The following letter, addressed to the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine Company, by Mrs. General Grant, relates the experience of ladies everywhere, who have these celebrated machines in their families:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 4, 1866.

"Grover & Baker S. M. Co.:

GENTLEMEN—It affords me great pleasure to bear witness to the excellence of the Family Sewing Machine manufactured by your Company. I have had one of them in my family for some two years; and from what I know of its workings, and from the testimony of many of my friends who use the same, I can hardly see how anything could be more complete, or give better satisfaction.

"The machine I have is one of the most elegant I have ever seen, and was presented to me by friends, who purchased it at the Sanitary Fair, in 1864.

"Very truly yours, etc. MRS. U. S. GRANT."

[For the Californian.]

OF THE POET AND HIS GOLDEN CLIME.

"The poet in a golden clime was born,
With golden stars above—"

In whatever clime the poet is happily born, he usually finds not the gold of it; and if his wealth of song adds not to his grosser treasury of scrip, under an ill-stared sky, it is his lot to desert that sweet province of enchantment and fall upon ruder prose, like a Philistine. Lawless necessity is his bane—and there is no margin here for the poet. Yet the poet is happy enough, and for such happiness as his, should look for some shades of sorrow. The poet is his own source of pleasure. In what other fairer world may he have sojourned, that the glittering dust of memory should cover him with the lustre and hallo of unpremeditated joy? Half of his fancies may be mysterious recollections, whose roots he cannot trace, but only the richest soils could nourish them. Some flaming sword of fate may have driven that melodious soul; for how small a sin of feeding upon delicious fruits, forth from the gardens of Paradise. But let us not dangerously pythogorize!

The poet is privileged to long much. To desire and long for, is a certain sort of pleasure, and not without some consolation, since hope is profitable—and hope stimulates us even to dubious desires and hopeless longings.

Aspiration is the dream-ladder of the poet. On it, his thoughts like angels, are ever ascending, and the invisible spirits of renown and honor, touching its golden rounds console him, often with their visitations.

What we have not seen, we think the best of—for imagination flatters everything. So if the poet be country born, he looks wistfully towards the smoky cloud that blots heaven above the town. While the lean attic rhymer, scouring his dull skylight with frenzied eye, feeds in the green pastures of his fancy, and drinks heaven-distilled draughts from the smooth flowing water-brooks that skirt them.

The shrill sweet piping of a quail heard sometimes in city-cages, is as cheering as slips of sunlight in a cellar. But the imprisoned fancy doth long to climb that golden stair and escape the gloom, now more oppressive since it is revealed by contrast, and the mind is led away by the clear note of that mountain bird, till it is loth to return again into the city-dusts. We endure much unconciously and become calloused in enduring—till finally, we give small thought to our privations and self-inflicted hardships. But the delicate and subtle steel of the well applied lance, may penetrate the rough surface, and pierce the hidden core; as this rural voice has skill to charm and awaken the tenderest and the most beautiful emotions of the heart.

Nature is the skillfullest physician, after all; for in wounding us, she doth apply her balsams and healing oils; as this sunbeam is pure and healthful, and the bird's voice full of hope and cheer, and sweet indurance.

My poet by a happy chance being born to a birthright, bartered it not for pottage; but sought God among the hills, there to eat manna and drink of miraculous springs, bountiful as the widow's cruse, and made liberal by the same providence. Having feasted he wrote me thus:

"Let me not seek to disguise this truth; my joy and whole delight is versing. It is as a honey morsel forever upon my tongue. A savory dew upon my lips, else dry and fevered, and a perfume and odor beyond words, always to my peace and edification. * * *"

Happy poet whose wings are strong enough to lift thee above care, for so is thy golden clime discovered to thee. I think the poet should be pardoned some show of pride. I have much sympathy for that vain bird that plumed gorgeously, struttered among daws. But those daws had none, and straight way spoiled his beauty. It were a stupid fowl that couldn't see his own superiority in such a crowd, and surely dignity need not be sacrificed to circumstance. As well might Israfeel flash his silver sandals in a pigeon wing; shriek through his nose, or twang a banjo, if he alighted among roisterers. "Israfeel, who's heart-strings are a lute, and who has the sweetest voice of all God's creatures."

Again my poet sent me these leaves gathered from his summer groves:

"I have surprised myself with my own verse," he writes, "and may be pleased with myself, for this. If I say my best verse is not good, I do not humiliate myself; I insult the divine elements of inspiration. And I trust my poorest verse were good, did I not mar it in transcription.

Then he adds in those last hasty lines of a letter, set slant wise, and sometimes standing on their heads—but usually strong enough to survive the situation: "If I could dwell here forever, all were well; but I am even now summoned."

True, my poet, that "if" is an unsafe drawbridge to innumerable fair prospects; still the portcullis "but" is ever ready to shut down upon our ventures.

I find a later oozing from the pen of my poet, when his summer was over and gone—this is it: "Upon again returning into town, I find, so thoroughly successful hath dame Nature been, my soul seems to have given over to her fair and beautiful enticements; and to have burst its cell and fallen about on every side, in many tendrils and flowering boughs. Now, at once, they are frostbitten tendrils, and the flowers are fast fading. I seem as a plant that hath extended its roots in all directions, and hath finely flourished, but is again compressed into the unwholesome jar, and there cramped out of all pleasurable growth and defrauded of just nourishment."

As for my poet, do not doubt that his birth was fortunate; and being born, he seems nearest to enjoying his golden clime in the voluptuous grain-fields beyond the suburbs—that undiscovered country, almost an Eden, within a mile of your townfolk.

Inspiration is at least second-hand, and book-begotten in the packed city; and if some portion of our country be set apart for pasturing poets, for strengthing thought, and nourishing revery, let me, in loving kindness, put the mite these notes may bring me toward its treasury and perpetual fund.

Lastly, my poet, from the smoke and cobwebs of some spidery corner, cries fitfully—he is low in the socket now: "If poetry indeed be of heavenly birth, (and I deem it not unlikely) then the secluded shepherd, the scaler of the mountain peak, and those dwellers upon the high places, should get most of this sweet benison. For may it not descend in vivid and glorious flashes, even as it were, in rivers of hasty flame—charging that readiest conductor with its divine fire."

How shall so delicate a plant survive the town? Think of poor David Gray—London slew him! Do the gods love them most in cities? I think rather it is the gods that pitty them to death. CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

RISTORI HAS MET with an unprecedented reception in Chicago. Seats could only be purchased after standing two hours in procession.

TO CONTRACTORS AND BUILDERS.—W. O. Breyfogle, No. 26 California street, a few doors below Davis, is now prepared to furnish builders and contractors with sash, doors, blinds and shutters from his manufactory, on most reasonable terms. Encourage home industry where you can have your order filled cheaper than the imported articles cost.

WITHOUT MEDICINE, mesmeric jugglery, or any species of deception, but with common sense means, Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, cures the sick, and in almost all cases, if so agreed, guarantees a cure.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SAN FRANCISCO, February 11th, 1867.

TO CALEB T. FAY, ESQUIRE, Dear Sir: The undersigned, citizens of San Francisco, impressed with the importance of filling the Chief Executive place in the State with a practical business man, and believing the claims of San Francisco to the nomination will be recognized by the Union State Convention of 1867, request that you will permit your name to be placed before the public as a candidate for Governor.

We are, very respectfully, yours, etc.,

Pope & Talbot,	John Wieland,	Coffey & Risdon,
Main & Winchester,	A. Canu & Co.,	H. B. Williams,
C. Adolphe Low,	F. Hagemann,	S. Hermann & Co.,
J. W. Tucker,	H Wahmuth,	Nicholas Larco,
H. J. Booth & Co.,	Henry Spreckles,	B. F. Mead,
Henry Carleton, Jr.,	John C. Bell,	Kohler & Frohling,
L. L. Treadwell,	Ira Marden,	J. B. Badger,
H. B. Williams,	F. W. Myrick,	Nathaniel Curry,
Moore & Co.,	C. H. Wetherbee,	K. Stranss,
Hemenway & Merrill,	Wm. H. Gawley,	Ludwig Tanssig,
Bowen Brothers,	Wm. B. Haywood,	A. Giorgiani,
Lawrence & Houseworth,	Greenhood & Newbaur,	A. S. Rosenbaum & Co.,
Kennedy & Hopkins,	W. J. Adams,	John B. Rider,
Haste & Kirk,	Daniel Meyer,	Meagher, Tauffe & Co.,
W. W. Montague,	S. H. Harmon,	L. & E. Wertheimer,
Jacob Schneider,	Newstadter Bros,	I. W. Raymond,
C. F. Richards & Co.	Geo. S. Mann,	Scholle Bros.,
L. H. Bonestill,	Wm. Irelan,	L. Baum,
Langley, Crowell & Co.,	E. L. Goldstein,	C. L. Place & Co.,
B. W. Mudge,	Wales L Palmer,	Milo Hoadley,
Joseph Pierce,	John A. Hooper,	Baum Bros.,
James Devoe,	W. & J. Steinhart,	Stein, Simon & Co.,
J. H. Widber,	J. H. Knowles,	Hentsch & Berton,
Crane & Brigham,	C. J. Pilsbury,	Royal Fisk,
Geo. W. Dam,	G. O. Wilson,	Koshland Bros,
Geo B Hitchcock,	Joseph G. Armor.	Josepb Williams,
Conroy & O'Connor,	J. W. Brittan,	John Rosenfeld,
B. C. Horn &. Co.,	Henry B. Brooks,	P. Maury, Jr.,
A. Hollub & Co.,	A. C. Nichols,	Cha. H. Mead,
Wm. H. Rulofson,	A. C. Dietz & Co.,	H. Mayers,
Olney & Co,	W. G. Badger,	J. B. Morton,
J. Voglesdorff & Co.,	George W. Ward,	S. W. Holt,
C J. Demster,	I. Binxome,	M. Thayer,
John Taylor & Co.,	B. B. Thayer,	Abner Dohle,
T. Rogers Johnson,	A. B. Winegar,	James Davis,
Brignardello, Macchiavello & Co.,	John H. Redington,	Jonatban Kittredge,
Heyuemann & Co.,	Horatio P. Livermore,	W. O. Farnsworth,
Levi Strauss & Co.,	D. W C. Rice,	C. W. Armes,
Wormser Bros.,	McElwee & Ackermann,	J. Baker, Jr.,
Murphy, Grant & Co.,	E. G. Mathews & Co.,	P. Berwin & Bros.,
John Howes,	J. A. Drinkhouse,	Joseph Seller,
Solomon Rich,	Atkins Massey,	A. Weil,
P. L. Weaver,	George O. Whitney,	L. & M. Sachs & Co.,
M. Helle & Bro.,	Edw. Bosqui & Co	H. Rosekrans,
Robert Mayers,	Edwin Sutherland,	J. McGill.
Charles Hare,	Jas. B. Roberts,	A. S. Baldwin,
J. Bermingham,	Geo. Clifford,	K. C. Atkins,
J. S. W. Schultze,	John D. Arthur,	W. O. Andrews,
Wm. H. Jessup & Co.	Bandman, Neilsou & Co.	Joshua Chadbourne, R. G Byxbee,

Messrs. Pope & Talbot, Main & Winchester, H. J. Booth & Co., L. & M. Sachs & Co., Hentsch & Berton, Conroy & O'Connor, and others:

GENTLEMEN: The request to me to become a candidate for the honorable place of Governor of the State, endorsed by many citizens and business firms of the city, is such a marked compliment that I should not feel at liberty to decline, even if so disposed, and I promptly acknowledge my obligations to you for furnishing this acceptable opportunity to declare my willingness to become a candidate, subject to endorsement by the Union State Convention of 1867.

Respectfully, yours, CALEB T. FAY

SAN FRANCISCO, February 12th, 1867.

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER II.—MRS. P. IRETON BEMBRIDGE.

THE experiment which Dr. Merle had sanctioned proved successful. The wise physician had calmed the apprehensions with which her husband and son regarded the swoon into which Mrs. Carruthers had fallen upon recognising George, and had hinted that on her recovery the mother and son should be left alone.

"The old gentleman," said Dr. Merle to Mr. Felton, "and a fine old gentleman he is—a little peculiar, but it would not do the world any harm to have a few more of his sort in it—has told me a good deal of the family history intentionally, and some of it unintentionally, and I have not the least doubt that the root of Mrs. Carruther's disease is simply her son."

"He has given her some trouble, I know," said Mark Felton, with a sigh; "but hardly so much as that comes to, I fancy."

"Well, well, I won't be positive; but I think so. No young man ever tells all the truth about his follies; and, indeed, no middle-aged or old man, for that matter; and rely upon it, his mother knows more than any one else. She will do well, Mr. Felton. She sees him all right, no matter how wrong he may have been; there's nothing gravely amiss now. We may leave her to time now, and her son's society."

"Do you think I may venture to see her soon?"

"Impossible to say, for a day or two, my dear sir, impossible to say. Mr. Carruthers and Mr. Dallas must explain your coming to her. I don't prescribe two shocks, you know, even pleasant ones, and then I have no doubt you will perfect the cure."

Mr. Felton acknowledged the smooth speech with an absent sort of smile, and Dr. Merle took his leave.

"You are sure there is nothing wrong with you, George? You are quite sure you are in no danger?" said Mrs. Carruthers, late in the afternoon of that day, to her son, as she lay quietly on a large sofa, drawn close to the window, where the panes were glittering in the dying light. Her face was turned towards him, her dark eyes a little troubled, and not so bright as they had been, resting fondly and with a puzzled expression upon his face, and one thin hand fondly clasped in his. George was lying on the floor beside her sofa, his head resting against her pillow, and the fingers of her other hand were moving among his rich brown curls.

"Nothing, indeed, mother. All is well with me—much, much better than I ever expected or hoped; but you must not agitate yourself, or ask any questions. Dr. Merle and Mr. Carruthers have put me on my honor not to talk to you of the past, and we must keep our word, you know," and the young man tenderly kissed the hand he held in his.

"Yes, yes," she said, in an absent, searching tone, "but there is something—there was something—I——"

"Hush, mother! In the time to come you shall know everything, but for the present you must simply trust me. Indeed, there is nothing wrong. I am here with you, brought here and welcomed by Mr. Carruthers. You remember that he did not like me, and he had good cause; yes, he had good cause, but that is all over now. I am here with his full sanction and approbation, and you must be content to know that, to feel it, and to rest. You have to get strong and well now, mother, and then we shall all be quite happy."

"Yes, George, yes. I can rest now," said his mother. And she nestled down upon her sofa, and he drew the coverings around her, and they both kept silence, and presently, in the autumnal evening, when the moon rose over the dark Taunus, and the lights began to sparkle all over the little white town, Mrs Carruthers fell asleep, with her hand clasped in that of her son and her worn but always handsome face resting against his brown curls

The days went by, and with the lapse of each Mrs. Carruthers made an advance towards the recovery of her health and her mental faculties. Very shortly after their first meeting, George had spoken to her of his uncle, and though he found it difficult to fix her attention or engage her interest he succeeded in ascertaining that she remembered all the circumstances of her brother's life, and that he had expressed a wish and intention to come to England.

"Mark is not happy in his son," she said one day to Mr. Carruthers and George, who had been talking to her by preconcerted arrangement on the subject. "I fear he has given him a great deal of trouble. I remember in many of his letters he said he was not blest, like me, with a son of whom he could be proud."

George reddened violently as his mother's harmless words showed him how she had concealed all her grief from her brother, and struck him with sudden shame and confusion in his step-father's presence. Mr. Carruthers felt inexpressibly confused also, and as readiness was not the Grand Lama's forte, he blundered out:

"Well, my dear, never mind about his son. You would be glad to see your brother Mark, wouldn't you?"

Mrs. Carruthers looked earnestly at him as she raised herself from her pillow, and the faint color in her cheek deepened into a dark flush as she said:

"Glad to see my brother Mark! Indeed I should be. Is he here too?"

So, after long years, the brother and sister met again, and Mark Felton was a little diverted from his anxiety about his son by the interest and affection with which his sister inspired him, and the strong hold which George Dallas gained upon the affections of a man who had been sorely wounded in his own hopes and expectations. He was not under any mistaken impression about his nephew. He knew that George had caused his mother the deepest grief, and had for a long time gone as wrong as a young man could go short of entering on a criminal career. But he divided the good from the evil in his character, he discerned something of the noble and the generous in the young man, and if he laid too much to the account of circumstances, and handled his follies too tenderly, it was because he had himself suffered from all the grief which profligacy, combined with cold and calculating meanness, can inflict upon a parent's heart.

George Dallas yielded easily to the influence of happiness. His gay and pleasant manner was full of fascination, and of a certain easy grace which had peculiar charms for his Transatlantic uncle; and his love for his mother was a constant pleasure to her brother to witness, and an irresistible testimony to the unspoiled nature of the son. True, this affection had not availed to restrain him formerly, but the partial uncle argued that circumstances had been against the boy, and that he had not had fair play. It was not very sound reasoning, but there was nothing to contradict it just at present, and Mr. Felton was content to feel rather than to reason.

Mr. and Mrs. Routh had arrived at Hombourg immediately after Mr. Felton and George had reached that place of fashionable resort. Their lodgings were in a more central situation than those of Mr. and Mrs. Carruthers, and were within easy reach of all the means of diversion which the wicked little resort of the designing and their dupes commanded. George Dallas did not see much of Routh. He had been disturbed and impressed by Mr. Felton's exceedingly emphatic expression of opinion respecting that gentleman; he had been filled with a vague regret, for which now and then he took himself to task, as ungrateful and whimsical, for having renewed his intimacy with Routh. His levity, his callousness, respecting the dreadful event concerning which he had consulted him, had shocked George at the time, and his sense of them had grown with every hour's consideration of the matter, and they were many, in which he had since engaged. Nothing had occurred to him to reverse or weaken the force of Routh's opinion; but he could not get over his heartlessnes. They met, indeed, frequently. They met when George and his uncle, or his stepfather, or both, walked about the town and its environs, or in the gardens; they met when George strolled about the salons of Kursaal, religiously abstaining from play; it was strange how the taste for it had passed away from him, and how little he suffered, even at first, in establishing the rule of self-restraint: but they rarely met in private, and they had not had half an hour's conversation in the week which had now elapsed since Routh and Harriet had arrived at Homburg.

But George had seen Harriet daily. Every afternoon he escorted his mother during her drive, and then he called on Mrs. Routh. His visits tortured her, and yet they pleased her too. Above all, there was security in them. She should know every thing he was doing; she should be quite sure no other influence, stronger, dangerous, was at work, while he came to her daily, and talked to her in the old frank way. Routh shrank from seeing him, as Harriet well knew, and felt, also, that there was security in his visits to her. "He will keep out of George's way, of course," she said to herself, when she acquiesced in the expediency of following Dallas to Hombourg, and the necessity for keeping him strictly in sight, for some time at least. "He will not undertake the daily torture. No: that, too, must be my share. Well, I am tied to the stake, and there is no escape; only an interval of slumber now and then, more or less rare and brief. I don't want to tie him to it also—he could not bear it as I can."

And she bore it well—wonderfully well, on the whole, though the simile of bodily torture is not overdrawn as representing what she endured. By a sort of tacit mutual consent, they never alluded to Deane or the discovery of the murder. George, who never could bear the sight of a woman's suffering, had a vivid recollection of the terrible emotion she had undergone when he disclosed the truth to her, and determined to avoid the subject for the future. She understood this, but she felt tolerably certain that if any new complication arose, if any occasion of doubt or hesitation presented itself, George would seek her advice. She should not be kept in ignorance, and that was enough. She had ascertained, before they left London, that George had not mentioned the matter to Felton; and when the young man told her how otherwise complete his explanation with Mr. Felton had been, she felt a degree of satisfaction in the proof of her power and influence afforded by this reticence.

The positive injunction which Mr. Felton had laid upon his nephew aided George's sensitiveness with respect to Harriet. He felt convinced that if his uncle had known her, as he knew her, he would have been satisfied to confide to her the trouble under which he labored, and whose origin was assuming, to George's mind, increasing seriousness with every day which passed by, without bringing news of Mr. Felton's son. But he would not, however he might find relief and counsel by doing so, discuss with Harriet a matter which he had been positively forbidden to discuss with her husband: he could not ask her secresy without hurting her by an explanation of Mr. Felton's ill opinion of Routh. So it happened that these two persons met every day, and that much liking, confidence, and esteem existed on the man's part toward the woman, and yet unbroken silence was maintained on the subject which deeply engaged the minds of both. Phillip Deane's name was never mentioned by Harriet, nor did Dallas speak of Arthur Felton.

So Mrs. Carruthers improved in health. Mr. Carruthers was very gracious and affable to his step-son, and terribly nervous and anxious about his wife, on whom, if the worthy physician could have been brought to consent, he would have kept Dr. Merle in perpetual attendance, being incapable of recognising the importance—indeed, almost the existence—of any patient of that gentleman's, except Mrs. Carruthers of Poynings. Mr. Felton heard nothing of his son, and waited, frequently discussing the subject with Mr. Carruthers and his nephew; and the bright sweet autumn days went on. Afterward, when George reviewed their course and pondered on the strange and wayward ways through which his life had lain, he thought of the tranquillity, the lull, there had been in that time, with wonder.

The change of scene, the physical effort, a certain inevitable deadening effect produced by the lapse of time, more powerful in cases of extreme excitement than its space would seem to warrant, had had their effect on Harriet's spirits and appearance. She looked more like herself, George thought, when he came to make her his daily visit. Perhaps he had become more accustomed to the change he had noted with her solicitude on his return from London; she was certainly more cheerful. He did not take account of the fact that he did not see her in Routh's company, though his uncle's comment on her husband's feelings toward her frequently and painfully recurred to him. Harriet questioned him frequently about his mother, and George, full of gratitude for her kindness and sympathy, spoke freely of her, of his uncle, of the altered position in which he stood with his step-father, and of his improved condition and hopes. There were only two persons of interest to him whom he did not mention to Harriet. They were Austin Felton and Clare Carruthers.

"Have you ever been to the Bursaal in the evening?" he asked Harriet one day, as they were talking, and looking at the groups of gaily dressed men and women lounging past the window where they were seated.

"Yes, I have gone in there once or twice with Stewart; but I got tired of it very soon, and I don't want to go again."

"My uncle met an old acquaintance there last evening," George went on; "he does not particularly care about it either; but we were strolling about the gardens until rather late, and then we went in and had a look at the ball-room. I had been watching a lady for some time, out-and-out the best dancer in the room, and I find out she is quite a celebrity here."

"Indeed," said Harriet, not vehemently interested.

"Yes, quite," said George; "and, judging by what my uncle says, I should think she was a celebrity in New York. I should like to show her to you, Mrs. Routh; she is like one of those impossible women in the American woods, with clusters of currants made in carbuncles, and bunches of cherries, in flawless rubies, in their hair—you know the kind of thing I mean. I fancy the Phœnix would look shy about insuring her wardrobe, and Hancock feel dubious about matching her diamonds. Such a twinking, flashing, glittering, coaxing flippant mortal I never met in my life. I wonder if she dresses as gorgeously under the sunshine as under the gas."

"She has quite taken your fancy, George. Did Mr. Felton introduce you?"

"Yes. There she stood, looking up in his face, but I am quite sure seeing me and every other person in the room at the same time, and chattering like a Yankee magpie; so my uncle presented me to—Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, as he called her, in American fashion. She was there with a whole host of people, and I didn't fancy them, 'ke-inder didn't," as she would say, no doubt, and went away as soon as I could."

"Is she a widow?"

"Yes—at least, I think so; I heard nothing of P. Ireton.'

"She will be cultivating your uncle, or yourself, George. A handsome, rich young widow, and an old acquaintance of your uncle's, eh?"

"I don't feel in the least like it, Mrs. Routh, and I am sure the sparkling, flashing, dashing lady I met last night would fly at no such mean quarry. I have rather a notion, too, that my uncle does not like her."

"Have you? Did he seem displeased at the meeting?"

"Not exactly displeased—but—I am beginning to understand him now wonderfully well, and in some things he is so like my mother. Now, with her I can always feel whether she likes a person or not without her saying a word—I could formerly, I mean, when she was more susceptible to impressions than she is now. It's just the same in my uncle's case; and I knew in a minute, he didn't like Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge."

"Where is she staying? At the 'Quatre Saisons,' I suppose?"

"No," said George; "she has one of the Schwazchild houses. You know them, Mrs. Routh?"

"Yes I know them," said Harriet. "I saw the Frau Schwazchild yesterday, rejoicing in a pink parasol with a coral handle, set with turquoises in clumps."

"That's the woman. Shouldn't wonder if the parasol were a waif from the wardrobe of Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge. She has, then, one of those huge houses for herself and her attendants."

"Did she tell you all this in the ball-room?"

"All this? Bless your innocence, she got through such trivialities as these in about two minutes. I might have heard her whole history, and P. Ireton's, no doubt, particulars of his last illness—if he had a last illness—included, if I had asked her to dance. And, by Jove!" said George, starting up and pushing back the muslin curtain which impeded Harriet's view of the street somewhat, "there she is, coming down the street in a pony-carriage, and looking like a whole triumphal procession on one set of wheels."

Harriet looked out with an assumption of more curiosity than she felt. In a low, elegant, but rather over-ornamented equipage, drawn by two grey ponies, likewise rather over-ornamented, but very handsome and of great value, sat a lady of beauty as undeniable as that of her horses, and elegance as striking as that of her carriage. Woman like, Harriet remarked the magnificence of her dress before she noticed the beauty of her face, set off as it was by the aid of the most perfect hat and feather ever put together by the milliner's art. That beauty was at once of the correct and the sparkling order. Her features were of statuesque regularity, but they had all the piquant brilliancy of rich, glowing, passionate life. Cheeks and lips flushed with the full color of health, masses of hair of the darkest, glossiest brown coiled up in endless braids and rolls under the inimitable hat; eyes so dark that to call them black was a venial exaggeration; teeth which shone like jewels; and in the face, the air, over the whole person and equipment of the woman, from the wrists outstretched over the reins she held, and on which broad bands of jewels flashed, to the tip of the satin boot which protruded beneath the silken carriage-wrap spread daintly over her knees, an intolerable consciousness and domineering boldness which was simply odious. Her ponies were stepping leisurely: her glittering eyes were looking right and left, as though shey were searching for some one among the scattered groups she passed, and every member of which stared at her without disguise. As much of her dress as could be seen was a magnificent mixture of satin and lace and jewels, and even in her dress there was a daring, reckless something, indefinable but distinct, which made the gazers feel that in staring at her there was no offence.

"Stunning, isn't she, Mrs. Routh? I beg your pardon for the slang, but there is really no other word. Blinding, dazzling, and all the rest of it."

"Stunning, certainly, George," said Harriet smiling; "but, somehow, I don't think you care particularly to be stunned."

"Not in the least. She is not a bit my style;" and George, thinking of what "his" style was, and how widely it differed from the triumphant figure in the ornate carriage out there, let the muslin curtain drop, and turned away from the window. Harriet sat down and took up her work.

"A woman whom men would love for a little while, and hate bitterly after, I fancy; but whom women would hate at once, and always."

Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge had not found among the loungers in the town the individual whom her bright black eyes were seeking, when George Dallas and Harriet Routh had marked her from the window. She had driven rapidly away past the gardens and the Schloss, and when fully two miles outside the town she overtook a gentleman sauntering leisurely along, with his hands thrust deep into his pockets, and his moody eyes fixed upon the ground. The carriage was close upon him before he looked round, though the sound made by the wheels and the trotting horses had been distinct in the clear air, as they came along the empty road. Then he turned and greeted the lady with effusion. In a moment he had taken his place beside her, and was whirled away into the green and golden distance of the forest, under the brow-crest of Taunus.

"How very odd that you should know him," said the gorgeous lady of the pony-carriage to the gentleman seated beside her, as she walked her ponies along a shady road, where the slim trees stood on guard on either side, and the fallen leaves rustled under the wheels.

"Not so very odd. He is a near relative of one of my most intimate friends."

"Ah, his nephew, I suppose you mean, a tall young man with good eyes, and a remarkably rich expression of countenance."

"I recognise the description certainly, and it is not flattering. That is the individual; his name is Dallas."

"A booby, I'm convinced. How he can be an intimate friend of yours I cannot understand." She said this rather sulkily, which, by adding to its character of sincerity, made the indirect flattery in which she was a proficient all the more delicious. Her companion's eyes flashed with pleasure as he turned them upon her with a look which she did not raise her eyes to receive, but which dyed her cheek a deeper rose tint than before. Then she went on:

"He is come here with Mr. Felton to meet his cousin, I suppose. Arthur Felton will not like that, I fancy. He regarded this fine family reunion as a very decided nuisance, I can assure you."

"I don't quite understand you," her companion said. "Mr. Felton's son is not here, that I know of; he certainly had not arrived yesterday, for Dallas was at my lodgings, and would have been sure to mention it."

"No," replied the lady with a slow, provoking smile, which lighted her eyes up with mischief, and showed more of her faultless teeth than always glistened to the world. "I know he is not here, but he is coming. I gave him a rendezvous here for this very week, in Paris, last March."

The gentleman looked at her in such extreme surprise, that it quite amused her. She did not only smile now, she laughed.

"I will explain my meaning," she said, "in very few words. I have known the Feltons all my life, and Arthur has been in love with me ever since he was a boy; rather less than more, perhaps, since that's his way, and not at all to the detriment of his being quite as much in love with a number of women besides. He and his father never got on well. Mr. Felton did not like 'his ways,' as the goodies and gossips say, and in particular, he did not like his being in love with me, for he can't bear me. Frightfully bad taste, isn't it? Get along, President," this to one of the ponies, as she touched him up with her whip; "you've had walking enough. Awfully bad taste—thank you, you needn't say yes; you're looking unutterable things. Of course I don't mind that particularly, and I don't care for Arthur Felton in the very least," with a most enchanting drawl and the faintest pout of the crimson lips. "He made himself a perfect nuisance in Paris, and I really must have quarreled with him, if I had not gone away with some friends, who wouldn't have Arthur—no, not in the very least," and she repeated the before-mentioned little performance quite enchantingly.

"But you agreed to meet him here?" said her companion, very moodily.

"Agreed to meet him here! How ridiculous you are. I gave him rendezvous, which I beg to observe is not precisely the same thing as agreeing to meet him."

"Sounds like it," said the gentleman, still more sulkily.

"Very true; but it isn't. I meant to come here—I always lay my plans long beforehand—just at this time, and I thought I might as well let him come here as have constantly teasing me in the mean time. It was a long while off, remember." And her black eyes danced with mischief and enticement.

"And where is he now?" asked her companion, after he had given her another look which brought the burning color to her cheeks once more.

"How on earth should I know?" was her answer, and as she made it, she turned her head round and looked him full in the face. "How on earth should I know?" she repeated. "You don't imagine, I suppose, that I correspond with all the friends of my youth. No, no: I never think of people when they are out of my sight. I have no one that I care about enough to think of in absence, and I never write a letter, if I can possibly avoid it."

"I understood, when Mr. Felton came to London, he had not heard from his son for some time, and he has certainly not seen him there."

"Very likely Master Arthur is not a particularly dutiful son. However, his father will see him here, if he stays till next week, that's a fact."

"What sort of person is Mr. Felton's son? I can't say I admire the old gentleman much."

"No! Don't get on with him? I should think not, neither do I; but Arthur's not in the very least like him. Not nearly so good-looking; not like the Feltons, I should say, at all; like his mother. His cousin, though he's a big booby, is a good-looking fellow, and looks like a gentleman. Now that's just what Arthur does not look like."

"And what is just what he does look like?" asked her companion, who took what he thought was a secret pleasure in hearing this unknown admirer of the beautiful woman who had captivated his fancy spoken of in depreciating terms. But he was quite mistaken. Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge discerned this amiable sentiment with perfect distinctness, and gave it all the nutriment to be supplied by the most consummate and dexterous coquetry.

"H'm!" she said, with a bewitching air of thought and deliberation. "What does Arthur Felton look like? Very like a Yankee, and a little like a Jew;" and she laughed most musically.

As Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge drove her grey ponies towards the little white town, the carriage passed, near a turn in one of the level shady roads, a bench placed between two tall slim trees. Between the bench and the road lay a broad pathway, with a grassy edge. A lady, simply dressed, of a small slight figure, and whose face was bent downwards, but in whose air there was unmistakable refinement, was sitting on the bench, and leaning a little forward, was making marks upon the ground with her parasol, less in idleness than in the abstraction of thought. As the ponies trotted merrily by, and their mistress laughed, rather loudly but musically, the lady looked up, and the eyes of the two women met. The gentleman who sat by the fair American, and who was on the side of the carriage nearest to the pathway, was so absorbed in the animated conversation being carried on between them, that he did not notice the solitary figure, nor see that anything had attracted his companion's attention. Indeed, the attraction was but momentary; the look had hardly been interchanged before the carriage whirled past Harriet Routh.

She came forward upon the footpath, and looked after the fast receding figure of her husband, as he bent deferentially towards the woman she had seen that morning, until she could see it no longer; and still stood there when the level shaded road was blank and empty.

[To be continued.]

HORSES ON THE DESERT.

THE Arab horse is watered only once in twenty-four hours. He is often obliged to content himself with dates instead of barley; these are given to him before they are perfectly ripe, when the stones are soft, and are eaten stones and all. In the spring he is turned out on the pastures; but in the summer, if his master can afford it, he gets a little barley. And on this scanty fare, a good horse is expected, if necessary, to accomplish for five or six successive days, distances of a hundred and twenty-five to a hundred and fifty miles; and after a couple of days rest and good feeding, to be quite well enough to repeat the feat. If he shakes himself at any resting-place, or paws the ground with his foot, it is held that there is no occasion to pull up in the journey; if you would know at the end of a day of excessive fatigue, how far you can yet rely upon your horse, get off his back and pull him strongly by the tail; if he remain unmoved, you may rely upon him. It is of no very rare occurrence to hear of a horse going one hundred and eighty miles in twenty-four hours! The requisites which the men of the desert look for in him, are that he should carry a full-grown man, his arms and a change of clothing, food for both rider and himself, a flag even on a windy day, and if it be necessary, drag a dead body behind him.

A horse of the Sahara is calculated to live from twenty to twenty-five years, and a mare from twenty-five to thirty; his prime is indicated by the following proverb:

"Seven years for my brother,
Seven years for myself,
Seven years for my enemy."

The Arabs of Upper Asia have regular genealogical trees of their horses, in which the birth and parentage of a colt is affirmed by evidence such as would be taken in a court of justice; while among the tribe Annaya there are horses so priceless that it is impossible even for great personages and wealthy merchants to pay in cash for them; they give a number of bills, therefore, falling due at intervals of twelve months, or else bind themselves to pay an annuity forever to the vendor and his descendants. But perhaps nothing exemplifies the high value put upon a horse by these wandering people, so much as this fact, that although delighting in bloodshed, they never kill a farrier; they would as soon think of poisoning a well; he has only to alight, and intimate with the two corners of his burnous—raising and depressing them by turns—the movements of the bellows, and his life is held as sacred as that of a herald or a priest among more civilized nations.

THE LEGEND OF THE FIRST OYSTER-EATER.—Once upon a time—it must be a prodigiously long time ago, however—a man of melancholy mind, who was walking by the shores of a picturesque estuary, listening to the monotonous murmurs of the sad sea-waves, espied a very old and ugly oyster all covered over with parasites and seaweeds. It was so unprepossessing that he kicked it with his foot, and the animal astonished at receiving such treatment on his own domain, gaped wide with indignation. Seeing the beautiful cream-colored layers that shone within the shelly covering, and fancying the interior of the shell to be beautiful, he lifted up the "aged native" for further examination, inserting his finger and thumb within the shells. The irate mollusc, thinking, no doubt, that this was meant as a further insult, snapped its pearly door close upon the finger of the intruder, causing him some little pain. After releasing his wounded digit, the inquisitive gentleman very naturally put it into his mouth. "Delightful!" exclaimed he, opening wide his eyes. "What is this?" and again he sucked his thumb. Then the great truth flashed upon him that he had found out a new delight—had, in fact, accidentally achieved the most important discovery ever made up to that date. He proceeded at once to the verification of his thought. Taking up a stone, he forced open the doors of the oyster, and gingerly tried a piece of the mollusc itself. Delicious was the result; and so, there and then, with no other condiment than the juice of the animal—with no cream-ing brown stout or pale Chablis to wash down the repast, no nicely-cut, well-buttered bread—did that solitary anonymous man inaugurate the oyster banquet.—Bertram's Sea Harvest.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1867.

THE NEW RELIGION.

IT is impossible for any thoughtful observer of the signs of the times, to ignore the decay of religious faith that marks the age in which we live. The works of Colenso, Renan, and the authors of Essays and Reviews, have found a vast multitude of readers, and have exerted an influence which it is not easy to exaggerate. But while the doctrines of old-fashioned orthodoxy have been appalled by the critical schools on the one hand, and on the other, by the Materialists, who regard all religious discussions either with contempt or indifference, because they believe in no gods but Force and Matter, and in no immortality but the eternal uncreated existence and indestructiblity of Dirt, a new religion has appeared in the world, equally hostile to Christianity and Materialism. Utterly denying the authority of Revelation, repudiating the supernatural, or to use an apparent parodox, placing the supernatural upon a strictly natural basis, it teaches the continuation of individual existence after physical dissolution, not as a religious dogma, but a philosophical truth, not as a contravention of law by miraculous power, but as a phenomenon as much in accordance with law as any of the ordinary phenomena of truth, growth and decay.

That there is something in man that survives the destruction of the body; that the accident of death works no immediate change in the character tastes. or knowledge of the individual; that the condition of the spirit in the other life is the simple natural result of what it was in this; that there is no such thing in the universe as the suspension of or interference with the operation of law—no arbitrary punishments, no forgiveness, no remission of sins; and that the living can have intimate communication with disembodied spirits—these are some of the main articles of the new religion that claims to be the natural successor of Christianity.

At its first rise, Spiritism seemed to be nothing more than a revival of the long-exploded belief of ghosts—a thaumaturgy rather than a religion. Table-tappings, mysterious rappings, and communications through "mediums" were its principal features, and they were witnessed with the same kind of curiosity and interest which drew audiences to the exhibitions of clairvoyants and biologists; but within the last year or two it has pretended to the dignity of a system of Belief, and steps have been taken to organize its adherents in the United States into what may be called a Spiritist Church. At a general convention of Spiritists, recently held at Chicago, we believe, resolutions were passed recommending the formation of societies analogous to the church associations of the various Christian sects, in every community throughout the United States where a sufficient number of disciples could be found. It was claimed that spiritism had come into the world in the natural order of progress and development to supersede the worn-out faiths that are now in the very act of disappearing from the world, and which if not replaced by some system more accordant with reason and philosophy, will leave all the bold and vigorous intellects of the rising generation a prey to atheistic Materialism Christianity—a good enough thing in its day—had done its work, but could no longer command the allegiance of independent and instructed minds; and unless the belief in a future life could find some new proofs, it would soon utterly die out from the earth. The Convention further expressed the opinion that the Christian churches as at present conducted were not doing their work and had in fact outlived their usefulness; that while infidelity and scepticism were almost universal outside the Church in all the great circles of business, science, and literature, there was little hearty faith even within it. The new societies recommended, would take the place of these effete organizations, and being inspired with a genuine instead of a merely conventional belief, would evince the enthusiasm and living energy of the early Christians. Every person, no matter what his creed, who should desire benefits of association with a society of men and women devoted to benevolent works and mutual improvement, was to be invited to unite with them. No subscription to any articles of belief, no terms of communion were to be required. Such was at least the general spirit of the recommendations of the Convention, and we believe that in this city, and also in many places throughout the United States, societies have already been organized substantially upon the basis and after the pattern recommended.

Whatever we may be inclined to think of the claims of Spiritism, it cannot be denied that it has spread with amazing rapidity, and made hundreds of thousands of converts in a comparatively short period. And it is equally undeniable that a very large proportion of these converts belong to better educated and more thoughtful classes. Whether we seek an explanation of these facts in the vague feeling dissatisfaction with existing creeds that seems so prevalent of the present time all over the world, or the terrible blows that the old beliefs have sustained from criticism and science, or whether we see in it only a natural reaction against the hard Materialism that refuses faith in anything that has not the evidence of the senses to vouch for it, or that cannot be proved by demonstration—in any point of view, and however accounted for, the facts themselves must be regarded as most important and significant.

THE NEXT GOVERNOR.

IN our columns to-day will be found a card signed by a considerable number of our principal merchants, requesting Mr. Caleb T. Fay, a well known and highly respected merchant of this city, to permit his name to be placed before the public as a candidate for the position of Governor of the State. Mr. Fay has accepted the invitation, subject to the endorsement of the Union State Convention of 1867. Without undertaking to endorse the pretensions of Mr. Fay, we are free to express our opinion that some citizen of San Francisco ought to have the nomination. All the Governors of the State heretofore, have been chosen from the interior. Surely it is time that San Francisco, the commercial capital of the State, should have a show.

LOCAL ART ITEMS.

A PICTURE by Charles Nahl, representing a pack-train crossing the mountains in a snow storm, is on exhibition at Snow & Roos' gallery. It is by far the most effective and attractive painting we have seenfrom his brush, and in his design and execution we find little lacking. The sun scarcely paints with more fidelity. Viewing such works as this, creates a longing to see more of the productions of so excellent an artist; but Charles Nahl must work in his own way, and at his own time; and if his pictures are not thrown off with rapidity, we find ample compensation in the completeness of their minutest details, and the exquisite nicety of their finish. Though Nahl has not a brilliant imagination, nor a remarkably bold and powerful hand, his paintings, by their thorough truthfulness and effective arrangement, has won for him an enviable reputation in his profession.

This painting contains many finely-drawn figures, and the grouping is characterized by the grace and effectiveness for which the artist is noted Heavily-laden mules, crowding each other on, are toiling with difficulty up the ascent in the foreground, dashing the snow beneath their hoofs in their eager efforts to advance, while in the distance, growing dimmer as they recede, are the leaders of the train, descending the trail. A wicked-faced, desperate looking Mexican, armed with pistols and knife, mounted on a diminutive but hardy beast, which he is actively belaboring, forms the central and most striking figure. Two followers, of the same race, plod on foot through the deep snow behind and beside him, seemingly shouting and cursing at their jaded animals. The rocky sides of the mountains are covered with the freshly-fallen snow, which has also settled deep upon the wine-casks, grindstones, boxes and bags packed upon the backs of the mules, from whose nostrils the steam comes white and thick.

A few dreary, ghostly white-shrouded pines are in the distance; black and dismal storm clouds make up the sky, and a blinding drift of snow-flakes fills the air. The management of the lights is very skillful; the coloring rather subdued, but natural; and the execution painfully faithful.

The picture, we understand, is exhibited for sale; and if only for the sake of encouraging the artist to give us more of his valuable handwork, we trust it may not be long on exhibition for that purpose.

Another picture, by the same artist, representing a sunset on the Chagres river, is displayed in Jones & Wooll's window. To one who has not seen the vivid effects of a tropical sunset the coloring of this picture seems exaggerated, and the thought that it is unreal will always interfere with one's admiration for the merits of the painting. The subject is hardly a pleasant one; and indeed, we confess to a strong dislike to the half-nude, dusky figures Nahl is so fond of repeating.

Marple has several paintings at the same place, some of them displaying considerable ability. They appear to be carefully drawn, but are wanting in freshness of color.

Wandesforde exhibits at Snow & Roos' gallery, two oil paintings, one of Lake Tahoe and the other of Cathedral Rock, both inferior to his usual work.

Two small paintings of Mexican scenery, by Arriola, lately on exhibition at the same place, though rather harsh and stiff in treatment, are somewhat in advance of previous efforts.

ASTRÆA.

THE Irish-Chinese riot only effected a temporary damage to some china-ware, after all.

[For the Californian.]

MY OMNIBUS.

BY TREM.

SOME writer, I forget who, has said that the body is not a private carriage built by the great Maker of all things for the sole accomodation of Tom Smith, Harry Jones, or whatever any other man claims it for his mind, soul, intelligence, or whatever you choose to call it, as his exclusive property; but is an omnibus. I believe that I am not strictly right in heading this article "My Omnibus." I do not know whether I, who now write, am allowed to assume the proprietorship of the vehicle in question as often as many others. However, I have the reins at present, and shall drive ahead until they are snatched from my grasp by one or other of my copartners in the concern. I believe my body is an omnibus, and an omnibus which was built to carry many passengers. When I first became convinced of this fact, I felt considerably annoyed; I did not like the idea of allowing others to use according to their own notions that which I had theretofore considered especially my own. When, however, I had become familiar with the idea of my body being an omnibus, I set to work to reconcile myself to it, by becoming good friends with my fellow passengers as speedily as possible. I still think that I who now write have generally the power, by a strong effort of will, to onst any of the other passengers who temporarily take my seat and reins and assume the guidance of the omnibus; but there are times when I find it pleasant and even profitable, to give up the control to a passenger who appears to possess greater capabilities than I in getting over a rough piece of road. I am, I know, decidedly lazy; and occasionally, when I am half asleep on the driver's seat, my energetic passenger shakes me, snatches the reins from my hands, and by strenuous exertions extricates the omnibus from the mud in which, in consequence of my lazy driving, it has stuck. Of course, I cannot be offended at my energetic passenger for thus taking care of the vehicle in which he as well as myself possesses an interest; but, I take the first opportunity, after the omnibus is brought out on a smooth road, to resume my position as driver. I value my energetic passenger; I wish the others, who all of them take it in turn to drive my omnibus, were equally good. Another, when he gains possession of the reins, is continually stopping to take a drink. I am not myself fond of drinking, but I am fond of company, and my bibulous passenger easily persuades me to yield the reins to him when I meet with other omnibus-drivers. The event is generally that the omnibus, if it is not upset, is damaged in some way, and costs some time and money for repairs. Then there is my angry passenger; he very seldom gains possession of the reins; but when he does, he creates great mischief. I have talked so severely to this passenger and to the bibulous passenger, that I hope they will in a very short time engage seats in some other omnibus. I am caused great trouble from the sudden manner in which my passengers snatch the reins and assume the office of driver. My omnibus was at one time under the conduct of a loving driver, (whom I believe to have been my own proper self, but am not sure), gaining the love and admiration of a lady-drive of an omnibus, when all at once my cynical, sneering passenger snatched the reins, and my omnibus became utterly hateful. Instead of soft endearing speeches, the lady omnibus-driver had to listen to sucers against omnibuses in general, and lady-omnibuses in particular. There was no hitching of teams in that case. We have driven on different roads ever since. I have a few passengers who take seats for short stages, whom I occasionally find useful. One of them will, by skilful management of the vehicle, beat an opposing omnibus in a race. I am not a good billiard player; but often one of my passengers, who plays remarkably well, will take possession of me—that is of my omnibus—and by a few brilliant strokes win a game which seemed to me desperate. Others of my passengers have accomplishments which serve to bring my omnibus into good repute: and if I can only, by keeping a firm hold on the reins and refraining from going to sleep, keep my bad passengers—such as my irascible passenger, my bibulous passenger, my cynical passenger, my conceited passenger, and others of like kind—from snatching the reins from me, I shall be only too glad to allow each of my good passengers to take control of my omnibus for a short stage, when one of them thinks that he can drive ahead better than I, who consider myself the proprietor.

THE NEW YORK Herald of Jan. 17th, has the following, which may be considered important:

"Judge Duval, United States Judge for the Western District of Texas, has delivered a stirring charge to the Grand Jury. He quotes at length from the constitution and from the amnesty proclamation, and says there is reason to believe that some persons have violated the conditions on which they obtained amnesty, and such persons should be visited with the punishment which their infamy deserves. The man who avails himself of the generosity of the government to obtain exemption from punishment and then violates his oath, is more guilty than one who was never pardoned. He also in strong terms advises the punishment of all who failed to avail themselves of the amnesty proclamation. He also calls attention to the enforcement of the Civil Rights bill, and says we do not realized the freedom of our late slaves as we must and should do."

[For the Californian.]

MR. TOBY TOMPKINS' EXPERIENCE.

BY PRENTICE.

AFTER a man gets drunk and makes a fool of himself, a spectacle for men to laugh at, women to be disgusted with, and angels to pity, he has a season of remorse, repentance and unavailing regret; during which, he gets down on the ground and foolishly tries to grab up all the spilled milk which is forever lost. When he finds he cannot pick it up, he takes a candle in the daytime and goes hunting some excuse for that which he has not the courage to call a weakness.

We do not like to acknowledge ourselves weak in anything. Mr. Toby Tompkins did not. Mr. Tompkins was a man of occasional sprees—say, once in two or three months. He could touch liquor safely many times, but the insidious creature would occasionally trip him; and when whisky got the the upper hand, it caused him to do the very things which, in his sober moments, he shrank most from doing. He went from the extreme of modesty to the utmost verge of boldness. He got thereby into all sorts of scrapes and awkward situations —incurring often the displeasure of his best friends. By him, young ladies have been placed in very embarrassing and mortifying situations at balls and parties. Mr. T. never imagined himself drunk, even when drunkest. No! he was indignant at the assertion. He has been known, in a ball-room, to take his place in a set with an air of inebriated gravity peculiar to the drunk; and when his friends insisted on his removal, he would argue with them in such a skillful manner as to the genuineness of his sobriety, that they must have been convinced but for the unmistakable outward indications.

Strange to say, although it seemed no part of his real nature, he had in this condition a most unaccountable propensity to steal. At the expiration of a long spree, his pockets would be filled with odds-and-ends—crackers, cheese, olives and meat from lunch-tables, knives, tumblers, cruets, etc.,—indeed, anything he could lay hands on.

There was a man in a certain town wherein Mr. T. once resided, who, in addition to his stock of vile wines and liquors, kept pies. Between Mr. T. and these pies, while he was on a "burst," there existed a strange affinity. He would lie in wait and plan for hours to filch a pie, when abundantly able to pay for it. The man who kept the pies regarded him with "dread profound," whenever he had "switched-off" the track of sobriety.

He once visited the town of M. in quest of a situation. Several letters of introduction to various parties were given him by his friends. He made a very good impression in the families he visited, and was looked upon as rather "a nice young man." But he could not obtain employment. His spirits, of course, were depressed; so, he drank. To his own soul, he said he drank because he was discouraged; and because he would not tell the truth to himself, Mr. T. got drunk, went to an evening party and dispelled the good impressions there formed of him, by pocketing, before the whole company, a roast chicken! he, meauwhile, fancying (like the ostrich when burying its head in the sand) that he was unperceived.

Next morning, on experiencing the horrible awakening which is a part and parcel of the property of the debauchee, Mr. T. packed up and left M., rather than face its disgusted and disappointed little world.

Mr. Tompkins was once reduced, by a pressure pecuniary, to teach a country school. Here he went along very well for awhile, until his affinities brought him in contact with a set of good-natured scamps, who, to their surprise, found that in the schoolmaster they had a congenial spirit. The inhabitants of the little village in which T.'s academy was located, were frequently disturbed at a most immorally late hour by harsh and uncouth sounds, such as emanate from the throats of bachanals when they imagine themselves emulating the sweet notes of the dying swan. These sounds prevailed much more a few months after the advent of the new schoolmaster. Strange stories were told of strange doings at night; and stranger still, it was first faintly rumored that the teacher was a participant in these acts of mischief. Then the rumor grew louder and louder, until T. closed his academy; and shutting himself into his room for a week, gave out that he had the measles! This had the desired effect of keeping away the dear (but under the circumstances, disagreeable and inconvenient) children, for fear of contagion. Moreover, when he emerged from his retirement, there were still upon his countenance the traces of a black eye and an unseemly indentation on his nose. It was also reported that more bottles of brandy had been sent to the pedagogical sick chamber than are usually taken for the relief of the measles. All this gave an immense amount of trouble to Tompkins. The three school-trustees, overcharged with morality and stern propriety, called and laid before him for his consideration these damaging reports. He finally admitted that he had been seduced from the allegiance to virtue which had been his distinguishing characteristic in life, through the influence of certain worthless scamps; they had tempted him, and he had fallen.

He would not admit it to be a weakness, and so he lied again. The next eruption ensued on the going off of a female to a ball with a man. This man was not Tompkins; but Tompkins went to the ball; and to show the inconstant feminine the breadth and fullness of his affection, made a disgusting brute of himself. This time it was jealousy, of course—another lie; it was an infirmity.

He came out to California and mined—mined in bad luck; consequent upon this, were other sprees, from which Tompkins emerged much worse off in body, mind and pocket than before. He said he drank to drown discouragement; but when he made a big strike, he got drunk for joy, in a neighboring camp. When recovering from this spree for joy, and thinking how soon a fool and a large portion of his money are soon parted, he went to drinking again for grief. In the meantime, his claim was jumped by another party; wandering hogs ate through his canvas house, and devoured all his potatoes, flour and beans; the river rose and carried off his sluices; and when he returned—blue, morbid, sick and penniless—to his late abode, he found himself an outcast and a beggar. He thought of his past mis-spent life, his unimproved opportunities for advancement—his mother and sisters far away at home—of himself, when a nice, demure little Sunday-school scholar: he thought of all these. He sat himself down by the muddy river and wept, and then went off and got drunk again.

And so for years he went on, indulging in his weakness—wearing his pants out on the stool of repentance, and wasting no end of candles in search of a pretext for that which no amount of physical or mental castigation would force him to call an "infirmity." When friends advised him to beware of his weakness, he became pugnacious; sometimes, indulged in a spree for that very reason.

He got tight on Christmas, New-Year's, Fourth of July, and Thanksgiving, because they were holidays; solaced his heart with more than the proper quantity of spirits to cheer up his own; at weddings, because he supposed weddings to be joyful occasions, and to terminate in joyful results; also, on parting with friends and meeting with friends.

During the Great Rebellion, when the fortune of war favored the arms of our country, Mr. T's head became anything but clear, from excess of stimulant; and when o'er our nation was spread the dark cloud of defeat and disaster, Mr T.'s head became correspondingly cloudy from the same cause. And finally, he sometimes became cheerful; and from cheerfulness traveled into jollity, from jollity into frenzy, from frenzy into stupidity, and from stupidity into the station-house—simply because every-day existence seemed so weary, and he "hadn't anything else to do."

At length, a sister of Tompkins came to see him. She was a woman of experience, tact, talent and observation. She had suffered much from drunkenness—I mean from a drunken husband, which is pretty much the same thing. Of course, T. resolved that this dear relative should never see him in one of his unfortunate situations. Life was henceforth to flow on in one uninterrupted stream of placidity.

But new troubles did arise—as they always will, on this miserable earth of ours. Tompkins felt depressed: hence, ensued spiritual elevation; and just in the very time and place where he wouldn't it had happened, among a throng of strangers, did he present himself in one of his conditions of grave and dogmatic inebriety before the eyes of his astonished and mortified sister.

Next day, came the usual repentance and mortifying of the flesh: wishing he was dead—that he had never been born—with occasional remarks so agreeable (?) to the ears of surrounding friends; remarks suggestive of cold poison, the rope, the dagger, and the deep-flowing tide.

What was the cause of this resort to the bowl? was the natural inquiry of Mr. Toby Tompkins's sister.

"O, business didn't go right; plagued—perplexed beyond all endurance!" But it should never happen again—never!

She thought and grieved, and waited. She had seen all this before.

Sure enough, a few months after, Tompkins fell again; and again he endured the satisfaction of knowing that he had reduced himself to a forlorn specimen of humanity in a public assemblage. And his relative there, too! Was it possible that the Fates had so ordered it, that he could not have a bit of a spree without being rushed right into the presence of those he would most avoid?

While with aching head, nauseated stomach and trembling limbs, our gentleman sat and moaned over the hard fate which was always making him drink, he remarked that had he only a dear female companion—a wife, for instance—to cheer his existence, such eruptions might in the future be avoided.

Hereupon, his sister broke out and talked very plainly to him—not troubling herself to use any words save homely English:

"So, you want a woman to reform you, do you? Why don't you reform yourself? Are you not a man? Do you intend to travel through the whole journey of life, allowing this infirmity to conquer you time and time again?"

Tompkins tried to bridle up in his old fashion at the idea of "infirmity-"

"O, it won't do! You might as well come out, for the first time in your life, tell the truth, and call it such. What you want is, simply, that some poor weak woman should come along and take upon her this labor of reformation, which you are afraid to shoulder yourself. You want her to endure your vapors after all the mirth and wit, the effervescence of the stimulant, have blown off; to bathe your head, make you strong tea and weak gruel; then, get down on her knees and beseech you to do so no more, and have you faithfully promise—and faithfully break, time and time again. Oughtn't you to be ashamed of yourself? Get drunk because you feel blue and gloomy! Why do not we, women, get drunk when we are blue and gloomy? Have we not some burthens to bear as well as you? Are not cross husbands, drunken husbands, cross children, sick children, and the thousand cares and vexations belonging to a married woman's life, a very good excuse for our getting on a 'bender' once in a while, and getting into the station-house?"

"But the sex!" remarked Tompkins, with an attempt at majesty—"think of the disgrace to a woman who would get drunk."

"Yes," said she, "and you men call us, 'poor, weak creatures;' yet, with all our weakness, we manage to bear our burthens and keep temperate besides. But you, 'lords of creation,' with all your strength, cannot, it appears, sustain trouble without being allowed the privilege of making beasts of yourselves. If our sex is so weak, and yours so strong, which is deserving of the greater credit? Hey, Mr. T.?"

Tompkins remarked that he didn't care about pursuing the subject any further.

"Of course not. That is the way your lordships generally crawl out of an argument with us, when you feel yourselves worsted," said she.

"Here! try this"— and she handed him a moderate dose of brandy and water. "You want something to 'taper-off' on. I know all about these matters. Don't 'taper-off' too much, though. And now, Mr. Tompkins, I think your experience ought by this time convince you that there is no more excuse for getting drunk than for getting angry, or any other weakness. Discipline yourself, Mr. Tompkins. Let the reformation (if any be possible) come from the inside; and not from some poor, little woman. Why, you'd kill a dozen women in attempting to be reformed through their exertions! Must the merit of temperance be dependant on the prayer of the poor little woman, every time you go out? (Now, don't go to drinking, dear Toby!) or had it not better come from the man inside of you, who says: 'Tompkins, you've had enough!' Work out your own salvation, Toby. For, what will become of you when that dear little wife—worn out in your reformation—turns around and dies, and goes to Heaven? Why, go to drinking again, of course."

Mr. Tompkins has resolved to reform himself.

[For the Californian.]

FLOWERS.

FLOWERS! Dear, perishing, radiant flowers!
Springing alike over mountain and vale,
Born of the union of sunshine and showers,
The sweetest of sweet and the frailest of frail.

Bright forms of the Beautiful! zephyr-caressed!
Heaven-given Innocence smiles in your bloom;
And wild is the Spirit of grief or unrest
That fails to be soothed by your magic perfume.

When violets sigh forth their breath to the gale,
Oh! who is not carried by memory back
To haunts where in youth we would joyously hail
The first step of Spring on Earth's desolate track?

Purest and loveliest of shapes of the Earth!
Sweet flowers! Far dearer your beauties to me
Than all the gay gems which the votaries of mirth
Parade in the pomp of their glitter and glee.

Not merely of brilliance which fades where it lies,
Is that which your presence so lovingly tells;
It whispers of holier visions that rise
In realms where the Beautiful constantly dwells.

Of Peace and of Holiness waiting above.
Of star-crowned immortals unshadowed and free,
Of bowers of Rest, in those regions of Love,
Ye breathe in your eloquence, mute though it be.

—ISABEL A. SAXON.

San Francisco, February, 1867.

CHANGE OF HOUR.—The Panama steamer Golden City will sail on Monday morning next at 8 o'clock sharp; instead of the usual hour, 11 A. M. The change is made to ensure the connection with the French Trans-Atlantic steamers.

FROM Galignani's Messenger, of January 4th, we clip the following;

"Considerable attention has been excited by an article published in the Moscow Gazette, endeavoring to show that the events of the last ten, years, but chiefly those which have taken place in the Danubian provinces, have destroyed the Treaty of 1856, and in consequence, relieved Russia from the onerous conditions imposed upon her at the close of the Crimean war. This declaration would certainly cause anxiety if, instead of emanating from the journal in question, the author was Prince Gortschakoff. But until that takes place, and in presence of the calm existing in official quarters in Paris and London, we are at liberty to consider that statement as only the expression of a zealous feeling, agreeable, perhaps, to the Court of Russia, but which by no means proves that the latter considers the moment to have arrived for it to issue from its long retirement."

MY RAILWAY COLLISION.

ON a foggy morning on the twenty-second November, I had resolved to go down on important legal business (first brief) to Wiltshire, my native county.

I was deep in a legal dream, and wandering through a cloudy Westminster, where difficulties entangled me, and getting into a sort of Castle-in-the-Air Chancery, when I was knocked back into life by Mrs. Dustall, my laundress, calling out,

"Seven o'clock, sir, and such a nasty morning." I dress, hastily breakfast and take five minutes to glance at the Times.

French Invasion. Leader on Thames Drainage. Another leader—Abolition of the Lord Mayor's Show, &c. A bottom paragraph, at the bottom of the third column of the fifth page:

"TERRIBLE RAILWAY ACCIDENT."

Let me skim it. "Carelessness of pointsman—red signal mistaken for blue. Old story—foggy weather. Only three men killed—stoker mortally injured." Cambridge line, of course. Old story—hang a director. Who cares to read railway accidents?

Oh, cab! Thank you, Mrs. Dustall. Call the cabby up for my trunk and hat-box. Mind and send my letters on. Keep my door shut. Good-by!

I longed to breathe on the Wiltshire downs, where the strong-limbed hares enjoy a vacation uninterrupted by the opening of law courts, and where rabbits are regardless of Westminster. I was off. I passed through the black jaws of Temple Bar, but for one trifling regret, a free and happy man. I knew that in less than an hour I should pass, as out of a cave, from the tawny fog into the bright autumn air, with just a dash of ice in it, so that the streams which bisect our partridge stubble-fields down in Wiltshire will look like iced sherry and water.

But "there's always a something," as my laundress, Mrs. Dustall, who is given to forming proverbial lozenges from her life experiences, says; and there was "something" now. We all of us have Damocles' swords hanging over our turtle-soup dishes. There is always (if I may use the homely but most powerful simile) a button off the shirt of our temper. There is always a corn twitching upon the mental foot; so that the perfect balance of health, temper, and wealth is not very long together maintained.

A fretful presentiment of a key lost, or a desk left unlocked, buzzed about me like a little mosquito demon. What was it? I locked my dressing-case, my studs are all right in my shirt-front, my desk I put away in a fireproof cupboard. What was it? "There's indeed always a something," philosophical Mrs. Dustall!

I crane out of window: yes, trunk with the red star all right, parchment label fluttering prettily in the wind; hamper, "glass with care;" all chained to the rail on the roof of the cab; bat-box, plaid, umbrella in oilskin case all right. Still this mosquito of evil. Still the demon gnat flying over my nerves. What can it be that pinches me like a tight boot, and yet has no name? I have it! It was that railway accident I was reading, falling upon that previous presentiment; it was that which, finding some unguarded loophole of my nerves, had got in, disagreed with me, and done the mischief. Strange that I, who have skimmed over hundreds of railway accidents, to get quickly to the end and see the total deaths, should be moved by the loss of three men on the Eastern Counties!

I arrived at the station. A slamming of doors, the wave of a red hand flag, a smother of white steam under the station roof, and we are off, shot out into the fog, that wraps us at once in its dingy arms; rattle, battle—that is the brick walling by the engine sheds; clamp, champ—that is the great fire-horse, striking out its brave limbs; jolt, rattle! jolt, battle!—that is crossing the turn-table; that fellow in the green corduroy jacket, bending on the low crank-handle, is, I believe, the pointsman.

Pointsman: something bit me, as if a flea had got into my mind. Why that is what they called the fellow killed yesterday at Splash Bridge, on the Eastern Counties lines. What malicious demon is it puts these things in a nervous man's head just he is settling himself comfortably in the corner of a railway carriage? I suppose it is that special small demon whose peculiar province it is to disturb men's equilibrium, and generally unchristianise one by blunting one's penknife, spoiling one's pen, ironing off one's shirt buttons, mislaying one's studs, making one's boot pinch, and rendering it impossible to arrange one's tie with the bow anywhere but at the back of the neck. The fog thins: it is getting positively bright; fields widen, trees and hedges flow by us as if an inundation was bearing them away.

Three stations soon distanced. Whiz, faster! whiz, faster! slide like a bullet through a gun barrel! whiz! that's a viaduct arch. Whish! click! clack! that's another station and some shunting rails.

Flight of white telegraph washing-lines, miles of signal-posts and split red and white targets, and dull red and green lamps like prize jewels. Faster, till it takes the breath away. Out with the repeater and time it. Fast as the pulse—one, two, three!—fifty miles an hour if it is a yard.

Slower! slower! now we slacken! I thought we could not hold the pace. Slower! My opposite friend gets anxious and looks out of window. We can't be going to stop at Farnborough station.

CRASH! SMASH! BASH!

Here imagine the end of the world. Fancy yourselves animalculæ, shut up by accident inside a huge Brobdignag farmer's watch with a hizz, a whiz and centrifugal railway rush, when snap goes the mainspring. Imagine those small creature's feelings of horror, surprise, and astonishment, and you have ours. I felt no nerve shaken, though my head was giddy and my spine was numbed. Imagine a solitary man in a factory when a boiler bursts in the room above, and the mill falls to pieces like a card house suddenly round his ears. Imagine a quiet man looking out of his bedroom window, accidentally, as he is shaving, and seeing the deluge coming up to the front door for a morning visit. Imagine a Pompeiian just home from Athens, and awoke by the red lava stealing under his bedroom door.

Bang! shiver! smash! bash! then an awful lull and death stop as of a mainspring run out. It was as if we had been riding inside a battering-ram, and had at last come full smash on the wall which had been too much for us. I never rode on a cannon-ball, and don't want to do so; but an hundred-pounder when it strikes could scarcely hit harder than this.

Open fly the doors, some dozen white-faced men sprang through the windows like harlequins in a practising class, out poured the frightened people, lately so red and jolly; but a minute ago flirting, dogmatising, sneering, scandalising, frowning, disputing, now all full of one thought of terror, all become, in that one terrible moment, as brothers and sisters: so levelling is misfortune. We were lately in a good ship, all sail set, flags flying, and no danger fore or aft or on the lee. Suddenly we had struck on a reef, and we were left a total wreck. Heaven knew only what still was left us. It might be but a a moment to live for some of us. Perhaps already bleeding men were groaning their last under that pile of ruin where the red flames rose from.

The guards, white as wood ashes, were running about, flags in hand, like the bugleman of a scattered regiment. Far away to the left, at the end where the charge had been, the engine, a hill of broken metal, was roaring like a lion taken in the toils, and sending up waving pillars of flames, as if its woodwork had taken fire, and spreading to the fragments of the next carriage.

As for the passengers embracing, or silent in staggered groups, they were unanimously white in the face. One strong-faced man was being helped from a carriage, his face seeming to ooze everywhere with blood. A lady was carried away, cut, bruised, and nearly insensible, to the little shed of a station. A young farmer, seated on his striped carpetbag, was covering his face with his hands to squeeze out a jarring headache, produced by his being driven against a man opposite. Others stunned, shaken, and bruised, were consoling or being consoled, or running to see what damage had been done to the train, and what danger still existed. There were messengers racing to Farnborough, three miles off, to telegraph to London for help; and there were guards and porters running up and down the line to put up danger signals, and keep trains nearly due from heaping more ruin on us.

My presentiment had then come true.

My first business on seeing no help was needed was to shut up my plaid and books, and run to the ruin of the engine and the actual spot of the smash. I found that we had driven, at almost express speed, into a ponderous goods train, laden with timber and blocks of asphalte, massive and unyielding as stone. This we had partly driven back and stove in, pounding the guard carriage behind to rags and pulp. On this bulwark our own engine had beaten itself to pieces, by a series of leaps, jolts, and charges; it lay a wreck, the funnel torn to pieces and scattered about the platform, the iron plates jammed in, as if they were deal wainscoting; the buffers broken to morsels; the giant wheels dismounted and buried in the heart; the whole crushed and powerless as a silenced battery.

Beyond, and some yards further, lay the timber-track, its root torn off, and, at a distance, the planks splintered; as for the guard-carriage, it was torn to pieces as a bandbox might be when a drunken man has stamped on it and trod it to bits. It lay in pulpy shreds and fragments as of rotten wood, without shape and void, and, out of the pounded mass—reduced as in a pestle and mortar, in a desperate attempt of some starving apothecary to make deal soup—we picked a torn rag with a fragment of bread and cheese, and two jammed and squeezed red books of by-laws, which looked as if they had been disinterested at Pompeii.

But the torn planks and broken iron, and snapped off wheels and rods, were as nothing to us—though they rose like the ruins of a cottage destroyed by a hurricane on the rails—when the fire of the engine began roaring up in a smoky red and yellow pyramid, with a bellow and troubled roar as if howling for victims. There, busy amid the ruins, the scared fireman and black-faced stoker were shovelling in gravel to prevent the boiler bursting or the flame spreading. Before the great leaping out violence we all fell back like the Babylonians in the prints when the furnace doors were opened to swallow up the children of Israel, and the furnace was "heated seven times hotter than it was wont to be heated;" we were all then, I suppose, in that unconscious state of excitement, that if the earth had suddenly opened and swallowed us all up, train, wreck, passengers and all, we should hardly have made a remark.

Having once more seen the pile of debris, carriage roofs, iron bars, planks, and wheels, I employed myself, in accordance with old habits, in beating slowly over the whole scene of the disaster, determined by graphic observations, fresh as I was to such scenes, to realise fully the horror and danger of such accidents. As I walked along the line of carriages, here and there crushed or sprung, the first thing I stepped upon was a round bar of iron or steel, thicker than my wrist when my two coats are on; it had been, I imagine, part of the underwork of the engine, and was in two. The next thing I picked up was a jagged piece of the funnel, still black and smoking; it now stands on my mantelpiece a lively record of my escape. I also found and handled a huge screw made of iron, bound with brass, which, perhaps, had formed the inner socket of one of the buffers. It was cleft in two, as a sharp knife would chop an apple at one stroke.

Under the carriages, blocks of iron, like the fastenings of sleepers, were strewn for thirty or forty yards; and, in one of the carriages ten or twelve from the engine, the floor planks were torn up in great jags, protruding three or four feet, showing beneath them (between them and the ground) broken wood, iron hooping, and huge gutta-percha circular slabs—probably breaks or springs—torn violently in two. On one seat lay a crumpled Times, with holes in it; and on another a tumbled shawl, the fringe of which was entangled in the teeth of the splintered and started planks. When I remembered an old tradition about railway accidents, recommending you in such cases to lie down flat on the floor, I trembled to think of the paralysed victims of such theoretical folly.

Now we were all safe, some of us began to grow cheerful, wishing to remove the ladies' fear. A young barrister who was near me, proposed, if we were kept many hours waiting, to attack the luggage-van, and distribute the barrels of oysters among the hungry passengers. Others asked the guards at what o'clock the next collision would take place. I believe we were all grateful to God for escape. We must have been scarcely human if we had not been; but the mind, when overstrained, finds comfort in such relief, and so, to the end of the world, droll witnesses at murder trials and odd events at the reading of wills must produce an irresistable laugh.

While we were waiting for the express engine, laden with navvies from London, and for help from Farnborough, I strolled away from the reassured passengers through a side gate, to which a farmer's gig was tied, and walked along the quiet country road, enjoying the calm fresh sunlight and the bright chill November blue air.

It was humiliating to man, the monarch of the universe, to see what little effect the all but death of some two hundred human beings had caused the animal and vegetable kingdom of Fleet Pond, near Farnborough. The white cows were feeding leisurely and untroubled in the meadows, the rooks were tossing about over the heath, the sparrows were visiting from tree to tree, and the dead leaves were fisting in troops down the lanes as if returning gay, in companies, from the funeral of summer. And there, where the beech shone red, and the few birch leaves, dry and yellow and wrinkled, were wet and golden with the morning dew, I could hear a farmer pulling up his gig on the crown of the red-brick-railway arch, just above where the train's smoke had blackened it, discoursing as an eye-witness of the late collision or duel of trains. Thus he put it to the friend he met, pointing with a shake of his fat head at the wreck. I was a long way from him, but I have the keen, practised ears of a hunter, and the air was clear and resonant, so, putting my head on one side, I caught it all as in a net:

"Lookun here, friend Jackson, I was just crossing this bridge when th' express passed, and by the time I got up to you, where the lady and children are coming, I sees the other train on the same line. I knew there would be something happen, so I push the old mare to a gallop and got up just as ur run into un."

He was not a graphic man, and seemed to have no further thought of the accident.

One thing was quite apparent, and formed my moral of the affair: that it was the universal custom in collisions to hush up every thing as much and as soon as possible. The broken iron was spirited away, the doors of the carriages where the floors were crushed were closed, the bruised persons laid away, the ruins patched up, and the earth smoothed over the might-have-been grave as craftily and quickly as possible. Every moment the memory of the guards become more and more indifferent. A fog every moment opaquer rose between us and the accident. No one was hurt, nothing was injured. The engine, worth two thousand pounds, was a trifle, and might be repaired. The stoker was unharmed. The line would soon be cleared. We should soon be on to Basingstoke, where the Salisbury train was waiting for us. It was no one's fault; no guard present had ever been in more than two collisions before. The head porter at Farnborough thought it better not to speak; it was "not his place, you know," and the company did not like speaking. You never from anybody could have gathered that we, the express train, had run into a goods train that ought not to have been on the line, that they were shunting to get out of our way a bad ten minutes too late; and lastly, that danger signals, both at station and on train, if up, had been utterly useless, and had been disregarded. One would really never have thought that two hundred Englishmen had just been driven over a place of graves and escaped by a miracle.

All the evening of the day of the collision I felt like a man who has been thrown heavily out hunting, not bone-broken, but jarred from top to heel, with headache and general sense of disturbance. Now I began to understand why timid men shut the carriage window when a black tunnel swallows them; why, when a train slackens speed or stops, a dozen staring anxious heads emerge like tortoises from carriage windows. Now I know why fretful men thrust the reeking Times into your hands just as you leave a station, and with lore fingers jammed on a small paragraph about collision, ask you angrily "if it isn't shameful?"

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the hreath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a heverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedeuted. It is a favorite with actresses and opera siugers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for uud take noue but LYON'S, bearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervatiou, listlessuess, sleepiness, melancholy, waut of uppetite, etc., compose a class of ailmeuts greater than all otbers combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaints tbey have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persous of sedeutary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spavin, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Strains, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing und wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with siguature of G. W. Westbrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky. and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off and turning gray, and promotes its growth upon prematurely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.

E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heurtburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatuleucy, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparatiou and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere. at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no other.

DR. H. A. BENTON,

The ELECTRO-MAGNETIC PHYSICIAN, is now cosily fixed in his new quarters, over Congress Hall, Bush street, adjoining the Russ House, and is prepared to treat patients in all the best modes of curing. The Electro-Medicated and Hot Air Baths will do wonders in many cases, in breaking up obstructions, and if properly attended afterwards, will insure success.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three-spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagous have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultatiou he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

RUSSELL & HOLDING'S

EXCHANGE,

622 Market street, between Montgomery and Kearny.

THE FINEST WINES AND LIQUORS ARE dispensed at the Exchange.
All the British Columbia papers on file.
N. B.—A commodious BACK ROOM for the accommodation of customers is one of the feature of the establishment. ☞Families supplied, and Goods delivered Free of charge.

FAUST CELLAR,

Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets, San Francisco.

A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.
FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,

SUCCESSOR TO
WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine
Wines, Liquors and Segars,
NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,
Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,

LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN

WINES AND LIQUORS.

NO. 16 THIRD STREET,

Between Market and Stevenson Streets., San Francisco

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
In this City,
536 Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY

PRINTING?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE

At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSing out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth: and Main street, Stockton.

MRS. G. M. NICHOLS,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY,

No. 661 Clay street, 2 doors below Kearney,

San Francisco.

A Big Thing and no Humbug.

OF THE THOUSANDS OF COMPOUNDS BEFORE the public, "RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA" for the Hair, alone, does just what it promises.

Hon. Warren Chase, the Spiritualist Lecturer, says: "My hair and whiskers have been many years gray. RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA has restored both to their original color, black, and covered the baldness on the top of my head with a fine growth of black hair I have several friends who have used it with the same results, and I cordially recommend it as one of the few medicines that will do what its labels and circulars claim for it. WARREN CHASE."

October, 1865

Call for RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA, and for your own pleasure and comfort do not be put off with anything else, "said to be just as good."

JOHN F. SNOW,
24 Post street, San Francisco,
Agent for the Pacific Coast.

ALSO,

Coloring, Cleansing and Restoring of

FEATHERS, KID GLOVES, SILKS, FURS, WOOLENS, ETC.,

24 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny, SAN FRANCISCO.

RHEUMATISM CAN BE CURED

BY USING

Healy's Rheumatic Liniment,

Which is warranted to cure the most obstinate cases of CHRONIC OR INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.

It relaxes the muscles, removes the pain, and restores health and vigor to the system.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 6. 1866.

MR. HEALY—Dear Sir: Having witnessed many cures effected by your Rheumatic Liniment, I take great pleasure in universally recommending it to those in search of a really good article.

Yours, &c., FRANK V. SCUDDER.

Mr. FRANK HEALY: I suffered considerable rheumatic pains in both shoulders for a long time. I tried many remedies to get relief, but to no purpose. I was advised to try a bottle of "Healy's Rheumatic Liniment," which I did, and it has greatly relieved me. I am now using the second bottle, and am confident that in a few days I shall be well.

Yours, &c., R. PAGE,
316, Montgomery street.

San Francisco, Feb, 9, 1866.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 13, 1866.

To F. HEALY: I have heard much and seen practical proofs of your Liniment, and I endorse all you claim for it. L. GOETZ,
335, 337, Pine street.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 12, 1866.

Dear Sir: I have used the bottle of Liniment you sent me, and it has done me good. Please send me another. WM. HORR,
718, Battery street

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT is for sale by all Druggists on the Pacific coast.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Wholesale Agents, CRANE & BRIGHAM, and R. H. McDONALD & Co., SAN FRANCISCO.

DR. HAYDEN,

Dentist,

653 Clay street, between Kearny and Montgomery, San Francisco.

PIANOS!

PIANOS!

AT

AT PRICES FROM $150 TO $600,

AT WALTER S. PIERCE'S PIANO ROOMS, 536 MARKET STREET, opposite Second.

N. B —The highest cash price paid for Second-hand Pianos.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

Occidental Restaurant.

J. E. SORBIER & CO., - - PROPRIETORS,

536 Washington street,

A few doors below Montgomery.

R. A. THOMPSON,

DEALER IN

Coal and Charcoal,

816 and 818 Mission st., near the corner of Fourth, SAN FRANCISCO.

NOTARIAL APPOINTMENT.—Mr. A. J. Randall, a pioneer resident of this city, and resident on this coast anterior to the gold discovery, has been appointed Notary by Governor Low. Mr. Randall is a thorough Spanish scholar and an adept in the Notary business, having served three terms as Notary, previous to this present appointment. Mr Randall's office is 509 California street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.'s office.

A SENSIBLE SERENADE.

"I sing beneath your lattice, Love,
A song of great regard for you;
The moon is getting rather high;
My voice is, too.

"The lakelet in deep shadow lies,
Where frogs make much hullaballoo;
I think they sing a trifle hoarse,
And Love, me too.

"The blossoms on the pumpkin vine
Are weeping diamond tears of dew:
'Tis warm; the flowers are wilting fast;
My linen too.

"All motionless the cedars stand,
With silent moonbeams slanting through,
The very air is drowsy, Love,
And I am too.

"O could I soar on loving wings,
And at your window gently woo!
But then your lattice you would bolt,
So I'll bolt too.

"And now I've done my serenade,
Farewell! my best regards to you;
I'll close with one (French) word for all,
And that is tout.

"—GEORGE ARNOLD."

MUSICAL FACULTY OF BIRDS.

Do the birds appreciate human music? do they even appreciate their own? I think it would be difficult to come to the conclusion that birds—singing birds, at least—are not musicians, in the sense of feeling not only what they execute, but feeling. moreover, the music executed by human voices and on human instruments. It is well known that the strains of singing birds are not so wholly an affair of nature that they cannot be modified or even altered by education. Bird-fanciers are well aware that there are three distinct schools, as one may call them, of canary-bird music—the German, the Belgian and the English—and it is also a well-known fact that the singing of British goldfinches differs in certain particulars according as they are obtained from different neighborhoods.

Perhaps, of all singing-birds, the most remarkable effect of education is seen in bullfinches. Naturally, these pretty birds have very harsh voices, in no way musical. How prettily they can be made to sing by education most of us know by experience. That education chiefly takes place in Germany, and the singing, or rather whistling masters, are shoemakers. It is a very laborious, or at any rate a very protracted affair, the imparting of a musical education to these bullfinches. Master Crispin, sitting on his stool playing awl and wax-end, whistles to his bird-recruits some little ditty. They begin to listen attentively very soon, and seldom fail, in the end, to learn their appointed lesson. I once had the honor of knowing a pair of bullfinches whose musical education had attained so high a degree of excellence that they were in the habit of singing in concert; not in unison, either—that is to say, the same notes—but a regularly-harmonized first and second. Their intonation was perfect; but, as is the case with all bird musicians, their time was occasionally weak. When I first made the acquaintance of these bullfinches, their musical education had long ceased; that is to say, they had long dismissed their music-master. Nevertheless they practised day by day their one piece (they knew but one,) as all musicians proud of their art, and desirous to excel, ought to do. Some few turning points of difficulty there were in their one piece, as usually happens. It was amusing then, at first, and in the end somewhat tiresome, to hear how they would try back, go over the troublesome notes again, and strive to make them even. I do not know how these birds had been educated so as to teach them that most difficult specialty of the musician's art, harmony.

Important Notice
TO
TAX-PAYERS.

THE ATTENTION OF EVERY CITIZEN OF THE City and County of San Francisco is called to the following provisions of the Law in relation to the assessment of REAL ESTATE AND PERSONAL PROPERTY for State and City and County Taxes:

"Between the first Monday in February and the second Monday in March, EVERY PERSON, corporation, association, company or firm, owning, claiming, or having any interest in, or having the POSSESSION, CHARGE OR CONTROL of any real estate, or any PERSONAL PROPERTY, shall deliver to the City and County Assessor, at his office, a statement under oath, of all such real estate or personal property, and the CASH VALUE of such personal property." (Statues 1862, page 57.)

"All property, both real and personal, of every kind, nature, and description whatever, within this State, whether owned by individuals or corporations, and whether its owner be a RESIDENT OR NON-RESIDENT of this State, is liable to taxation; and all persons, corporations, and associations doing business in this State, either as principals or partners, whether special or otherwise, and not residents of the State, shall be assessed and taxed on all sums invested in any manner in said business, in this State, the same as if they were residents of this State; and said taxes shall be collected from the property within this State of said persons, corporations, associations, or firms." (Statutes 1866, page 803.)

Printed copies of the form of statement, as prescribed by law, can be obtained at the Assessor's Office, City Hall, without charge.

WILLIAM R. WHEATON,
1e9 City and County Assessor.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the
S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel.
Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,
Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

MASONIC TEMPLE,
Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!
Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

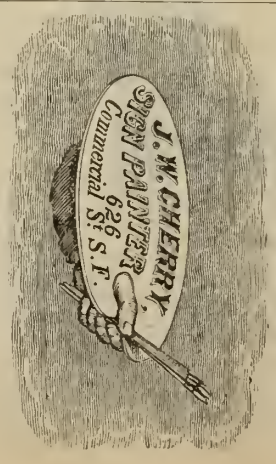
10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

A. J. PLATE,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

ALSO,
COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS, Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, &c., &c.,
NO. 411 SANSOME STREET,
Between Commercial and Sacramento Sts., San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES AT

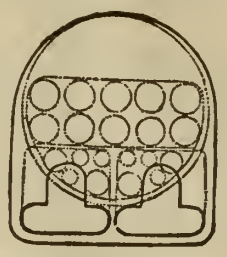


PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

FULTON FOUNDRY & IRON WORKS
HINCKLEY & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
STEAM ENGINES,
Quartz, Flour and Saw Mills,
Mining Machinery, and all kinds of Iron and Brass Castings,
45, 47 AND 49 FIRST STREET
Between Market and Mission—San Francisco.

BRODIE'S IMPROVED
QUARTZ-CRUSHER.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF
HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS
Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

PIONEER WORKS.
KITTREDGE & LEAVITT,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Fire Proof Doors and Shutters,
Bank Vaults, Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc,
Corner Fremont and Market street, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of Second Hand Fire Proof Doors and Shutters.

Also, manufacture to order the California Burglar and Fire-Proof Safe, with the Burglar's Lock invented by Mr. W. C. Bussey, of Jackson, Amador county, Cal. No Key required to open this Safe. It is done by Mathematical Calculation. Call and examine for yourselves, at our Works,

THIS LOCK PUT ON SAFES NOW IN USE

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOSEPH H. WEED,
V. KINGWELL.

SAN FRANCISCO
Foundry and Machine Works,
Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,
Manufacturers of
MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,
Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.
ALSO,
Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,
Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight, without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,
Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.

DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

WILLIAM BRODIE,
California Foundry,
FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,
San Francisco.

LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS
Of every description, made to order.
Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomory.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st.
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market.
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 15 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 120 Montgomery street.
Dana & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Sauhmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R G Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOODAND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 850 Howard street.

SURRATT'S BEHAVIOR IN ITALY.—A letter from Rome gives the following interesting particulars concerning Surratt:

"The interest manifested here in the man's capture, escape and subsequent recapture, can only second that felt in the United States. Every little incident of the conspirator's former life is eagerly talked over and forms the subject of many a quiet coterie. The zouaves, in whose regiment he served ten months, and particularly the third company, of which he was a member, find themselves made much of on account of the information they can give respecting his life with them, his habits, doings and character. From this source I glean that he was an unobtrusive sort of fellow, a little insubordinate at times, and perhaps too reserved with his comrades to be a general favorite. He passed his days on guard in writing on the wall phrases decipherable by none but himself. When in barracks he would write on paper by the hour, and then tear up the manuscript. He read little, talked less, but evinced much partiality for wrestling at, which practice he was an adept. Sometimes he was seized with fits of nervous frenzy, when he would attack the person next him, and desist as suddenly and with as little cause as he began the assault. He proved himself very active and zealous on several occasions when in pursuit of brigands, and gained the credit of being a determined, energetic, lawless dare devil, a character which his previous career certainly shows he richly deserved. It is no easy matter to enlist into the zouaves at the present time even, and when he entered them it was still more difficult a matter; his admission into the regiment was due to the interest taken in him by an American lady in Rome—a rebel of course—who, knowing his previous history, wished to befriend him. Too wise to manage the matter openly, she requested the assistance of another lady, an English person, who, unaware for whom she asked the favor, obtained his acceptance into the "Pope's Own." From a guide here I learned that Watson or Surratt was made much of by a party of Americans during the summer months. These used to send for him and entertain him and always sent him back pretty liberally supplied with funds. I regret I cannot obtain the name of the worthy family."

THE SKY AN INDICATOR OF THE WEATHER.—The color of the sky at particular times affords wonderful good guidance. Not only does a rosy sunset presage good weather and a ruddy sunrise bad weather, but there are other tints which speak with equal clearness and accuracy. A bright yellow sky in the evening indicates wind; a pale yellow, wet; a neutral gray color constitutes a favorable sign in the evening, and an unfavorable one in the morning. The clouds are full of meaning in themselves. If their forms are soft, undefined, and full feathery, the weather will be fine; if their edges are hard, sharp, and definite, it will be foul. Generally speaking, any deep, unusual hues betoken wind or rain; while the more quiet and delicate tints bespeak fair weather. These are simple maxims, and yet not so simple but that the British Board of Trade has thought fit to publish them for the use of sea-faring men.

THE UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION is the name of a recently incorporated association that has purchased the grounds adjacent to, and surrounding those of the Presbyterian University College, just to the South of Bernal Heights. The favorable locality of the land; the size of the lots—100x120 feet each—and the liberal terms of purchasing—$315 in $10 monthly instalments—induced rapid subscriptions on the part of the public, and made business very lively for these dull times, in the office of the association, during the latter part of the week. Homestead Associations have proved very profitable institutions in San Francisco.

A scribbler says life is too short to drink poor whisky, or to make love to an ugly woman.

A Cincinnati clergyman has preached twenty-seven barrels of sermons.

Egypt is getting liberal, a constitution having been granted the people.

A chap in St. Louis came near stealing a steam boat the other day.

It is calculated that a dancing belle in one season traverses five hundred miles of floor.

The champagne cellar at Epernay are about four miles long and contain five million bottles.

Thus far Franconia has had the best of the cold weather, the thermometer marking 29 degrees.

UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION.

INCORPORATED JANUARY 23d, 1867.

THE OBJECT OF SAID CORPORATION IS THE purchase of forty-three full Blocks and fifteen fractional Blocks of Land in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in what is known as the "University Mound Tract Survey," on file in the office of the City and County Recorder, of said city and county, as follows:

FULL BLOCKS.

Numbers Twenty-one, Forty-four, Forty-five, Forty seven, Sixty-one, Sixty-two, Sixty-three, Seventy-five, Seventy-six, Seventy-seven, Seventy-eight, Seventy-nine, Eighty-five, Eighty-six, Eighty seven, Eighty eight, Eighty-nine, Ninety, Ninety-two, Ninety-three, Ninety-four, Ninety-five, Ninety-six, Ninety seven, One Hundred, One Hundred and One, One Hundred and Two, One Hundred and Four, One Hundred and Five, One Hundred and Six, One Hundred and Seven, One Hundred and Ten, One Hundred and Eleven, One Hundred and Twelve, One Hundred and Thirteen, One Hundred and Fourteen, One Hundred and Fifteen, One Hundred and Sixteen, One Hundred and Seventeen, One Hundred and Eighteen, One Hundred and Nineteen, One Hundred and Twenty-eight, and One Hundred and Twenty-nine.

FRACTIONAL BLOCKS.

Numbers Eight, Nine, Sixty, Sixty-four, Eighty-three, Eighty-four, Ninety one, One Hundred and Three, One Hundred and Eight, One Hundred and Nine, One Hundred and Twenty-two, One Hundred and Twenty-three, One Hundred and Twenty-four, One Hundred and Twenty-five, One Hundred and Twenty-six; and the same being a portion of the Bernal Ranch—the improvements thereof—and the subdivision thereof into lots and parcels suitable for Homesteads, and the distribution of such lots or parcels among the shareholders.

For further information, READ THE PROSPECTUS containing Act of Incorporation, Articles of Association, etc. All persons desirous of securing lots in the UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION, are requested to apply at once at their

OFFICE, IN STEVENSON'S BUILDING, CORNER OF MONTGOMERY AND CALIFORNIA STS.

As shares are being rapidly taken, and the opportunity will soon be lost. Prospectus and maps can be obtained free of charge, at the office of the Association.

OFFICERS OF THE UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION.

E. THOMAS, D. D., - - - - - President.
LESTER L. ROBINSON, - - - - - Treasurer.
THOMAS B. LEWIS, - - - - - Secretary.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

E. Thomas, Lester L. Robinson,
Geo. B. Taylor, Thomas B. Lewis,
H. A. Gorley.

By order of the Board.

THOMAS B. LEWIS,
Secretary University Homestead Association.

UNION BUSINESS COLLEGE.

(MERCHANTS' INSURANCE BUILDING,)

408 CALIFORNIA ST.

THIS Institution is designed to prepare Boys and Men for business pursuits, and to impart a thorough commercial education. It is conducted upon thorough business principles. The student, upon entering the college, is furnished with a capital in cash and merchandise, rents a place of business, opens an account with the bank, insures his goods in the insurance office of the College, and enters upon the arena of business. He commences speculation, carrying out all the details of trade, buying and selling goods, depositing in and checking from the Bank, making and negotiating notes, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., recording the transactions and keeping the books in a regular and scientific manner. From this he advances to other capacities, until he finally takes his position in the Union Business College Bank, a regularly established institution, complete in all its appointments, and having a circulation of one million in college currency. This course saves from four to six weeks time in copying useless manuscripts. There is no vacation, and students can enter upon any business day during the year. The public are invited to call and examine the various Departments. Sessions day and evening.

JAMES VINSONHALLER, President.

AGENTS WANTED TO CANVASS FOR THE only official Southern History of the War. THE LOST CAUSE, by E. A. Pollard, the popular Historian of the South, and editor of the Richmond Examiner during the war. Complete in one large royal octavo volume, with

24 FINE STEEL PORTRAITS,

giving a full and authentic account of the rise and fall of the late Southern Confederacy. Written under the encouragement of Generals R. E. Lee, Johnston, Beauregard and others. The work is being liberally patronized by leading men of all classes, eager to bear

"THE OTHER SIDE,"

and thus arrive at the truth of history, which it is impossible to do from the many histories written only from a Northern stand-point.

Agents and the public are cautioned against any other work purporting to be this one. To energetic men and women a rare chance is offered to make money. Don't fail to send for circulars of this great and important work. Address

F. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S

STEAM ENGINE WORKS

Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.

HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,

Portable Engines of all sizes,

Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the

SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP

of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

Splendid Presents

TO SEND ABROAD.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS

.....OF.....

California Scenery!

A SERIES OF OVER

ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!

ILLUSTRATING

The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.

PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,

And Published by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 & 319 Montgomery Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

JOHN GORMAN,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

No. 619 Merchant street,

Above Montgomery.....(South side.)

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS.CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B M. HARTSHORNE, President.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.
When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR FEBRUARY.

February 18th—GOLDEN CITY, Captain Jas. T. Watkins, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Harris.
February 28th—MONTANO, Capt. Jos. Suttou, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Furber.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on April 3d, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

The steamship HERMANN, Capt. M. P Nolan, will be dispatched on Friday, March 1, for Yokohama, carrying passengers and freight, and the U. S. mails.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

PRESERVE YOUR SIGHT.

PERFECT SPECTACLES EXactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minute employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill-suited or common Spectacles.

PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent pre-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.

Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

Between lifornia and Pine

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,

(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)

NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,

From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.

Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

THEODORE KALLENBERG,

No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,

Machinist,

Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,

And all kinds of

Asphaltum Work,

Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco.

TRUMP & BRADY,

No. 615 Market street,

In Basement of St. Lawrence House, opposite Montgomery,

STEAM AND GAS FITTING,

PLUMBING, Etc.

Gas Letters and Reflectors made to order. Ships, Stores, and Dwelling fitted up with Steam, Water and Gas Pipes, at the lowest rates.

Pumps Repaired, and all kinds of Jobbing done at the shortest notice.

All Work warranted, or no charges made.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. . . . Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

REMOVAL!

Wightman & Hardie's

DRY GOODS AND CARPET WAREHOUSE

HAS REMOVED

To No. 220 Sansome Street,

TWO DOORS SOUTH OF CALIFORNIA.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,

Practical Card and Seal Engraver,

AND PLATE PRINTER,

No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

624 Clay street, San Francisco.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,

Shoulder Braces, etc.,

FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,

AT

GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S

NEW YORK BRANCH

Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,

No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,

(Opposite the Russ' House,)

J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc

---

WILSON & EVANS,

No. 513 Clay street,

Importers and Dealers in

FIREARMS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION,

SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Pouches, Eley's Caps, Wads, and all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing-Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Linen and Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.

WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY

NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warranted to give satisfaction.

WILSON & EVANS.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

B. MACKAY,

ARCHITECT,

NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

No. 224 Montgomery street,

Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,

San Francisco.

WM. WORTHINGTON,

House and Sign Painter,

Dealer in

PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,

735 Market street,

Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

SAUL & McARRON,

Carriage Manufactory,

NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,

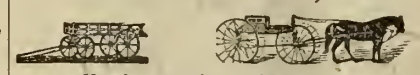
Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.

A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,



Manufacturers of every description of

CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. ☞ All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.

☞ New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of

LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,

37 and 39 Webb street,

Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of

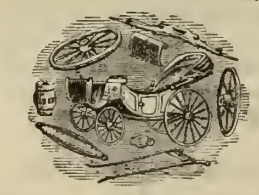
WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,

A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.

Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.

H. CASEBOLT.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,

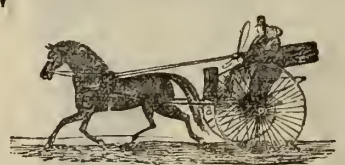
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.

Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

WILLIAM TRUMBULL,



Manufacturer of

Saddles, Harness and Collars,

North-west corner Davis and Commercial streets.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

A good assortment, made from the best Materials, in the highest style of Workmanship, constantly on hand.

Manufacturing and Repairing done promptly, on reasonable terms. ☞ Country Trade solicited.

DR. FONDA SAN FRANCISCO

EYE INFIRMARY,

PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUSIVELY for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.

P. W. FONDA, M. D.,

Surgeon in charge Infirmary,

223 Kearny street between Bush and Sutter.

VAN VLECK & KEITH,

Designers and Engravers

ON WOOD,

No. 611 Clay street, San Francisco.

WM. KEITH. D. VAN VLECK.

N. P. COLE & CO.,

WHOLESALE

Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM

PRICE 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.

PRICE 50 CENTS.

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,

Cor. Sansome & Commercial streets.

Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicines, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE OF POTASS.

THE

Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,

N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

CLEANSE THE BLOOD.

WITH CORRUPT, DISordered or vitiated Blood, you are sick all over. It may burst out in Pimples, or, Sores, or in some active disease, or it may merely keep you listless, depressed and good for nothing. But you cannot have good health while your blood is impure. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA purges out these impurities and stimulates the organs of life into vigorous action, restoring the health and curing disease. Hence it rapidly cures a variety of complaints which are caused by impurity of the blood, such as Scrofula, or Kings' Evil, Tumors, Ulcers, Sores, Eruptions, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose, or Erysipelas, Tetter, or Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Cancer or Cancerous Tumors, Sore Eyes, Female Diseases, such as Retention, Irregularity, Suppression, Whites, Sterility, also Syphilis or Venereal Diseases, Liver Complaints, and Heart Diseases. Try AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and see for yourself the surprising activity with which it cleanses the blood and cures these disorders.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound "Sarsaparilla," and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. We think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. We can only assure the sick, that we offer them the best alterative which we know how to produce, and we have reason to believe, it is by far the most effectual purifier of the blood yet discovered by any body.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is so universally known to surpass every other remedy for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease, that it is useless here to recount the evidence of its virtues. The world knows them.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,

and all Dealers

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

between California and Pine.

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,

Main street, Petaluma.

HUNTING WITH THE LASSO.

The following California bear story is from Col. Marcy's "Thirty Years of Army Life on the Border:"

A naval officer, many years ago, made the experiment of hunting with the lasso, but his successes was by no means decisive. The officer had, it appeared, by constant practice upon the ship, while making the long and tiresome voyage round the Horn, acquired very considerable proficiency in the use of the lasso, and was able, at twenty or thirty paces, to throw the noose over the head of the negro cook at almost every cast. So confident had he become in his skill, that, upon his arrival upon the coast of Southern California, he employed a guide, and mounted upon a well-trained horse, with his lasso properly coiled and ready for use, he one morning set out for the mountains, with the firm resolve of bagging a few grizzlies before night.

He had not been out a great while before he encountered one of the largest specimens of the mighty beast, whose terrific aspect amazed him not a little; but, as he had come out with a firm determination to capture a grizzly, in direct opposition to the advice of his guide, he resolved to show that he was equal to the occasion. Accordingly he seized his lasso, and, riding up near the animal, gave it several rapid whirls above his head in the most artistic manner, and sent the noose directly around the bear's neck at the very first cast; but the animal, instead of taking to his heels and endeavoring to run away, as he had anticipated, very deliberately sat up on his haunches, facing his adversary, and commenced making a very careful examination of the rope. He turned his head from one side to the other in looking at it; he felt it with his paws, and scrutinized it very closely, as if it was something he could not comprehend. In the meantime the officer had turned his horse in an opposite direction, and applying the rowels to his sides most vigorously, with the confident expectation that he was to choke the bear to death, and drag him off in triumph; but, to his astonishment, the horse, with his utmost efforts, did not seem to advance. The great strain upon the lasso, however, began to choke the bear so much that he soon became enraged, and gave the rope several violent slaps, first with one paw and then with the other; but, finding that this did not relieve him, he seized the lasso with both paws, and commenced pulling it in hand over hand, or rather paw over paw, and bringing with it horse and rider that were attached to the opposite extremity. The officer redoubled the application of both whip and spurs, but it was all of no avail,—he had evidently "caught a Tartar;" and in spite of all the efforts of his horse he recoiled rather than advanced.

In this intensely exciting and critical juncture he cast a hasty glance to the rear, and, to his horror, found himself steadily backing toward the frightful monster, who sat up with his eyes glaring like balls of fire, his huge mouth wide open and frothing with rage, and sending forth the most terrific and deep-toned roars. He now, for the first time, felt seriously alarmed, and cried out vociferously for his guide to come to his rescue.

The latter responded promptly, rode up, cut the lasso, and extricated the amateur gentleman from his perilous position. He was much rejoiced at his escape, and, in reply to the inquiry of the guide as to whether he desired to continue hunting, he said it was getting too late that he believed he would capture no more grizzlies that day.

IN the cafés, and other houses of entertainment, in Paris, there are, in all, twenty-seven thousand seven hundred and eleven billiard-tables. The estimated annual receipts from these, taken roughly, are four millions of francs.

"LOOK well before you leap," is very good advice in its way; but how can sickly-looking people follow it?

What is the greatest virtue in a sea captain? Wrecklessness.

Fireman's Fund

INSURANCE COMPANY.

ABSTRACT from Statement for Year ending Dec. 31, 1866:

Capital stock, all paid up, - -	$500,000 00
Surplus, - - - - - -	181,139 39
		$681,139 39

ASSETS.

Loans on Real Estate, - -	$471,404 00
Loans on Personal Property, -	79,685 92
Real Estate owned by Company,	78,738 30
Cash on hand and in Bank, -	26,817 30
Other Securities, - - -	27,138 45
		$683,784 97

LIABILITIES.

Amount of personal accounts, $973 73
Dividends unpaid, - -	1,671 85
	2,645 58
		$681,139 39
Am't of losses paid during the year,	$57,290 12
Amount of losses unsettled, -	5,339 40
		$62,629 52
Dividend declared for 1866		$87,500 00

THE FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE COMPANY beg leave to call the attention of the public to their ANNUAL STATEMENT, feeling satisfied that a careful examination of the same will convince people of its stability, and induce many to patronize the Company.

The greatest amount taken on any one risk is $50,000, and when any risk is considered too great a portion is reinsured in responsible Companies.

Desirable risks taken at REDUCED RATES.

Losses paid in United States Coin.

W. B. BOURN, President.
D. J. STAPLES,
Vice-President and Executive Officer.
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.

OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL

Insurance Company,

Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. Rothschild, Secretary.

GREAT WESTERN

Life Insurance Company.

OF NEW YORK.

STOCK and MUTUAL

The Security of the Stock Plan, with all the Advantages of the Mutual System.

POLICIES AND DIVIDENDS ARE NON-FORFEITABLE.

Thirty Days Grace for Payment of Premiums.

J. W. BRUMAGIN.
General Agent for California,
Office 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard TABLE

MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,
612 BATTERY STREET,
Between Jackson and Pacific, San Francisco,

Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements. Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description.

☞ All goods sold are warranted.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of John Couch, the Administrator of Sarah McLaughlin, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his annual and final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered that all persons interested in the estate of the said Sarah McLaughlin, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said City and County, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order for distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Sarah McLaughlin deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County.

M. C. BLAKE Probate Judge.

Dated San Francisco, February 8th, 1867.

I. N. THORNE, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. fe9 5t

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, made on 6th day of February A. D. 1867, in the matter of the Estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on THURSDAY, the 14th day of March, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the counting-room of J. C. Merrill & Co., Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title, interest and estate of said minors Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, of, in and to all the undivided two ninths of the lot of land situated in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the westerly side of Berry street, one hundred and thirty-seven and a half (137 1-2) feet northeasterly from the northeast corner of Berry and Third streets; thence running northeasterly along said westerly side of Berry street one hundred and thirty seven and a half (137 1-2) feet to a point; thence at a right angle northwesterly two hundred and forty (240) feet more or less to a point in the easterly line of King street; thence at a right angle southwesterly along said line of King street one hundred and thirty-seven and a half (137 1-2) feet; and thence at a right angle southeasterly two hundred and forty feet, more or less, to the point of beginning.

And offers or bids for said property, in writing will be received at said place, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county, from this date till Thursday the 14th day of March, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon, by the undersigned. J. C. MERRILL,

Guardian of the Estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, minors. f9

Dated February 8th, 1867.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOSEPH W. KERR, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Honora Kerr, the Administratrix of the Estate of Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, setting forth that she has filed her final account of her administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, Anno Domini, 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, according to law:

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published once a week, for four successive weeks, before the said 11th day of March A. D., 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated, February 5th, 1867. f9 5t

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of said City and County, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order on file and of record in my office.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 8th day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
[SEAL AND STAMP.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.
HAIGHT & PIERSON, Attorneys for Petitioner.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days, otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASUCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF WILLIAM SHANAHAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of William Shanahan, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his office, at the store of Maurice Dore & Co, No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California. Dated February 1, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the Estate of William Shanahan, deceased. f2 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE HAMILTON THOMPSON, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of GEORGE HAMILTON THOMPSON, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the U. S. Surveyor General's office, Pioneer Hall, Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, January 25th, 1867.

G. HOWARD THOMPSON,
Administrator of Estate of George Hamilton Thompson, deceased, j26 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF AUGUSTA SAAL.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of Augusta Saal, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at the office of his Attorney, R. W. Hent, Esq., northwest corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets, in the city and county of San Francisco. Dated February 9th, 1867.

H. O. GOUGH, Administrator of the Estate of Augusta Saal, deceased. f9 5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

CECILE PEBELIE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELIE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelie, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you, by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff be permitted to resume her maiden name, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[L. S.] By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of FRANCOISE P. BETUEL, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Francois M. Betuel, the Executor of the last will and testament of Francoise P. Betuel, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the devisees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Francoise P. Betuel, deceased, appear before the said Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the devisees of the said Francoise F. Betuel, deceased, according to law:

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before the said eleventh day March, A. D. 1867: in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 5th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
Of the City and County of San Francisco, }

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true, full and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 8th day of February A. D. 1867

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
j9 5t By A. J. JEGHLINS, Deputy Clerk.
GEO. F. & WM. H. SHARP, Attorneys for Petitioner.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHN F. LOGAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Mary Banks and Catherine Rogan, claiming to be the nearest relatives and heirs, being the aunts of John F. Logan, deceased, setting forth that the administrator has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said John F. Logan, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the fifth day of March, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said John F. Logan, deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said fifth day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated January 30th, 1867. feb2-4w

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said Court, this first day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk
[Seal and stamp.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—In Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JAMES FITZPATRICK, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the estate of James Fitzpatrick, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratrix at the place of the transaction of her business, at the office of her attorney, Geo. B. Merrill, Esq., No. 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco. MARY FITZPATRICK,

Administratrix of Estate of James Fitzpatrick, deceased. San Francisco, February 24, 1867. 4w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF ELLEN O'CONNELL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of Ellen O'Connell, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his office, No 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco. WM. A. QUARLES, Administrator of the Estate of Ellen O'Connell, deceased.

San Francisco, February 9, 1867.

W. & C. BARTLETT, Attorneys for Administrator, 323 Montgomery street. f9 5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

RUDOLPH STEINBACH, Plaintiff, vs. JOSEPH L REED, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, and the complaint filed in the said city and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JOSEPH L. REED, CAROLINE L. REED, CHRISTIAN L LIEN, PETER S. MCNIEL, SARAH J MCNIEL, EDWARD STRODE, NEWELL WINANTS, JOHN C. FRY, JAMES RYAN, S. CLINTON HASTINGS, Administrator of the Estate of Austin E. Smith, deceased, WILLIAM SMITH, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days, otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to compel the defendants to set forth the nature of their several claims in and to the lands and premises described in the complaint, and that adverse claims of said defendants may be determined by a decree of this Court, that it be declared and adjudged that the defendants, or either of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said lands or premises, and that they be forever debarred from asserting any claim thereto adverse to plaintiff, and that he is the owner thereof in fee, and for such other and further relief as to equity shall seem meet

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 24th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-six. WM LOEWY, Clerk

[SEAL.] By W. R. SATTERLEE, Deputy Clerk.
Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. d22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ELIZABETH BARRETT, Plaintiff, vs. CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the sum of $30,000, being the one-half of the common property of the parties, be adjudged to belong to and he delivered to this plaintiff; and that the care, custody and education of the children of the said parties, viz: Cornelius William and Arthur Joseph, be awarded to the plaintiff; and that pending this suit, the defendant may, by order of this Court, be restrained and enjoined from selling, or in any manner disposing of the common property referred to in the complaint—that is to say, $60,000; and that defendant be ordered to pay plaintiff $250 per month for the support of herself and children, and the further sum of $1,000 as attorneys' fees for the prosecution of this action, and for general belief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judical District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 25th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[SEAL.] By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]
PIXLEY & SMITH, Attorneys for Plaintiff. d29 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUDICIAL District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovenamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers, incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and be put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j19 3m

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE, - - SOLE PROPRIETOR AND MANAGER
CHAS. TIBBETTS, - - BUSINESS MANAGER
C. L. GRAVES, - - - STAGE MANAGER
W. STEVENSON, - - - - TREASURER

ENGAGEMENT OF THE WITCHING ELFIN STAR,
ALICE KINGSBURY!
—SUPPORTED BY—
Mrs. Sophie Edwin, Mrs. H. Jackson,
Mr. J. McCullough, Mr. H. Edwards,
And a Full Corps Dramatique!

THIS AFTERNOON, FEB. 16TH,
KINGSBURY MATINEE!—
THE LONG STRIKE!

THIS EVENING, FEB. 16TH,
Miss Aliee Kingsbury in the New Drama of
THE LONG STRIKE!

MONDAY NIGHT,
LITTLE BAREFOOT!

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle,	$1 00	Orchestra,	$1 00
Parquette,	50	Upper Circle,	25

No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery, Museum,
CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,
On Mission and Valencia streets.
OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four huudred specimens of Zoology bas just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 eents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

Theso Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

"SHERMAN'S March Through Georgia."

ADMISSION, - - - TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

THOS. NAST'S GREAT PAINTING now on Exhibition at the Fine Art Gallery of SNOW & ROOS, 219 Montgomery street. (Russ Block.)

REAL ESTATE FOR SALE
....BY....
DAM & SUTHERLAND.

FINE IMPROVED BUSINESS PROPERTIES ON

Pine street for	$60,000
Market street for	25,000
Market street for	30,000
Post street for	7,000
Pacific street for	7,000
Montgomery street for	37,000
California street for	21,000
Mission and Fifth streets	20,000

CHOICE HOMESTEAD PROPERTIES, BEAUTIfully improved, at the following prices:

One at	$25,000
One at	22,000
One at	21,000
One at	18,000
House and 50-vara lot centrally located	16,500
House and Corner 50-vara Lot and Stable	6,500
New Cottage, well located, gas and water	3,300
House and Lot, 40x137.6, on Harrison near Beal street	4,500
Two Houses and Lots on Silver, between Third and Fourth streets	3,200
House and Lot on Bush street, near Taylor	10,000

SEVEN FIFTY-VARA LOTS ou Lafayette Avenue, near Mayor Coon's resideuce on Gougb street

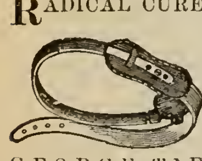
Also, FURNISHED and UNFURNISHED HOUSES TO LET, from $90 to $35.

OAKLAND PROPERTIES FOR SALE.—SEVEN Houses and Lots vory desirably located, from $2,000 to $10,000 each.

LAND BY THE ACRE—From ten to fifty acres within two miles of the Depot.

DAM & SUTHERLAND,
320 Montgomery Street.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!



LADIES' SUPPORTERS,
Shoulder Braces, etc.,
...ITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,
AT
GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S
NEW YORK BRANCH
Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,
No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,
(Opposite the Russ' House,)
J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machiues, etc

GEO. BORDWELL,
ARCHITECT,
No. 224 Moutgomery street,
Opposite the eutrance of the Russ House,
San Frauciseo

NOTARY PUBLIC—
SPANISH NOTARY.

The undersigned having been commissioned by Gov. Low as Notary Public, vice Henry Dreschfeld, deceased, has removed his office to 509 California street, opposite Wells. Fargo & Co., where he will be pleased to see his former patrous, and receive a sbare of public patronage.

A. G. RANDALL,
Notary Public, Broker Translator, etc.
No. 509 California street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S
Private Medical Office,
617 MERCHANT STREET,
Near Commercial, San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist,

No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.

Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such exeresceuces as hard and soft eorns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails peuetrating the flesb, warts, etc.

DEXTER STABLES,
Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - - - PROPRIETOR

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,
No. 635 Washington Street,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House,
FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS,
Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.

Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.

A. ASTREDRO, - - - PROPRIETOR

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,
Importers of
Hardwood Lumber.
ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.
315 PINE STREET,
Near corner of Sansome, San Francisco.

NOTICE.
The Steamship
GOLDEN CITY
Wile leave this port at 8 A. M., FEBRUARY 18th, and will reach Panama on 2d March, makiug an unusually quick trip, and will connect at Aspinwall with the Freuch Trans-Atlantic Co.'s steamer for St. Nazaire.

D. J. OLIVER
101, 103 and 105 Front street, 110 Pine street.
ON THE
NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STREETS,
Where he offers for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

B. MACKAY,
ARCHITECT,
NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Next door to the Pacific Insuranco Company.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examiue our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, Sau Francisco.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S
FEBRUARY
LIST OF PUBLICATIONS

Idalia, a Novel, by "Onida," author of "Strathmore," etc.
Swingin' Round the Cirkle, by Petroleum V. Nasby.
Rachel's Secret, a Novel, by the author of "The Master of Marton."
Poems, Grave and Gay, by George Arnold.
Six Hundred Dollars a Year a Wife's effort at low living.
The Dead Letter, by Seeley Register.
Liffith Lank, or Lunacy, by C. H. Webb, (Inigo)
Amateur Drama, by Geo. M. Baker.
King Rene's Daughter—a Danish Drama, by H. Hertz.
Margaret Hamilton, by Mrs. Newby.
Robert Severne, by Wm. A, Hammond.
Elements of Art Criticism, by G. W. Samson. D. D.
Life and Letters of Joba Wintbrop, Vol. 2, 1630—1649.
The Wuy of the World, a Novel, by Wm. T. Adams. (Oliver Optic.)
Out of Town, a Rural Episode, by Barry Gray.
Hesperia, a Poem, by Richard Henry Wilde.
Parlor Tableaux and Amateur Theatricals.
American Leaves, Notes and Thoughts of Life, by S. Osgood.
Forceythe Wilson's Poems—The Old Sergeant, etc.
Thb Giraffe Hunters, by Capt. Mayae Reed.
Breathings of the Better Life, edited by Lucy Larcom.
Cardock Nowell, by Richard Doddridge Bluckmore.
Infantile Paralysis, by Chas. F. Taylor, M. D.
St. Elmo, a Novel, by A. J. Evans, author of Benlah, etc.
Laboulaye's Fairy Book.
Mugby Junction Dicken's New Christmas Story.
Olive Logan's New Christmas Story: J. Morris's Money.
Lizzie Lorton, by E. Linn Linton.
A Quiet Neighborhood, by George McDoaald, M. A.
The New Gospel of Peace.
History of a Mouthful of Bread, by Jean Macé.
Oil on the Waters.
Madonna Mary, by Mrs. Oliphant.
Bernthul; or, The Son's Revenge, by L. Muhlbach.
Mark Rowlund, by Hawser Murtingale.
Fairies of our Gardeu, by Author of "Child Life in Italy"
Young America Abroad by Oliver Optic—Outward Bound.
Macaulay's Speeches and Poems, 2 vols., new edition.
Bride of Lewellyn, by Mrs. Southwortb.
Phillip II. of Spain, by Chas. Gayarre.
The Vegetable World, Louis Figuier.
Griset's Grotesques; or Jokes drawn on Wood.
200 Sketches, Humorous aud Grotesque, by Gustave Dore.
Pursons on Partnership.
The Egyptian Dream Book and Fortune Telling.
Private Jonrnal and Diury of John H. Surratt.
Ben Buntline, a Novel, by Sir Admirable Fisher.
Book of Praise, by Roundell Palmer.
Hopefully Waiting, by A. D. F. Randolph.
The Character of Jesus Portrayed, by Dr. Daniel Schenkel, 2 vols.
Fuz Buz the Fly and Mother Grabem.
Flowers for the Altur, by M. W. Reynolds
The Book of the Sonuet, edited by Leigh Hunt and S. A. Lee, 2 vols.
The Family Christian Almanac, 1867.
The Church Almanac, 1867.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A, ROMAN & CO.,
Booksellers, Publishers and Importers.
No. 417 aud 419 MONTGOMERY ST.

WILSON & EVANS,
No. 513 Clay street,

Importers aud Dealers in
FIREARMS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION,
SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Pouches, Eley's Caps, Wads, aud all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing-Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Lineu aud Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.

WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY

NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warrauted to give satisfaction.

WILSON & EVANS.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,
Architects,
328 Moutgomery street, Sau Francisco.

R. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 aud 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and Sau Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City aud County of San Francisco, State of California:

In the matter of the estate of MINA HOFFMAN, deceased

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Isaac D. Barnard, Executor of the last will and testament of Mina Hoffman, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed, that all the debts and expense of administration have been duly paid and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the legatees of the will of said deceased, and praying that an order be made ... residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

[illegible] ... the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall, iu said city and county, on TUESDAY, the 19th day of March, A. D. 1867, at two o'clock, P. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the legatees of the last will and testament of the said deceased, according to law:

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before the said Tuesday the 19th day of March, A. D. 1867, in the THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 11th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, } ss.

I Wm Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, aud ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made aud entered upon the minutes of the said Court

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 14th day of February, A. D 1867.

WM LOEWY, Clerk.
By A J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Messrs. W. & C. BARTLETT, Attorneys for Petitioner.
February 16th, 1867. fe16-5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of GEORGE H. HOSSEFROSS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of salo of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by R. H. Sinton and B M. Whitmore, the Executors of the last will of George H. Hossefross, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate and also all the personal property of the estate of George H. Hossefross, deceased, to pay the debts due by the said deceased, aud the debts, expenses and charges of administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons iuterested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on MONDAY, the eighteenth day of March A. D 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court Room of said Probate Court at the City Hall in the city aud county of San Francisco to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Executors to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary; and also the personal property of deceased.

And that a copy of this order bo published at least four successivo weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 12th, 1867

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO } ss.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, truo and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my haud aud the seal of said Court, this 14th day of February A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Messrs. Wiuans & Belknap Attys. for Petitioners.
fe15-3t

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE.—Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco and State of California, made on the 12th day of February, A. D. 1867, iu the matter of the estate of Thos. W. Sutherland, deceased, the undersigned, Administrator in charge of said estate, will sell at private sale for cash payable in United States gold or silver coin, on and subject to the confirmation of said Probate Court on or after the fifth day of March, A. D. 1867, in one parcel all the right, title, interest and estate of the said intestate at the time of his death; and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has by operation of law or otherwise acquired, other than and in addition to that of said intestate at the time of his death, in and to the following real property, lot, piece or parcel of land situate in said city and county of San Francisco and State of Califurnia, bounded and described as follows:

A certain unknown undivided interest of in and to that certain 50 vara lot situated lying and being in the city and rounty of San Francisco, State of California, and kuown on the official map of said city and county as 50-vara lot number 32.

Persons wishing to purchase said real estate will present their bids in writing to the undersigued at his store Nos. 219 and 221 Front street, in the city and county of San Francisco on or before the day set for the sale.

Dated February 13th, 1867.

ALEXANDER R. BALDWIN,
Administrator of the estate of Thomas W. Sutherland, deceased. fe16 3t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOHN THOMAS, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of John Thomas, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten mouths after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated February 14th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of John Thomas, deceased.
J. F. FINN, Atty for Administrator. fe16 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE C. PETERSON, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of George C. Peterson, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten mouths after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at tho office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated February 14th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of George C. Peterson, deceased. fe16-5t

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 14
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, FEBRUARY 23, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL. How I Ran Copper Mines in Tuolumne and Mono, by Prentice; At Point Lobos, a Poem by Charles Warren Stoddard; The Chinese Brigade, by Bomba; The Happy Pair, by James Linen; "Pure English." "Lion's Mouth:" Blown Veal and the Bulletin; The Aristocratic Ladies of Victoria, V. I.; Fire Crackers; Literary Gleanings and Gossip; Editorials; Reviews; Dramatic Affairs, etc. SELECTED STORIES: A Shot at Twelve Paces; The Man Annie Loved; Black Sheep; The Wrong Room; English Women, Paragraphs, Poetry, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO

TO THE CHINESE BRIGADE.

Dowh through the vista of Time to the dying away of the Ages,
I can see, as a poet should vision, (the verh is my license poetic)
What nobody else, I venture to say, hut myself can discover;
The finger of scorn, to wit, namely: the finger of scorn and derision
Point hack to Judge Rix and his Court for holding you, noble Milesians,
In hondage disgraceful unless, perchance, you can furnish your bail-honds.

Oh, gallant Milesians! oh, noble of all that to date are immortal!
Oh, heroes that come from a distance of miles some six or eight thousand!
From the down trodden land that is green, from the beautiful Emerald Island!
You I do honor to-day (it is Thursday, he it remembered—
The dismal day when the Judge has had brought the captured before him)
For I sing proudly to-day in these hexameter verses.

Years gone hy, hut not many, one valorous Commodore Hollins,
With guns and powder destroyed the contemptible village of Greytown.
Stern was his word of command; most terrihle was his presence:
Full three hundred he weighed, or at least two hundred and fifty.
A word, and his guns flashed fire, sent death to the tents of the natives.
Away the poor wretches surviving skedaddled like pitiful cowards.
The victory won, the Commander, the valorous Commodore Hollins,
Prepared his report and sent it to Pierce, who was then in the White House.
And poets all over the land sang pens to Commodore Hollins,
As files of the Evening Post at New York can fully hear witness.

And shall, oh, heroes of Erin! shall you, oh, victors of Tuesday,
Be given the go-hy when Hollins had lines and rhymes hy the thousand?
Not if I know it, my gallant and brawny and hully good fellows:
Your battles were worthy of you and your natures, and must he recorded.

The morning was early; you gathered together prepared for the onslaught.
Four or five hundred strong, you knew the foe could not defeat you.
Thirty in numhers they; not warriors like you, hut cowards,
As was seen by their running awny at the charge of your forces.
Armed with hludgeon and hate, you timed the attack opportunely,
While peacefully they at work in a street that belongs to the city.
Now mark your swiftness of movement, the splendor and sweep of your triumph!
A whoop and a yell Milesian—a rush, and the battle was ended:
So quickly, completely 'twas done that it made an eclipse of Sadowa.
Four or five prisoners seized—and what did you do with the captives?
Put them in chains and consign them to a dungeon of dampness and darkness?
No whit of it; no, you were brave, and as brave ones respected the conquered.
Their freedom you gave them. and only to teach them a suitable lesson,
You pummelled them some—peradventure, hy accident, made a hlow fatal.

No wonder that you were elated at triumph so full and resplendent!
Two or three miles to the South were engaged other gangs of Celestials.
Between you and them was a bridge constructed by Barstow and others,
A mile and an eighth in length, or, as some think, a mile and a quarter.
Under it (only except when the flats hy the ehh are left naked)
Flow waters that sometimes are deep, as when haply the tide is incoming.
When the rough gales howl from the South, or when the savage Southeaster
Sweeps over the inlet it dashes the waves in a fury of frenzy
Against the piers of this hridge until ofttimes it makes the bridge tremble.
Did the hridge deter you, oh, victors? At its length did your fortitude waver?
Did you pause to reflect that perchance in your headlong, precipitate onset,
It might give way underneath you (for now you numhered some thousands?)
Did you think of the four-horse teams, hig wagons heavily laden,
That were crossing this hridge, and children and ladies you might tumble into?
Not a bit of it; no, 'twas enough that the foe was at work at the rope-walks,
Of which the Tuhbses, the son and futher are said to he owners.
Across the bridge you dashed with the fierceness of fiends at Maguire's,
One or two only weakened, and they became strengthened at Siehe's.
The rest of you panting and sweating rushed on with your bludgeons and curses,
With your battle-ery happily chosen of "Down with the foreign intruders!"
Up the highway and up the hill with the valor of soldiers
That know not what fear is until—in your path stands the fence of Kirkpatrick.
Three rails high is this fence, surrounding a beautiful mansion
Two stories in height; and a horse as it happens is in the enclosure;
A horse that once on a time ran away with a man in the city.
In days gone hy this fence was a part of the Oregon forest
Do you hesitate? Not for an instant. Down with the fence, and you onward.
With parts of the fence for weapons, and the noble horse following after!
Up the hill to the summit, down into the valley before you!
Down to the shanties from which the wild Chinamen scatter like feathers!
Down with matches and papers and clubs in the turmoil of hattle!

Oh, black he this day forever, this day when Judge Rix has arraigned you!
Ignoble the ignorant Judge who can see not that wars must have hloodshed,
And conflagrations, and deeds that will make the heart shudder and sicken?

Were you captured in hattle, oh, heroes, that you should be sent to a prison?
Did the Chinese Enemy take you while gallantly fighting their legion?
Nay, shame he it said that while flushed with triumph and noble potations,
You meanly were seized hy the "Stars," by the cowardly minions of Crowley:
That, too, when the minions were few, and you, oh, victors were many.
Shame forever and aye to the gray-coated minions of Crowley,
Who have no sense of respect for valor and glory and numbers!

But you and your deeds of that day of defeat and terror to China,
Will he remembered when they, your captors, no longer hold office;
When Alfred Rix no longer presides in a temple of Justice;
Will be remembered by John in an impotent fury of jargon;
Will be remembered as having made noted a day of the city.
Then what care you for a fine or a prison if you are immortal?
For Alfred Rix what care you, or Crowley, if you can he martyrs?
Let your enemies do as they will, you are free to mutter your "blessings;"
Always provided, of course, that no one is handy to hear you.
Stand fearlessly then, when the Judge shall order you up for your sentence.
Hand over your fine if you can, or if not let the city support you.
And when, in the gaze of the crowd, you slowly depart from the court room,
Do so with grandeur, for know that posterity's eyes are upon you.

—BOMBA.

Oracular.

The man who essays to fill the role of prophet, is always tolerably sure, provided he is sufficiently owlish and dogmatic in his ratiocinations, to find believers. To us metropolitans the coming State election seems to be considerably mixed, and few, even of our most sagacious interpreters of the signs of the times, are hold enough to commit themselves in the question, as to who is to be next Governor. The interior editors, however, seem to know all about it, and some of them speak of the results of the election with as much positiveness as Andrew Jackson Davis, the great spiritualistic "Revelator," does of the mysteries of psychology. As a specimen, take the following from the Santa Cruz Sentinel:

"John Bidwell will he our next Governor; the present Governor, F. F. Low, will succeed Conness in the Senate; Tom Springer or some other mountain man from the mining interest, will he State Printer; Higby will again go to Congress from the Middle District, and San Francisco will not claim a Congressman, this pop. Some one equally as intelligent and industrious will succeed the Hon. D. C. McRuer; Hon. A. B. Hunt stands fair to be Superintendent of Schools, with Oulton for Controller: McCullough for Attorney General."

There is the entire programme. Bidwell is to he next Governor. Will Messrs. Pixley, Fay, Low, Gorham, and the rest take timely notice of the decree, and save themselves the trouble, expense, anxiety, and wear and tear of a canvass?

Blown Veal and the Bulletin.

The Bulletin has for some time past, heen attempting to increase its circulation hy getting up local sensations. There is no chance of another vigilance committee heing formed for the benefit of the Bulletin, so that paper appreciating this fact, goes in for a smaller kind of game. It frightened 785 mothers into hysterics hy its awful disclosures concerning the had effects of "swill milk" on hahies. it pitched into gambling and exposed the terrible results of that demoralizing practice, it has since then, been sniffing round with its virtuous nose, sniffing vigorously in hopes of discovering some moral or physical nastiness existant in our midst It has been rewarded for its efforts; it has discovered "hlown veal." In Monday's issue it says:

"Our attention has been called to a disgusting habit, said to be common among the hutchers of this city of "hlowing up" the carcasses of young veal and lambs. The butcher thrusts his steel into the carcass, making a hole, to which he applies his mouth and blows with all his might. His breath penetrates all the minute cavities in the meat, and gives it a full, puffy appearance, calculated to delight the verdant purchaser into the belief that the meat is unusually fat and plump. Butchers frequently drink whisky, and chew tobacco, and are sometimes afflicted with disease, which may he communicated to the meat. In any event it is a disgusting and filthy practice, and must prove unhealthy to the consumers of meat which has been subjected to this operation."

This is terrible! If the butchers blow up their veal, then indeed, it is right for the Bulletin to hlow up the butchers. Can it, indeed, he true that the butcher applies his mouth to a hole in a carcass "and blows with all his might?" The Bulletin implores the Board of Supervisors to investigate this matter, and prevent the hutchers from blowing their veal—they may blow about it as much as they like, but must not he allowed to fatten it on wind. The Bulletin makes the bold assertion that butchers "are sometimes afflicted with disease which may he communicated to the meat." This is fearful. Who wishes to eat dropsical veal hlown up hy a dropsical hutcher, or a rheumatic leg of lamb inflated hy the rheumatic breath of a rheumatic hutcher Who dare say that consumption has not been spread hy phthisical hutchers pumping wind from diseased lungs into loins of veal? For ourselves, we do not care; whatsoever is sold in the shambles that we eat, asking no questions—not for conscience sake, but—for our stomach's sake. However, since the Bulletin has made this horrifying discovery, and has blown upon the hutchers who hlow their veal, we beseech the Board of Supervisors to pass an ordinance forbidding a butcher to hlow veal with his mouth and "all his might," and to order the police to see that every hutcher is provided with a pair of bellows for the purpose of fatteuing his veal.

The Aristocratic Ladies of Victoria, V. I.

We were perfectly aware that the ladies of Victoria, V. I., who had followed the fortunes of their lords and masters from England, comprised a large number of high-bred ladies who, as in duty hound, are most punctilious in observing the etiquette which is the social law in the hest society in England. We were, however, scarcely prepared to hear that the native ladies had become adepts in the laws of English etiquette since the advent of English ladies to the nothern colony. This appears to he the case. The following story which we can vouch for as being true, proves it: A short time ago a very respectable miner—who, if not quite an English gentleman, was polite and was, moreover, dressed in the height of the fashion—went to a dance given by several "squaws." He approached one of these original ladies of Victoria—whom the supercilious English will persist in calling "squaws"—and requested the pleasure of her company as a partner in the next dance. "The queenly Indian" (as Cooper would call her) rose, drew her graceful form to its full height, darted an indignant glance from her gorgeous ocular orbs at the too presumptuous Caucasian, and exclaimed:—"W-äke! halo! nico introduce!" "Sir! I have never heen introduced to you." It is all very well to say that wherever the white man sets his foot, the red man must accumb; hut we very much doubt whether the light chocolate-and-milk-colored natives of British Columbia will give up their rights without a hard struggle.

Fire Crackers.

We fear that there is more tronble hrewing between the native and adopted citizens, and the Chinese residents on this coast. The telegraphic report of the proceedings in Congress, received here on Thursday last, contained the important news that the section "prohibiting the importation of fire-crackers, had been stricken out of the amended tariff hill." This affects California nearly. The consumption of fire-crackers during the season of the Chinese New Year of festivities is enormous. Were these Chinamen forced by law to buy American-made fire-crackers, our firework manufacturers would be properly protected, and would be enahled to make a handsome profit ont of the Chinese, at least once a year. Now we fear that the disappointed pyrotechnists will exhaust their whole stock on hand, (which might become damp, and consequently, useless before the next 4th of July) in a fiery attack on the Chinese, whose fire-crackers are not to be prohibited from entering our ports. The Irish laborers who simply threw stones at, and used their fists on poor defenseless Chinamen, did not succeed in killing one of them; but if our native-born fire-work makers declare war against the fire-work-makers of the Celestial Empire, the consequences may be terrihle. Rockets held in a horizontal direction, would go through Chinamen most effectively; "fiery dragons" might wrathfully consume many; torpedoes might have a stunning effect on the whole Chinese population. We sincerely trust that the fact of the clause forbidding the importation of fire-crackers having been stricken out of the amended tariff hill, will not lead to any riotous proceedings on the part of the pyrotechnists of this city, although at the same time we are in favor of protection of home industry.

A SHOT AT TWELVE PACES.

"'WHEN I was shooting in India, I one morning received a letter, expressed in some such terms as these :—

"'Dear Morley,—I have a little shooting party on, and want your assistance. Come as soon as possible to Harrison's bungalow ; we will make all arrangements there, and you can go and call on O'Flaherty at once. We are going to have a shot at large game for a change. Don't delay a moment. In these cases the scent should be followed while it's warm. The fellow's a big brute, and shall not escape me, if I know it. He s caught a Tartar this time. We'll put an ounce of lead into his carcass before he's twenty-four hours older, or I'm not yours, ever, 'Dennis O'Dowd.'

"'A tiger, by Jove!' I thought. 'A tiger at last.'

"I had been waiting for weeks in the hope of getting a shot at a tiger, and had been repeatedly tantalized with reports of one being somewhere in the neighbourhood. The jungle came down to within a very short distance of the place where I was staying, and the country looked the very ideal of what a tiger country should be ; but I had never had the luck to get a shot at one yet, although for some time past there had been rumours that a tiger was about. He had been seen here, and heard of there ; he had carried off a sheep in one place, and a bullock in another ; but still no one had been able to find out anything as to his actual whereabouts sufficiently definite to make it of any use our going after him. But now, thought I, O'Dowd must have got the bearings of the beast pretty accurately. I could have wished that Dennis had been a little less flowery and 'tropical' in his account, but he always was a funny dog : the drift of his letter was clear enough ; and if the tiger's have caught a Tartar was not a mere figure of speech, the animal must be a very fine one. The part about O'Flaherty puzzled me a little ; it had always struck me that he and O'Dowd were by no means warm friends ; O'Flaherty was always chaffing O'Dowd, and O'Dowd always vowing vengeance against O'Flaherty. But it was all fun, perhaps ; and O'Flaherty was a great hand at tiger-shooting, I dared to say. At any rate, hurrah for the tiger! And I hurried off to Harrison's bungalow, where I found O'Dowd, with an expression of the utmost determination upon his face, drinking pale ale as if he meant it.

"'Well, O'Dowd,' said I ; 'we're to have a shot at him at last, are we?'

"'That we are,' said he ; 'or I'll post him.'

"Post him! post a tiger! O'Dowd was still at his jokes.

"'Well! And when is it to be?' I asked.

"'I won't have it delayed longer than to-morrow morning,' answered Dennis. 'You must go to O'Flaherty at once, and if he prefers this evening—faith! all the better."

"'O, it depends upon him, does it?' said I.

"'Well, of course it does,' said O'Dowd, 'to a certain extent ; but no later than to-morrow morning, mind. And now I'll tell you all about it.'

"'Ay, let's hear all about the gentleman,' said I, eagerly. 'He's been playing with us long enough. We'll put a bullet into his hide now.'

"'That we will, my boy,' returned O'Dowd. 'Now just listen to me. As I was walking up here last night, I met him sauntering—'

"'What! You met the beast, you say?'

"'And you may call him a baest,' said O'Dowd. 'He was that for certain. He'd had too much ; I'll take my oath of that. I could see it, at once,' continued O'Dowd ; 'I took his measure at a glance.'

"'Well,' said I, anxious to know his size, 'and—'

"'I could see that he'd had a deal more than a taste of the cratur, though he carried it off in such a mighty easy way.'

"'Carried it off easily, did he?' said I ; a sheep of course. He was off with it to his den, no doubt?'

"'No doubt,' said O'Dowd ; 'he generally finishes his evening in his own den, the insatiable thief. Well, when he saw me, he came towards me, roaring—'

"'Roaring! I exclaimed. 'By Jove! you took it very coolly. Didn't you run?'

"'Run!' said O'Dowd, as if uncertain whether to be offended or not ; 'will you please to be serious, Morley. This is no joke I'm telling you.'

"'No joke! My dear O'Dowd, I should think not, indeed. What do you mean?'

"'When he saw me, I tell you, he pulls his cigar out of his mouth—'

"'Eh! What? Cigar!'

"'And comes towards me, roaring out. "What are you doing out o'bed, O'Dowd? Go home with you. You've got chewbercles in your lungs. Go home!"'

"'The tiger,' I grasped out.

"'Tiger! What are you after, Morley?'

"'Who said you'd got tubercle?'

"'Who? Why, O'Flaherty.'

"'O, confound O'Flaherty!' I said. 'Why the plague are you always bringing his name in? Tell me about the tiger.'

"'What tiger?, said O Dowd. 'In the name of mystery, what tiger?'

"'Why, the tiger we're going to shoot, of course.'

"'I'm going to shoot no tiger. I'm going to shoot O'Flaherty.'

"'Shoot O'Flaherty! What are you going to shoot him for?'

"'Why, didn't you understand? He told me I'd got chewbercles.'

"'And so this precious note of yours,' said I, producing the epistle, 'was to tell me that you're going to fight O'Flaherty?'

"'Faith! and you may say that,' replied O'Dowd. 'I thought I'd put it delicately.'

"By Jove! you put it so delicately that I thought it all referred to tiger-shooting.'

"'And did you so?' said Dennis, with some pride. 'Begad! I always was a neat hand at letter-writing.'

"'But you're not serious, I hope, O'Dowd,' I said. 'You don't really mean that you intend to shoot O'Flaherty?'

"'I'll be shot if I don't,' returned O'Dowd, very decidedly. 'He told me I'd got chewbercles in my lungs.'

"And there was very little doubt that O'Flaherty was right. A few years afterwards the fact became fatally evident. Death, and a P. M. examination, put it beyond all question. But even if there had been no grounds for it, the idea of shooting a man for such a reason as this was absurd.

"'My dear fellow,' said I to O'Dowd. 'this must not be allowed to go on. I can't consent to act as your friend in such a case as this. It would be a different matter if he'd given you the lie, or—'

"'Given me the lie!' said O'Dowd. 'Didn't he tell me I'd got chewbercles, when I haven't anything of the kind. Isn't that giving me the lie, to all intents and purposes ; giving me the lie in the throat as deep as the lungs, as Shakespeare says, eh? Once for all, will you undertake the matter?'

"'I'd rather be excused,' I said.

"'Very good,' said O'Dowd ; 'then I wish you a good morning. I'll go and call on O'Grady.'

"O'Grady! The most determined fire-eater in the empire. If he called on O'Grady it would end in a fight as certainly as doomsday. If I undertook it, we might perhaps come to some arrangement ; so, with much reluctance, I told Dennis, that he might command me.

"'I knew you'd never spoil sport,' said O'Dowd. 'Now, look here, Morley, you go at once to O'Flaherty, and give him to understand that I require—'

"'For Heaven's sake, my dear O'Dowd,' said I, anxiously, don't be too hard upon him. Put it as peaceably as you can.'

"'Just what I'm going to do,' said O'Dowd. 'You go to O'Flaherty, and tell him that I require a written apology, which must contain a confession that he was drunk at the time of speaking, and a declaration of his full belief that I've no more got chewbercles than he has. If he declines to give this, I expect immediate satisfaction. I can't put it more peaceably than that, now, can I?'

"I certainly thought it possible, but as O'Dowd adhered to his own opinion, that did no good at all. So, armed with this peaceable message, I took my way to O'Flaherty, whom I found sitting lazily on a cane-bottomed chair, and surrounded by soda-water bottles.

"'Ha! Morley,' said he, 'delighted to see you, upon me conscience. Will you take a peg?* No! You'd better. I've done litttle else ever since I got up. Well! yes, I was a little sprung last night ; just a drapple in me ee, as that Scotch fellow says in his infernal brogue. Begad! looking back upon last night's proceedings, reminds me of those dissolving views, where each picture gets misty, and runs into the next.'

"'I suppose, then, you have no very distinct recollection of the people you met last night, have you?' I inquired."

"'Faith! no,' said he ; 'my memory might be clearer.'

"'Well, the fact is, I'm come upon a very unpleasant mission. You don't remember meeting O'Dowd, do you?'

"'It's O'Dowd you mean!' said O'Flaherty, thoughtfully. Begad, then, I don't.'

"Ah! You did meet him, though, and he says insulted him greatly.'

"'And did I insult him?' said O'Flaherty, taking up a soda-water bottle. 'That's mighty curious. How did I do it?"

"'Well, it seems you said something about his having tubercle of the lung, and he does not like it. He's rather touchy about his chest, you know.'

"'Ay, I know. And did I tell him that?'

"'Yes, you told him that he'd got tubercle ; and he took the speech so much to heart, that I am come from him to say that he expects an apology.'

"'Begad, and were you told to say that?'

"'I was, indeed ; and I'm sure, my dear fellow, you must see how extravagantly absurd we shall all make ourselves if this affair proceeds any further. Every mess-room in India will be laughing at the Tubercle duel. I am sure you must perceive the truth of this, and the absolute necessity of putting a stop to it at once. By Jove, sir, we shall never hear the last of it till the day of our death.'

"'You may say that, indeed,' said O'Flaherty, laughing. 'Faith, it won't be only O'Dowd who'll be troubled with chewbercles, will it?'

"'No that it won't. It's not generally considered an infectious disorder, but it will infect us, at any rate,' said I.

"'Change of air will be the only thing for us,' said O'Flaherty.

"'Then, look here, my dear O'Flaherty,' said I, pushing a writing-case towards him ; 'just scratch two or three lines to say that last night you were, as you've just said, troubled with a drapple in your ee ; and you may add—it's as well to do the thing handsomely while you are about it—that you have perfect faith, ha! ha!—perfect faith in the integrity of O'Dowd's lungs. Come, what do you say?'

"Pop went the soda-water.

"'That,' said O'Flaherty.

"'That! Explain, please."

"'That's all the apology that ye'll get from me.'

"'But, my good sir, if you don't ap—explain in some way, O'Dowd insists upon fighting.'

"'And by the blessed St. Patrick,' said O'Flaherty, his speech becoming ten times more Irish than before at the mention of the national pastime ;—'and by the blessed St. Patrick, I'll humor his fancy. If it's foighting he manes, I'll foight him with all me sowl,—with all the pleasure in life, begad. Ye can't fright Tim O'Flaherty into an apology by telling him that foighting's the alternative, I promise ye.'

"'Fright you,' said I ; 'I never dreamed of frighting you. But reflect for a moment upon the absurdity of the whole affair. Come old fellow, stretch a point, and save us from universal ridicule.'

"'Faith, not I,' said O'Flaherty ; 'the prospect don't trouble me at all to speak of.'

"'Then you decline to apologize altogether?'

"'There, if you haven't stated the case exactly.'

"'Then I've no resource but to ask you for the name of your friend, if you really will not be persuaded to—"

"'I can't really undertake to be persuaded, me dear friend. Are you going? Well, good by ; I'll send some one to call upon you in a twinkling.'

"Disgusted exceedingly, I took my leave and returned to my quarters. The idea of two fellows shooting at each other for no better reason than that one had accused the other of having diseased lungs, was so confoundedly ridiculous, that, setting aside the unpleasantness of being engaged in an affair of this kind at all, I would have given anything to be able to wash my hands of it. But what was to be done? When the two principals—both of them Irishmen too—were resolved on fighting, what could stop them? Perhaps O'Flaherty's friend who would, of course, be of my mind about the serious farce in which we were compelled to act, might be able to hit upon some means of getting out of it. I would see what could be done when he arrived. It was really such utter nonsense, that a peg was the only thing to restore a fellow's equanimity after two such interviews.

"Before I had finished the peg, O'Flaherty's friend made his appearance. He was unknown to me. We both bowed.

"'Mr. Morley, I belave.'

"Upon my life, another Irishman ; and my hopes of a peaceable termination to the affair took flight at the very sound of his voice.

"'Allow me to introjnice meself—Lieutenant Doolan, —th Regiment. I come from Mr. O'Flaherty.'

"'O yes,' said I, affecting to have been momentarily forgetful of that little matter. 'Very happy to make your acqnaintance, though I could wish it had been under pleasanter conditions.'

"'Not at all,' said Mr. Doolan, in a tone of the most perfect contentment, 'not at all. It's not meself that's going to quarrel with the conditions.'

"This might be only politeness toward me, but I thought it sounded much more like satisfaction at his mission.

"'Mr. O'Flaherty has, no doubt, instructed you fully as to how the matter betweeu himself and Mr. O'Dowd stands.'

"'Quite so, quite so,' said the lieuteuant.

"'Then I feel certain, Mr Doolan, that you must agree with me that this affair cannot be allowed to proceed.'

"Doolan simply stared.

"'You can scarcely avoid feeling,' I continued, 'that the cause of quarrel is too slight for us to permit our friends to peril their lives about such a trifle.'

"'Thrifle!" ejaculated Doolan.

"'Now, can't we hit upon some method for bringing to a peaceful issue a business which, if proceeded with to the end at present proposed, must, as I'm sure you perceive, bring nothing but ridicule upon all engaged in it.'

"'Faith, then,' said Mr, Doolan, 'I perceave nothing of the kind. Hark ye, Mr. Morley : I came here to arrange peacebly the time and place for this meeting, and not to dispute about the rights and wrongs of the matter, or to question the good sense which no doubt injuiced both the gentlemen to take the fair and honorable course which they have taken. May I beg, sir, that you will enter, as soon as you convaniently can, upon the rale business for which I am here.'

"There was nothing for it but to pocket the olive, and do as the lieutenant wished. Time and place were agreed upon, and Doolan rose to take his leave. As we were shaking hands in the most friendly manner, I said, 'By the way, Mr. Doolan, I must not forget to tell you that I have nothing at all in the shape of a dueling pistol; perhaps you are better provided.'

*As it may not be among the things generally known, I ought perhaps to explain that in India, the word "Peg" means soda-water and brandy. The full phrase is "another peg in your coffin," alluding to the deleterious effects of the drink.

"'Make yourself perfectly aisy about that, Mr. Morley,' said Doolan, who would no more have been without hair-triggers than hair-brushes; 'I never travel without the pacemakers. Aurevoir.' And Mr. Doolan took his departure, after receiving my assurance that I would call upon the surgeon, and make sure of his attendance upon the ground.

"I cheerfully undertook to do this, as I was determined that at any rate, the surgeon should not be an Irishman, and I had some hopes that he might be able to suggest some way out of the difficulty. Accordingly, after writing a couple of lines to O'Dowd, to say that I had arranged every thing, and to inform him of the time and place, I set off at once to look up the surgeon. His name was Hale, a thoroughly scientific man, devoted to his profession, and as little likely as anybody to have any sympathy with the romantic folly of the duel. I found him at home, in remarkably good spirits, as doctors generally are, and engaged upon a paper for the 'Lancet,' upon the subject of gunshot wounds.

"'How are you, Hale?" said I.

"'How do, Morley?' said he. 'What's the matter? Anything wrong with you? You look rather out of sorts. Digestion wrong, or what is it?'

"'O, there's nothing the matter with me,' I said; 'don't flatter yourself. I want your help, certainly, but not for myself. You'll be wanted about half past five this afternoon at—'

"'Oh!' said Hale. 'You don't mean to say that Mrs.—'

"'No, no,' said I, 'nothing of the kind—quite the reverse, indeed. No, the state of the case is this: O'Dowd has taken umbrage at something O'Flaherty has said, and has insisted upon calling him out.'

"'Ah, that's it, is it?' said Hale, his eyes brightening; 'and you'll want me upon the ground in case of accident. Certainly with all my heart. Pistols, of course'—and with a glance at his manuscript—'nothing like pistols. You may depend upon me, Morley. You may be quite certain that I shall be there.'

"The villain was evidently in want of an illustration to prove some confounded theory of his own with regard to bullet wounds. His glance at the manuscript betrayed him.

"'No; but look here, Hale,' I said, 'the affair ought not to be allowed to go on.'

"'You think not,' said he, as if entertaining very grave doubts as to the wisdom of my opinion.

"'Certainly, I think not; and you'll think so, too, when you hear the case. Last night, O'Flaherty, when slightly screwed, charged O'Dowd with having tubercle of the lung.'

"'And a most insolent thing to say, too, though it's a positive fact all the same. In vino veritas, and no mistake. But still a man with any respect for himself can't allow his lungs to be thrown in his face that way without taking notice of it. And so, O'Dowd demands an apology or a meeting, eh?'

"'Just so. He insists upon an apology, and—it's really too absurd—a declaration from O'Flaherty that the charge brought against his lungs was unfounded.'

"'Quite correct,' said Hale, 'and this declaration O'Flaherty is, of course, unable to make. His statement was a perfectly true one, and he can't unmake it without telling a falsehood. Upon my word, if you can see any way but one out of the difficulty you are cleverer than I.'

"'I believe you are all gone mad,' I said, vexed beyond bearing. 'There's not a creature who will look at the thing in a calm and reasonable manner. Why, do you realize, sir, that just for a ridiculous word from a drunken man a valuable life may be lost?'

"'Ah, very sad, very sad, indeed,' replied the doctor, coolly; 'but it can't be helped. The matter is gone too far now to be stopped. A meeting is absolutely necessary for the honour of the parties, and'—laying his hand casually upon the MS., and speaking in a thoughtful manner—'and may be of infinite service to the cause of—'

"He broke off there, but he meant 'the cause of science,' I'm certain, confound him! He was devoted to his profession was Hale.

"'Half-past five, at Harrison's bungalow, if you please, Mr. Hale,' said I, coldly, and walked out of the room, the man of science following me to the door, and assuring me, in the cheerfullest and friendliest manner, that I might depend upon him absolutely; that he would sacrifice any number of patients sooner than not be present; and that he would be certain not to forget his instruments.

"I had done my best. I had called upon Common Sense to help me, but Common Sense was nowhere to be found. I had appealed to the Dread of Ridicule, but it slept, and could not be awakened. I had asked Science to lend me a hand, but Science wanted both of hers to seize her own opportunities. There was no resource now but to let the matter go on to its bitter end.

"In affairs of this kind, you know, it is not etiquette for the parties to go in company to the battle-ground, as pugilists do to a prize-fight. We must go separately to what Bell's Life would call likely spot, and meet there with distant politeness. As we had to drive a good way to the place pitched upon by Doolan and myself—an open space, well known to us all a little way into the jungle—it was agreed that O'Flaherty and his second should go on an hour or two in advance, taking their rifles with them, in order to pass the time with any sport that might fall in their way, and that I, with my principal and the surgeon, should follow at the stated time. All of which happened as arranged. The respondent and Doolan departed early in the afternoon, designing to lunch at the rendezvous; and shortly before six the appellant, Hale, and I followed, drove to the outskirts of the jungle, there left our carriage and strolled through the trees to the place.

"'Here we are,' said Hale; 'true to our time; but I don't see our friends.' Euphemism for enemies.

"'They've been here very lately,' said O'Dowd, pointing to the relics of a luncheon scattered about on the grass; 'and, faith, they've made mighty free with the eatables."

"'The end of a feast, most decidedly,' said Hale; 'so we are quite ready for the beginning of a fray.'

"'They'll make their appearance in a minute or two, no doubt,' I said. 'They're having a shot at something in the jungle, perhaps.'

"The crack of a rifle a short distance off seemed to confirm my words.

"'They might have taken both rifles with them, then, I'm thinking,' exclaimed O'Dowd, picking up O'Flaherty's, which lay on the grass.

"We were standing about, O'Dowd examining the rifle, which was loaded, and Hale the pale-ale bottles, which were all discharged, when we were surprised at seeing Doolan running towards us with every appearance of extreme terror.

"'What's the matter? we all shouted.

"'Here!' he cried. 'Come here. Bring the rifle. O'Flaherty's been carried off by a tiger!'

"'Now Morley,' said O'Dowd, 'you've got your wish at last. Come along!'

"And we all set off running towards Doolan, who had stopped, and was loading his rifle.

"'Did ye hit him, Phil? did ye hit him?' said O'Dowd, when we reached the lieutenant.

"'Hit him, is it?' said Doolan. 'No, faith! I daredn't try. I fired, in hopes of frightening him. Come along! He jumped on us from behind, as we were sitting on the bank there, caught poor Tim by the shoulder, and trundled off with him, niver saying a word, as if six feet two were nothing to spake of at all. Come along!' We were hurrying after him all the while. 'I jumped up, picked up the rifle: "Stop ye thief!" I called out, "or I'll shoot you!" He gave a wag with his tail, the baste, as much as to say, "Shoot away ye daren't hit me for fear of killing Tim; and, begorra, I'll make myself safe enough for the matter of that." And at the word the cratur chucked poor Tim on to his back, as a fox does with a goose, and away he went again—come along!—safer than ever, for I could see more of O'Flaherty now than I could of him, bad luck to him! and I wished I had shot at first. I daredn't touch the trigger for the life of me, now, you understand; so I followed till he stopped, after a bit, and lay down with Tim before him, and then I shot, not at him, for fear of killing Tim, but in the hope of frightening the brute. But sorra a bit did it frighten him; it only made him gnash his teeth, and Tim, was between 'em, ye'll recollect. So then I ran back for the other rifle, and met you, and—and have a care now, we can't be far off him, unless he's eloped with Tim again, which the saints forbid, for it's a might unpleasant way of travelling.'

"He had not eloped with Tim. He was still lying, where Doolan had left him, with his mouth so close to poor O'Flaherty's ear, that he looked as if he were whispering into it. What was to be done? The very thought of firing into him across O'Flaherty made my hand shake. We all stood still for a moment or two, staring at the tiger and his victim.

"'Now, then, who's going to shoot? said Doolan. Somebody must, or faith poor Tim will be minced veal before he knows where he is. But I'll be hanged if it's me that's going to do it. You are the best shot, Denis.'

"'Shoot, O'Dowd,' said I 'I daren't, for the life of me.'

"'Faith, it's a risky shot for certain,' said O'Dowd; but if we stand here and do nothing, there'll be no chance for him at all. Now, hark ye, gentlemen,' he said, throwing up his head and looking, tubercle or not, a thoroughly fine fellow, 'you all know, I'm sure, that though I was anxious enough to shoot O'Flaherty standing opposite me at twelve paces, I'd be the last man in the world to take advantage of him now. All right—all right. There, that's enough! Upon me sowl then, I never thought otherwise for a moment. Look here, now. Give Morley your rifle, Phil, and you and Hale stand a trifle back. Now, Morley, my boy, I'm going to creep a thought nearer. Keep you just behind me. I'll blaze away at him first; and I shall hit him, don't be afraid for that. If he springs right at us, cover him well and let fly. If he only jumps up, hand me your rifle, and I'll baug at him again. D'ye understand me?'

"'Perfectly.'

"'Follow me, then.'

"O'Dowd stepped gently towards the tiger, and I followed his steps closely. When we were within a dozen yards of the animal, the tiger dropped O'Flaherty's arm which it had in its mouth, and lifted its head. O'Dowd sank on to his knee instantly, looked along his barrel for one second and fired. With the most awful yell I ever heard the tiger sprang up, gave one bound towards us, and then, before I'd time to mark him properly, rolled over on the long grass.

"'Twelve feet from the nose to the tip of the tail. I'll bet a hundred,' said O'Dowd, quietly.

"I handed him the loaded rifle, and we all, except Doolan who dashed recklessly over to O'Flaherty, walked cautiously towards the fallen tiger. The bullet had passed through his eye into his brain, and he was as dead as his greatest grandfather.

"'Dead as a herring!' I cried.

"'Begad, and so he is,' said Doolan, who was bending over O'Flaherty; 'and so he is. Come here, Hale, can't you. Bad luck to ye! you're a pretty doctor to stand staring at a tiger when there's a dead Christian in want of your assistance five yards off. Come here, can't you!'

"We all ran at once to O'Flaherty.

"'O Tim,' whined Doolan, 'whatever injuiced you to go and die in a hurry like this?'

"'Die!' said Hale, sharply; 'what the dickens are you talking about dying for? The man's not dead. Not a bit of it. His left arm's broken, certainly, broken in two places; and he's nicely contused all over, I'll stake my reputation; pretty well frightened, no doubt; I confess I am, without so much cause; but, dead! Bless my soul, sir, will you have the goodness to allow him a breath of air?'

"The breath of air was allowed him. In a very short time he recovered consciousness; requested to know in a strong Irish accent whereabouts he was; betrayed by a few words that he was under the impression that he had lost his way in returning from a heavy dinner, and had gone to sleep by the roadside; then he recovered his senses completely; listened to the whole history, while Hale tied his arm up as well as it could be done; and finally with much assistanee, rose to his feet.

"'Well, gentlemen,' said I, cheerfully 'I suppose we may return at once, for the business which we came about will scarcely be proceeded with now, I apprehend.'

"'I decidedly forbid Mr. O'Flaherty's proceeding with that matter to-day,' said Hale, sulkily, laying strong emphasis upon the last word.

"'Faith, Hale,' said O'Flaherty, 'ye may even forbid it altogether. I should be a more insensible brute than that tiger there if I could not apologize now without feeling any humiliation in doing so. Give us your hand, Denis, and receive my apologies. I was screwed when I met you the other night, and—'

"'You sha'nt say another word, Tim,' said O'Dowd; 'if you do, I'll never spake to ye again. Come along; let's go at once. We'll send the servants for the beast yonder.'

"We all returned in high spirits; and that was the first and last duel I ever had a hand in."

"By Jove! that was a fine shot of O'Dowd's," said Galton, "and, all circumstances considered, must have been immensely satisfactory to himself. Yours is the only affair of the kind, Morley, that I ever heard of, in which either of the principals obtained any real satisfaction.'

"If O'Dowd was as good a hand at a pistol as a rifle, O'Flaherty's chance would have been a very poor one," said Dormer.

"Well, the tiger was the real peacemaker after all," said Bingham. "and yet he had to suffer for it. There's a want of classical justice about that part of the story."

"Nay," said Morley, "on the contrary, it is quite correct and classical. Amongst the ancients, you know, when two enemies were reconciled, they sacrificed a beast upon the occasion."

Encounter Between an Elephant and a Rat.—A very extraordinary encounter between a rat and an elephant has recently taken place in the Garden of Plants, London, which was witnessed with interest by hundreds of persons:

The keepers were engaged in destroying a great number of rats, when one of them escaped and ran to the spot allotted to the elephant. Seeing no other refuge, in the twinkling of an eye the rat snugly ensconced himself in the trunk of the elephant, very much to the elephant's dissatisfaction. He stamped his foot and twisted his trunk round like the sail of a windmill. After these revolutions he stood suddenly still, evidently reflecting on what was best to do. He then ran to the trough where he is accustomed to drink, and plunged his trunk into the water, then returned to his den, and raising his truuk, with the water he absorbed, he dashed out the unfortunate rat, which was in a sheet of water like that issuing from a fire engine. When the rat fell to the ground the elephant seized him and made him undergo the immorsion and projected four times. At the forth throw it fell dead. The elephant, with a majestic air, but cool and placid, crushed his annoying little enemy with his foot, and then went round to the spectators to make his usual collection of cake, sugar and other dainties. The feat was received with vociferous applause, which the elephant seemed fully to understand and appreciate.

LITERARY GLEANINGS AND GOSSIP.

MR. STORY NOT AN ENGLISH SUBJECT.

SOME few months since a correspondent of the CALIFORNIAN addressed a communication to the editors, inquiring as to the truth of the report that W. W. Story, the artist, was an English subject. To this inquiry, another correspondent replied to the effect that, though Mr. Story was an American by birth, he had, during his long residence in Rome, received so many tokens of appreciation, and such liberal patronage from Englishmen, and been at the same time so much neglected by his own countrymen, that he had changed his allegiance. At about the same time, the New York Home Journal, in the course of a brief criticism of Mr. Story's "Proportions of the Human Form," made the same statement. It will be seen from the following letter, that the report did great injustice to the patriotic sentiments of the distinguished artist:

Rome, November 29, 1866.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE HOME JOURNAL:

I have just received a copy of the Home Journal for the twenty-fourth of October, containing a very friendly notice of my work on the "Proportions of the Human Form, according to a New Canon," in which the writer states that "Mr. Story, the author, is an American and son of the great American jurist; he is now in Rome, but is a subject of her Majesty, Queen Victoria. Upon being asked once why he gave up his American citizenship, he answered that he was recognized and patronized by Englishmen and denied by his own countrymen. He very naturally became a resident of that country where his professional ability was acknowledged."

The writer of this notice has, inadvertently, made a statement which, in all respects and in all details, is utterly without foundation. Far from having renounced my American citizenship, and become an English subject, I am as warmly attached to my country as ever— as ready to stand by her in her success as I was to aid and defend her by word and pen, as far as in me lay, during that momentous struggle for Liberty and Union, which she maintained with such heroism, determination and fortitude. Now that she has passed through that fiery ordeal of civil war, coming forth from it stronger, more firm of purpose, and higher of resolve than ever, more prosperous at home and more honored abroad, my faith and my pride in her are strengthened and confirmed. I was born an American, and I shall die an American.

Were it true that I am "denied by my countrymen," (which I hope is not the case) it would be a paltry reason for renouncing my allegiance to my country. I am not "a resident of that country where my professional ability was acknowledged;" and, grateful as I must ever be to England and Englishmen for their prompt, liberal, and generous recognition of all that I have done, or endeavored to do, I can never forget that I am an American.

Your obedient servant, W. W. STORY.

LADIES IN THE SADDLE.

During the last twelve months quite a furore for equestrianism seems to have developed itself among the ladies of San Francisco. Throughout the Winter, riding parties—often sufficiently numerous to form a cavalcade—have been frequent, at every interval of fine weather, and riding is coming to be regarded as one of the regular touches of a female education. Such being the case, the following malicious comments, by an English writer, (evidently a cynical bachelor, and probably so ugly or so disagreeable as to have been rejected as an escort by lady equestrians) may prove interesting to some of our readers:

"I must say that ladies are, in general, very easily pleased in regard to the style of animal destined for their use; and, if the horse they are going to mount has the character of being quiet, carries his head high, and his tail is of the usual length, and he has the proper number of legs, they are perfectly satisfied that they are going to have a pleasant ride, and they do not enter into any minute criticism as to the shape or action of the animal, upon both of which points so much of the comfort and safety of the fair equestrian depends. And here I cannot help remarking, that gentlemen seem to me to have little or no hesitation in allowing their female relatives to mount horses that they, in their own person, be very unwilling to ride; and I can now see in my mind's eye, a young lady who trots and gallops past me in Rotteu-row, on a bay, thorough-bred looking horse, whose fore-legs seem tied together, whose shoulders are perpendicular, and whose fetlocks are nearly upright, and I will venture to say that neither her father or brother, if she has either, would willingly mount him for a ten-mile ride along a road, with the slightest expectation of arriving safe at the end, To watch that horse hobbling along at a walk is very painful, but in the canter or gallop his defective action is not so conspicuous, as he makes a great flourish; but, when anything does happeu to that young lady, the catastrophe will be awful; yet she goes up and down the ride in the season, laughing and enjoying herself, in happy ignorance that she is in continual danger of about the worst fall that can occur.

'Few people are at all aware of the weight of their female friends, till the scales reveal the secret; and, unless a gentleman has occasion to assist a lady into the saddle, or over stiles, he can form no opinion as to the weight she is, for the dress conceals the figure so much. Women are much heavier than men, in proportion to their height, and I believe ten stones to be no unusual weight among ladies of ordinary height and proportion. A side-saddle weighs eighteen pounds, and, with the additional weight of the riding-habit. hat, whip, boots, etc., we may safely say that a large proportion of the ladies we see on horseback average nearly twelve stone each; how seldom do you see ladies mounted on horses up to weight? Ladies' horses are proverbially called 'weeds,' weak, leggy, narrow-chested, weak, and quiet-tempered animal to be 'just the thing to carry a lady,' which I do not paying them any great compliment.'"

The estimate of the average weight of lady-riders is probably exaggerated, even in reference to Englishwomen; as applied to those of San Francisco, who indulge in equestrian exercises, it is monstrous. Indeed, the suggestion that the slender, elastic feminine figures that we are accustomed to see in the saddle, on pleasant mornings, cantering jauntily on the Cliff-House road, average twelve stone, is positively shocking to my mind, from which the last elements of poetry or sentiment has not been eliminated!

A FORGOTTEN AMERICAN ARTIST.

The last number of the Atlantic Monthly contains an interesting, though garrulous and egotistical article, entitled "Recollections of John Vanderlyn, the Artist," the object of which seems to be, not so much to pay a deserved tribute to the memory of the great and eccentric painter, as to indulge the personal and family pride of the writer of the article. Poor Vanderlyn is quite a secondary figure; "I and my family" are placed conspicuously in the foreground. The article commences as follows:

"The visitor to the Rotunda, in the Capitol at Washington, sees, among the large historical pictures placed there by the government, 'The Landing of Columbus,' by Vanderlyn. In the Hall of Representatives is the full-length portrait of Washington, by the same artist. These, with one in the City Hall in New York (I think, the full length portrait of President Monroe) are the only public works left to preserve alive the memory of one who, had he been careful of himself and attentive to his profession, would have been without a superior among American artists.

Vanderlyn was a protégé of Aaron Burr. He belonged to a Dutch family at Kingston, Ulster County, New York, where his father was a farmer. Near this place my father had a country residence, at which I spent all my early summers; and it was to this circumstance that I owed my acquaintance with Vanderlyn, who had returned thither after the ruin of his patron."

In 1808, Vanderlyn was awarded the gold medal offered by the Emperor Napoleon, for the best original picture at the exhibition of the Louvre. The work that won the prize, out of twelve hundred competing pictures, was the American painter,s "Marius among the Ruins of Carthage," which is now, we infer, in this city, in the possession of the writer of the article referred to. The interest of the subject and the curious details furnished, could alone have induced the editor of such a periodical as the Atlantic Monthly to publish an article so inartistically written, and so thoroughly pervaded by a snobbish spirit, as these "Recollections." The following extract is most amusing:

"Vanderlyn painted very slowly and elaborately, as I know to my cost. Believing that Burr's estimate of him was correct, and that he was our ablest American artist, I had always been very desirous to have him paint the portraits of my father and mother. In 1833, accidentally meeting him in New York, I proposed to him to undertake the work; but he declined, alleging that he had no studio. I found him living at an obscure French boarding-house in Church street, and I proposed to him to come to my father's house and use the library as a studio. So he came, blocked up the windows, except a square place in the top of one of them, and began his pictures It was in the autumn when he commenced, and the winter was nearly over when he finished. I wanted to use the library for my studies, and tired enough I was at the long exclusion. My mother sat for a couple of hours in the morning, and my father in the afternoon, and each of them had about sixty sittings. In this way the whole winter was spent. He made fine pictures, of course, but the victimized sitters felt that the cost was too great."

"PADDY PUNGENT."

WE have received a pamphlet of 110 pages, which contains an account of the tour of "Paddy Pungent, a Rambling Irishman," through certain portions of Ireland. The author is J. M. Doherty. There is an immense amount of useful knowledge, wit, humor, and satire in this little pamphlet, as well as some really philosophical speculations on metaphysics. The first four chapters of this little work are devoted to an account of what the author saw and heard during his tour through Ireland, and reflections on the present condition of that country. Were it not for the hard hits which he deals the priesthood, we should say that Mr. Doherty was almost without a prejudice. He has evidently but little sympathy with the fools, who, under the name of Fenians, are at present trying to make the condition of Ireland worse than it need be. He says:

"Dublin can produce more soldiers and soul-savers than any other city of the same size in the universe, and while saying so I would add my belief that there would be less need for the former if the latter could be shipped out of the country. Owing to their natural light-heartedness, and generous respect for fair play, there are no people on the face of the earth that could be governed so easily as the Irish, if they had only education and a few liberal and enlightened leaders—leaders that could rise themselves above the vulgar level of sectarian bigotry. But with the wicked and pernicious training to which they have yielded only too far, on the one side, and English "fair play," on the other, there would seem to be no salvation for them. Degraded, duped and divided into two hostile camps by political knaves and religious charlatans it is —not themselves that are there at all. at all. Every building worth looking at may. at sight, be safely connected either with the military or the clergy. In every nook and corner of the city, stand churches which have been built at an expense truly marvelous, when contrasted with the poverty-stricken appearance of the country, while right in the centre of this public park, not to mention those found in other places, are scattered promiscuously about, magazines, barracks and military hospitals, all built at an enormous outlay."

It is a fact that England finds it very difficult to rule Ireland by "fair play," and she who has no spies in any other portion of her dominions, does not scruple to expend a large portion of "the secret-service fund," in paying Irishmen to betray their fellow-countrymen. Mr. Doherty tells some good Irish legends, and revamps some old stories so well, that they appear even better than new. In the fifth chapter—having concluded his account of his travels in Ireland—he expresses his opinions on various subjects. The synopsis of the subjects treated on, which heads this chapter, is:

"Gradual Shallowing of Seas—Everything Undergoes Change.—Our Earth Growing Larger.—Man a Mere Earth-Bound Worm.—Progress From Soils to Men.—Christianity versus Spiritualism.—Man a Progressive Animal.—Effects of Amalgamation."

Mr. Doherty's remarks on the proposition that seas are gradually shallowing, evince considerable reading and some original thought. In the next section of this fifth chapter, he is indebted for many of the ideas which he advances to Darwin, who published his theory of "elective progression" before "Paddy Pungent" went to Ireland. Mr. Doherty, as we observed before, has read many books; he is too apt to make a display of his store of knowledge. He has a library stored up in his brain, and in the course of 110 small pages he pulls down all the books in a heap. We have scraps from "Pepy's Diary," histories of Mexico, travels in Arabia, anecdotes of Dean Swift, Draper's Letters, and about fifty other works. This, however, serves to add variety to "Paddy Pungent's" rambling discourse. His book is very well worth reading, and certainly worth more than the 25 cents charged for it. Printed in large type on hot-pressed paper, and handsomely bound. The matter contained in this pamphlet of 110 pages might be expanded into a volume which would be far better worth a dollar and a half than many of those issued every week by New York publishers. We have said so much in praise of this work. We must say, that though Mr. Doherty writes grammatical English, his style of writing is not characterized by much elegance. The following description of what followed his entrance into a cabin, is not exactly a model of English composition:

"Michael came to a perpendicular in a hurry, and handing me the best chair in the cabin with both hands, he modestly invited me to be seated. The old lady jumped around, and wiping the seat of the chair with a praskin (coarse apron), she too invited me to sit down. And in a very short time, she had at my service, a coarse towel, some soap and plenty of hot water."

Mr. Doherty's manner of telling his story is, however, as a rule, free from affectation; and he has so much, that it is amusing and instructive to tell his reader that he must be allowed to convey it to him in the best way he can, without being subjected to severe criticism on the score of occasional crudities in composition.

[For the Californian.]

THE HAPPY PAIR.

THERE'S a canthie bit body, a cantie auld cock,
Wha is kent by the odd name o' Bob Gowenlock;
Time has mown a' the hair frae the tap o' his cronn,
Yet still left him tho' three score an' twa unco soun.

Idle clashes an' clavers he ne'er minds uva,
But has nye got a kind word to say aboot a';
To the wee faults o' ithers this guid man is blind,
And a heart that is warmer wad hard be to find.

Blest wi' plenty auld Bob is a frien' to the poor,
And the beggar in want finds relief at his door;
Wi the best o' mankind there is aye some bit flaw,
So, if he is nae perfect, his failings are sma'!

The curl likes his drap toddy, a pinch o' guid snuff,
And whiles wi' a cuttie pipe taks a bit puff;
When cronies aboot him in festive mirth stand,
He will sing the auld sangs o' his ain native land.

He is blest wi' a leal und a kind hearted wife,
Wha has shared a' his cares thro' the maist o' his life,
O the sweet kinnied words that fa' saft frae her tongue,
Cast around him love's sunshine as when they were young.

The guid bnik frae whase pages the blind seek for licht
The auld pair read a portion o't mornin' and nicht;
As they feel that life's blessings a' come frae above,
So their hame is the hame o' contentment and love.

A' Bob's riches were gained by the sweat o' his brow,
And when toiling for age he was happy as now;
Aye content wi' the sphere where his lot was lang cast,
He delights wi' his friens yet to crack o' the past.

Things are never sae pure that there's nae room to mend,
And the frugal will aye fin' oot some way to fend;
In the spring time provide for the autumn o' life,
And wale weel aboon a' things a trusty guid wife.

—JAMES LINEN.

San Francisco, Feb. 1867.

SHERMAN'S MARCH THROUGH GEORGIA.—Messrs. Snow & Roos announce elsewhere in our columns, that the exhibition of this fine painting will close on the 9th of March. We have heretofore spoken of merits of this painting, and trust that it will find a purchaser on this coast.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

On Mouday, Miss Alice Kingsbury appeared as "Amrie" in the play of Little Barefoot. On Tuesday, a play entitled The Orange Girl was produced. The critics of San Francisco were for once unanimous in their opinion. On Wednesday, all the critics denounced the play of The Orange Girl as being utter trash. The Bulletin (which is generally very careful about expressing its honest opinion on any dramatic matter, for fear of giving pain) evidently perceived that The Orange Girl afforded it an occasion of which it might avail itself, and yet retain the good-will of the management of the Opera House. Good gracious! how the critic of the Bulletin did let himself out in pitching into this unhappy melodrama. He says:

"The plot is unnatural, the leading incidents, the denouement ridiculous. The piece is wretchedly weak in style, disjointed in construction, and violates almost every canon of art. It has no coherency, no method, no consecutiveness of action—in short, no claim to the title of a legitimate drama. As to the characters, they are either disgustingly weak or superfluously wicked. About the only redeeming feature in the whole performance was the turn scene in the first act (and that we owe to the artist) and the acrobatic exploits of Harry Jackson. Miss Kingsbury, Mrs. Sophie Edwin and Mrs Jackson did their best to redeem a worthless play, but as they had nothing to work on they failed in doing justice either to themselves or the audience."

If any one dares to say, after reading that criticism, in which such a torrent of vituperative adjectives is poured out on a cheap melodrama, that we have no bold, independent and honest critics in San Francisco, I must tell him that he lies under a mistake. The Dramatic Chronicle, in the most kind manner, (not having the advertisement of the Opera House,) gave a sketch of the plot of this play; and instead of raving at its absurdity, made it the subject of a calmly ironical article. This play is decidedly "utter trash," but the public should be grateful to the management of the Opera House for producing it, as it has proved that there are some plays so bad, that even the critics of the daily press perceive they dare not delude the public concerning their demerits. The Orange Girl was repeated on Wednesday and Thursday, and was a good enough performance for those stormy nights. Last night Fanchon was played, and Mr. Edwards recited "Drake's Address to the American Flag." This afternoon Miss Alice Kingsbury will appear in The Child of the Savannah. In the evening Damon and Pythias will be produced, with John McCullough as "Damon," Harry Edwards as "Pythias," and Miss Alice Kingsbury as "Calanthe;" the performance will conclude with The little Treasure, in which Miss Alice Kingsbury will appear as "Gertrude." On Monday, The Long Strike will be played. A melodrama entitled The Mariner's Compass, successfully produced sometime ago at the Surrey Theatre, London, is in rehearsal.

Miss Amy Stone appeared in the character of "Fanchon" on Monday to a very small audience, at the Academy of Music; she failed to create a favorable impression. Miss Stone made a mistake in coming to San Francisco as a "star actress;" and even had she been capable of playing leading business acceptably, would have been to blame for attempting to repeat characters in which another actress had gained the favor of the public. It would not be judicious even for Maggie Mitchell to come to San Francisco at present. In the course of a few months, after our public has recovered from its infatuation in favor of Miss Alice Kingsbury's "Fanchon," it may be ready to witness another actress's impersonation of that part. I do not mean to institute any comparison between Miss Alice Kingsbury and Miss Amy Stone, as such a comparision would be very unfair to the former. Miss Alice Kingsbury acts some parts very badly indeed, but in others, eviuces genius which abundantly makes up for all the shortcomings. Miss Amy Stone is a worse actress than Miss Alice Kingsbury; has a bad voice, and has certainly, during the past few evenings in which she has appeared on the stage of the Academy of Music, evinced no signs of genius. Miss Stone took a benefit on Wednesday and retired from the stage.

The new pantomime of Raoul, or The Magic Star, produced at the Metropolitan Theatre last week, proved a success. The performances given at this house last week, was rendered more attractive by the clever acting of the Howson Family and Willie Edouin, in new farces. Heller will probably arrive to-morrow, and will immediately commence a two-months' engagement.

Martin the Wizard was to have opened his "Temple of Magic and Mystery," at the Academy of Music on Thursday, but not possessing supernatural power of sufficient potency to allay the storm which raged, wisely postponed his initial performance till last night. As the CALIFORNIAN, in order to afford everyone connected with the office an opportunity of celebrating the birthday of glorious Washidgton, went to press early in the afternoon, I am, of course, unable to say with what success Martin met—in conjuring dollars out of the pockets of San Franciscans.

Mrs. Lizzie P. Northrup's annual concert, which was postponed in consequence of the stormy weather, will take place on Monday, at Platt's Hall. A good programme is offered; Signor Mancusi, Signor Morley, (who has been too long in retirement), Professor G. A. Scott, Mme. Julia Blaisdell and other talented artistes will assist. Mrs. Northrup and Signor Mancusi will sing a duetto from Il Barbiere di Seviglia; and in the second part, a duetto from Maritana will be performed by Mrs. Northrup and Signor Morley. The programme should prove sufficiently attractive to draw a full house, and we hope this will be the case.

It is pleasant to observe that steps have been taken, which it is to be hoped will put M. and Mme. Heine (who have met with but little success in a pecuniary point of view) in funds once more. Some of the leading merchants and best citizens of San Francisco have undertaken to give M. and Mme. Heine a sterling benefit on the 1st of March, at Platt's Hall. There can be no failure this time; and those who attend this concert will, in addition to hearing some of the sweetest music they ever listened to, have the satisfaction of knowing that they are joiuing with good (and fashionable) people in a most worthy work.

There is a better actress in this city at present, than our theatre-goers wot of. Had Miss Grace Darley made her appearance at the right house — the Olympic is not for an artiste of her ability—she would have made a hit. Miss Darley, who has appeared at Drury Lace and other first-class theatres, both in London and Dublin, is a very clever comedienne—far better than Miss Emily Thorne. We have not too many light comedy actresses iu this state; therefore it is a pity that Miss Grace Darley is not permanently attached to one of the stock companies instead of "starring" at the Olympic, where her ladylike, though vivacious acting, is as caviare to an audience accustomed to coarser diet.

There is some talk about the American Theatre being opened next week for the production of scenic and horse pieces.

TOUCHSTONE.

NEW MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE.—The New Merchants' Exchange on California street, when completed, will be the most imposing structure in our city—costing in the neighborhood of $300,000. The iron castings for the front was done by the Fulton foundry; the carpenter work by Maj. Welton, the masonry by Mr. Jordan, and the wood-carving by Mr. E. Power, of No. 30 California street. Though every department is most creditably done, it is of the last named branch that we particularly consider noteworthy. The artizan has completed this task of delicate and intricate workmanship in a most satisfactory manner. Mr. Power has executed work for some of the most costly buildings in California, among which, are the New Mechanics' Institute, the Court House of San Jose, and some of the new Kearny street buildings and others, that bear evidence of his artizanship and proficiency in wood carving and ornamental workmanship. It will probably be some two months yet before the New Exchange will be ready for occupancy.

A SUGGESTION.—Says the Times of Tuesday last:

"It those who engage in acts of mobs and outlawry generally, were to give a little study to the philosophy of punishment as it relates to crime, we think there would be less disposition to indulge their violent propensities."

There is no lack of profundity in the above sentence. Still, it is a tolerably well ascertained fact that those who engage in mobs do not devote any great amount of time and attention to the study of anything—especially, anything relating to the "philosopby of punishment," as it relates to crime. To prevent Patrick McGinnis and Andy Murphy from again engaging in mobs, it would be well to circulate among them a vast quantity of pamphlets on "The Philosophy of Punishment as it Relates to Crime." We can see Andy and Patrick slowly spelling them out, and arising from their perusal firmly convinced that mobs are morally, socially and politically wrong.

SENATORIAL REFORMATION.—A recent telegram informs us that "Senator Yates of Illinois made a stirring temperance speech at a meeting of the Congressional Temperance Society, in the Hall of Representatives, on Sunday evening, saying that he had beeu called a drunkard, and now made a covenant with God to keep the pledge." It is to be hoped, for the benefit of society, the House of Representatives, the country in geueral, and Senator Yates in particular, that this covenant with God will be faithfully kept. There is, however, one ominous characteristic of these trumpet-tongued, publicly-proclaimed, good intentions. In nine cases out of ten, they are not lasting. They are indicative of repentance arising from a very recent spree.

HOW THEY LIVE IN NEW YORK.—We learn from a recently returned Californian, that the New Yorkers entered in the enjoyment of their usual winter sport during the present season with universal gusto, which he described as consisting of "sleighing, skating, coughing, sneezing, chattering, blowing their noses, buying lozenges, overshoes, and swallowing cough candy, cayenne pepper tea, and hot whisky punches, going about with horse blankets wrapped around them in the daytime, and sleeping with old stockings tied around their throats at night." There are pleasanter climates in the winter time than that of New York.

WILL APPEAR NEXT WEEK.—"Snow-Drop and Rosebud," a story by May Wentworth; and "In Memoriam," a translation from the Spanish of a poem by Aurelio Luis Gallardo; also "Rare Ripe," a poem by W. A. Kendall.

LATE PARIS FASHIONS.

Coral, and especially the pale pink variety, is again very fashionable for the evening dresses. Tunics are frequently embroidered in sprays of coral, beads being introduced among the work so as to give it more relief. With brocaded dresses, trimmings made with precious stones are in vogue, because gimp is not considered sufficiently rich for such very handsome materials, consequently buttons made of lapis lazuli, jasper aventurine, and amber, are in great demand.

Very few flowers are used in head dresses this season, and bandelets have entirely disappeared. Many young ladies only wear a very handsome comb, with either a silver or gold top; and if a flower is added, it is a very tiny one indeed. Watteau wreaths are occasionally to be seen, but they are composed of Liliputian roses, pinks, etc. By contrast, enormous flowers are used for ornamenting ball dresses. For example, a white tulle dress with a bouillonnee skirt will have over it a tunic of white and cerise striped silk, embroidered round the edge with cerise chenille. The tunic forms a point at the back, which point is turned back, and a spray of monster roses, pinks, etc., is passed inside, and falls on the white tulle.

There is a new fashion of looping up skirts lately introduced—it is to trim them with a large revers, which is lined with silk of a different color from the dress, and is fastened at the back with a bow, or buttoned on with a gimp button. The style of dress is only worn en grande toilette, when the underskirt is invariably cut with a train. These revers are almost invariably made of white silk, embroidered with white chenille of the color of the upper skirt.

White cashmere is much used as a material for frocks for girls between three and seven years of age, the tunic being simulated with a white silk ruche, or with a rouleau of blue silk. For older girls poplin is the popular material. A favourite toilette is an iron-grey poplin, the skirt shorn and scolloped out, and bound with blue poplin. A blue cashmere petticoat, with a box pleated border round the edge.

Both a blue cashmere Garibaldi and a white muslin bodice are made with the style of skirt. Plain poplin is also a favorite material for young girls; they are usually trimmed with black velvet. I must not omit to mention a novelty before closing my letter, which has recently been introduced. They are flowers made of wool so fine and delicate that they are easily mistaken for real ones; they no more resemble the worsted flowers of yore than the artificial productions of florists of to-day are like those of thirty years ago.—Queen.

NEGOTIATIONS have been made with Gustave Dore for fourteen illustrations of Poe's "Raven." These illustrations have been bargained for at three hundred dollars in gold for each design. One hundred dollars in gold is to be paid for the engraving of each design—Dore to select the engraver. The aggregate cost will be equal to six thousand dollars in currency. Widdleton is the projector of the edition.

They have a Winter Garden place of amusement in Dublin. It is a glass building.

Story's bust of Mrs. Browning is on exhibition in Boston.

Edmond Ahont has began a new serial novel, called "Italy." It appears in a Florence paper.

A new weekly Journal, in English, is to he published in Paris. It is the undertaking of an American, Mr. Musgrave Clay.

HOME STOCK AND HOME BUGGIES.—W. G. Jones, the proprietor of the "Dexter" Stable, on Bush st., between those two crack hotels the Occidental and Cosmopolitan, appears determined to outstrip al others in the stable line, not only with fast horses, but with superior buggies as well—he having ordered, months ago, a portion of his stock from the manufactory of Pollard & Carvill, on Webb street, between Sacramento and California, in this city. Mr. Jones is also supplied with Brewster's best; so that pleasure seekers can have a chance to test homemade buggies in comparison with the best imported article, behind the choicest stock in the city. The superiority of which they may decide by engaging teams from the "Dexter" Stable. We back the San Francisco article.

ATTENTION LADIES.—Kohler Bros., No. 525 Kearny street, extends an invitation to the ladies of San Francisco to call on them before purchasing shoes elsewhere. Remember they are determined to sell ladies' shoes and gentlemen's boots, at lower rates than any other house in the trade; and have the best selected stock in San Francisco W. H. Fiuch, formerly of Montgomery street, would be pleased to see his old friends at the new store of Kohler Brothers, No. 525 Kearny street, (under the Crim House). Ladies' and Gents' shoes and boots made to order, and finished in a style unapproachable by any other manufacturer, and one trial will prove the truth of these assertions. Give them a call.

TO THE SICK.—Cures in almost all cases are guaranteed to the sick by Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, and are rapidly effected, because he uses no medicines whatever, nor mesmeric jugglery nor any species of fraud or deception; and farther, because he has had an experience of more than twenty-five years and knows what can be done and how to do it. *

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER III.—ON THE BALCONY.

"ARE you going out this evening Stewart?" asked Harriet Routh of her husband, as they sat together, after their dinner—which had not been a particularly lively meal—was removed. She did not look at him as she put the question, but gazed out of the window, holding back the curtain, while she spoke. Stewart Routh was examining the contents of a heap of letters which lay on the table before him, and did not answer for a moment. She repeated the question:

"Are you going out anywhere this evening, Stewart?"

"Of course I am going out," he answered, impatiently. "Why do you ask? I am not going to be mewed up here in this stifling room all the evening."

"No, of course not," she answered, very gently and without an inflection in her voice to betray that she perceived the irritation of his tone. "Of course not. You go out every evening, as every one else does here. I only asked because I think of going with you."

"You, Harry?" he said, with real embarrassment, but with feigned cordiality. "That is a sudden start. Why, you have never been out in the evening since we've been here but once, and then you seemed to dislike the play very much Have you not been out to-day?"

"Yes, I have. I walked a long way to-day. But I have a fancy to go to the Kursaal this evening. George Dallas tells me a number of new people have come, and I have a fancy to see them."

Stewart Routh frowned. He dislikes this fancy of his wife's; he did not understand it. Harriet had always shrunk from strangers and crowds, and had gone to Homburg very unwillingly. On their first arrival, when he would have been tolerably willing to take her about with him, though he felt a growing repugnance to her society, she would not go out except to drink the waters early in the day, and now, on an occasion when it was particularly inconvenient to him, she took a fancy to go out. Besides, he hated the mention of George Dallas' name. There was a tacit sympathy between him and Harriet on this point. True, she was accustomed to bearing pain. But she rarely spoke of him, as she knew his intercourse with Routh was very slight and casual. Harriet possessed even more than ordinary feminine power of divination in such matters, and she felt instinctively that Mr. Felton both disliked and distrusted her husband.

"It is fortunate we do not want to use Dallas for our purpose any longer," Harriet had said to herself, on only the second occasion of her seeing the uncle and nephew together—"very fortunate; for Mr. Felton would be a decided and a dangerous antagonist. Weak and wavering as George is, his uncle could rule him, I am sure, and would do so, contrary to us." This impression has been confirmed since Harriet had watched, as she was in the habit of doing, the proceedings of Mr. Felton and George at Homburg. When George visited her, he rarely mentioned Routh, and she knew they had not dined together ever since they had been there. Assisted, insensibly, by his uncle's opinion and influence, George had emancipated himself, as all his reflections had dictated, but as all his resolutions had failed to accomplish. So Harriet ceased to mention George to Routh, and thus it was that speech jarred unpleasantly upon his ear.

"Indeed," he said. "I should think Dallas a very poor judge of what is or is not likely to amuse you. However, I'm sorry I can't take you out this evening. I have an engagement."

Still she kept her head turned from him and looked out of the window. He glanced at her uneasily, cleared his throat, and went on:

"I promised to meet Hunt and Kirkland at the tables to-night, and try our luck. I'm sorry for it, Harry, and I'll keep to-morrow evening quite free. That will do for you, won't it?"

"Yes," she replied; "that will do."

She did not look round, and he did not approach her. He fidgeted about the room a little, sorted his letters, tied them up in a bundle, locked them into his traveling-desk, and finally, with another uneasy glance at her, he left the room. Harriet sat quiet still, her hand upon the curtain, her face towards the window. So she sat for several minutes, after he had left the house, in evening dress, with a loose paletot on, and she had seen him go down the street towards the Kursaal. Then she wrote a few lines to George Dallas, and, having sent his note, once more seated herself by the window. The room was darkening in the quick coming night, and her figure was indistinct in its motionless attitude by the window, when George came gaily into her presence.

"Here I am, Mrs. Routh. What are you doing? Nothing wrong with you, I hope? I can't see you plainly in the dusk. Where's Routh?"

"He has gone out. He had an engagement, and I have a particular fancy to go out this evening, to see the world; in fact, at the Kursaal, in particular. You are always so kind and obliging, I thought as Stewart could not take me, if your mother did not particularly want you this evening, you might give me your escort for an hour."

"Too delighted," said George, with genuine pleasure. "I am quite free. Mr. Carruthers is with my mother, and my uncle is writing letters for the American mail."

Harriet thanked him, and left the room; but returned almost immediately, with her bonnet on, and wearing a heavy black lace veil.

"You will be smothered in that veil, Mrs. Routh," said George, as they left the house. "And you won't get the full benefit of this delightful evening air."

"I prefer it," she said; "there are some men here, friends of Stewart, whom I don't care to see."

They went on, almost in silence, for Harriet was very thoughtful, and George was wondering what made her so "low," and whether these friends of Routh's were any of the "old set." He hoped, for Harriet's sake, Routh was not playing recklessly. He was very clever, of course, but still—and with all the wisdom and the zeal of his present mental and moral condition, George shook his head at the idea of a deflection into gambling on the part of Routh.

The often described scene at the Kursaal displayed all the customary features. Light, gilding, gaiety, the lustre and rustle of women's dress, the murmur of voices, and the ring of laughter in all the rooms not devoted to play; but at the tables, silence, attention, and all the variety which attends the exhibition of the passion of gambling in all its stages. From the careless lounger, who, merely passing through the rooms, threw a few florins on the table to try what the game was like, to the men and women who lived for and in the hours during which the tables were open to them, all, with the intermediate ranks of votaries and degrees of servitude were there.

George was so accustomed to Harriet's retiring manners, and so prepared to find the scene distasteful to her, that he did not notice her unwillingness to assume a prominent position in any of the rooms through which they passed. As they entered each, she drew him a little behind the crowd in occupation, and talked to him about the style of the apartment, its decoration, the brilliancy of its light—in short, made any common-place remarks which occurred to her.

They were standing near the door of one of the saloons, and Harriet, though her veil was not lifted, was scanning from behind its shelter curiously, and with a rapid sharpness peculiar to her, the brilliant-dressed crowd, talking, laughing, flirting, lounging on the velvet seats and some furtively yawning in the weariness of their hearts; when a sudden brisk general flutter and a prevading whisper attracted the attention of both. The movement was caused by the entrance of a lady, so magnificently dressed and so extremely handsome that she could not have failed to create a sensation in any resort of gaiety, fashion, and the pomp and pride of life. The voluminous folds of her blue satin dress were covered, overflowed rather, by those of a splendid mantilla of black lace, worn Spanish fashion over her head, where a brilliant scarlet flower nestled between the rich filmy fabric and the lustrous black brown hair coiled round it. She came in, her head held up, her bright black eyes flashing, her whole face and figure radiant with reckless beauty and assertion. Two or three gentlemen accompanied her, and her appearance had the same processional air which George had commented upon in the morning. The lady was Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge.

"We're in luck, Mrs. Routh," said George. "Here comes my uncle's fair friend, or fair enemy, whichever she may be, in all her splendor. What a pity Mr. Felton is not here. Perhaps she will speak to me."

"Perhaps so," whispered Harriet, as she slipped her hand from under his arm, and sat down on a bench behind him. "Pray don't move, please. I particularly wish to be hidden."

At this moment, Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, advancing with her train, amid the looks of the assembly, some admiring, some affecting the contemptuous, and a few not remarkably respectful, approached George. From behind him, where her head just touched the back of his elbow, Harriet's blue eyes were fixed upon her. But the triumphant beauty was quite unconscious of their gaze. She stopped for a moment, and spoke to George.

"Good evening, Mr. Dallas. Is Mr. Felton here? No? He is expecting his son, I suppose."

"He does not know, madam. He has not heard from him."

"Indeed! But Arthur is always lazy about letter-writing. However, he will be here soon to answer for himself."

"Will he? Do you know, my uncle is very anxious—"

She interrupted him with a laugh and a slight gesture of her hand, in which the woman watching her discerned an insolent meaning, then said, as she passed on:

"He knows where to find me, if he wants to know what I [illegible] Dallas."

voice, after he had watched the brilliant figure as it mingled with the crowd in the long saloon.

"I did," said Harriet. "And though I don't understand her meaning, I think there is something wrong and cruel in it. That is a bold woman, George," she went on speaking earnestly; "and though I am not exactly the person entitled to warn you against dangerous friends—"

"Yes, yes, you are," interrupted George, eagerly, as he drew her hand again under his arm, and they moved on; "indeed you are. You are the best of friends to me. When I think of all the past, I hardly know how to thank you enough. All that happened before I went to Antwerp, and the way you helped me out of my scrape, and all that happened since; the good advice you gave me! Only think what would have happened to me if I had not acted upon it."

He was going on eagerly, when she stopped him by the iron pressure of her fingers upon his arm.

"Pray don't," she said. "I am not strong now. I can't talk of these—of anything that agitates me."

"I beg your pardon," said George, soothingly. "I ought to have remembered. And, also, Mrs. Routh, I know you never like to be thanked. What were you going to say when I thoughtlessly interrupted you?"

"I was going to say," she replied, in quite her customary tone, "that I don't think this American lady would be a very safe friend, and that I don't think she feels kindly towards your uncle. There was something malicious in her tone. Is your uncle uneasy about his son?"

The question put George into a difficulty, and Harriet with unfailing tact, perceived in a moment that it had done so. "I remember," she said, "the tone in which Mr. Felton wrote of his son, in the first letter, was not favorable to him; but this is a family matter, George, and you are quite right not to tell me about it."

"Thank you, Mrs. Routh," said George. "You are always right, and always kind. I must tell my uncle what has passed this evening. This much I may say to you. He has had no news of his son lately, and will be very glad to receive any."

"I don't think he will be glad to receive news of his son through her," said Harriet. All the time this conversation lasted she had been scanning the crowd through which they were moving, and noting every fresh arrival.

"Shall we go into the gardens? the lights look pretty," she continued.

George acquiesced, and they passed through the wide doors and down the broad steps into the gay scene over which the tranquil star-lit sky spread a canopy of deep cloudless blue; the blue of tempered steel; the dark blue of the night, which is so solemnly beautiful.

"Are you always so successful?" a voice, pitched to a low and expressive key, said to a lady, who sat, an hour later that night, with a heap of gold and silver beside her, under the brilliant light which streamed down over the gaming-tables and their occupants, but lighted up no such dauntless, bright, conquering beauty as hers. The man who had spoken stood behind her; his hand rested on the back of her chair, and was hidden in the folds of the laced drapery which fell over her dress. She gave him an upward, backward flash of her black eyes, and answered:

"Always, and in everything. I invariably play to win. But sometimes I care little for the game and tire of it in the beginning. Now, for instance, I am tired of this."

"Will you leave it, then?"

"Of course," and she rose as she spoke, took up her money, dropped it with a laugh into a silver-net bag, a revival of the old gypsin, which hung at her waist, and, drawing her lace drapery round, moved away. The man who had spoken followed her closely and silently. She passed into one of the saloons, and out into a long balcony, on which a row of windows opened, and which overlooked the gardens filled with groups of people.

A band was stationed in one of the rooms which opened upon the terrace, and the music sounded pleasantly in the still air.

"And so you are always successful!" said the man who had spoken before to the lady, who leaned upon the balcony, with the light from within just tinging the satin of her dress, and the faint light of the moon and the stars lending her grace and beauty a softened radiance which well became them, though somewhat foreign to them. "I believe that firmly. Indeed, how could you fail? I cannot fancy you associated with defeat. I cannot fancy anything but triumph for such a Venus Victrix as you are!"

"You say very pretty things," was the slightly contemptuous answer, "and you say them very well. But I think I am a little tired of them, among other things. You see, I have heard so many of them, ever since I can remember. In fact, I have eaten bon-bons of every kind, of all the colors, as they say in Paris, and they pall upon my taste now."

"You are not easily understood," said her companion; "but you are the most enchanting of enigmas."

"Again!" she said, and held up her ungloved hand, on which jewels shone in the dim, mixed light.

"[illegible] and again!" replied, and he drew nearer to did not shrink from him, she listened, with her arms wrapped in her lace mantle, resting upon the balcony, the long black eyelashes shading her eyes, and the head, with the scarlet flower decking it, bent—not in timidity, but in attentive thought. The man leaned with his back against the balcony, and his face turned partly toward her, partly toward the open windows, through which the light was shining. The lady listened, but rarely uttered a word. It was a story, a narrative of some kind which her companion was telling, and it evidently interested her.

They were alone. The rooms within filled, and emptied, and filled again, and people rambled about them, went out upon the terrace and into the gardens; but no one intruded upon the tete-a-tete upon the balcony.

A momentary pause in the earnest, passionate flow of her companion's speech caused the lady to change her position and look up at him. "What is it?" she said.

"Nothing. Dallas passed by one of the windows just now, and I thought he might have seen me. He evidently did not, for he's just the blundering fool to have come out here to us if he had. It never would occur to him that he could be in anyone's way."

There was an exasperation in his tone which surprised the lady. But she said, calmly, "I told you I thought him a booby." She resumed her former position, and as she did so the scarlet flower fell from her hair over the parapet. Her companion did not notice the accident, owing to his position she leaned a little more forward to see where the flower had fallen. A lady, who had, no doubt, been passing along the terrace under the balcony at the moment, had picked it up. Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge saw the blossom with the deep red color in the lady's hand as she walked rapidly away, and was lost to sight at the end of the terrace.

A little more times passed and the American lady and her companion left the balcony, passed through the central hall, and reached the grand entrance of the Kursaal. A close carriage was in waiting, into which the gentleman handed her.

"Where is the flower you wore in your hair to-night?" he said, as he lingered, holding the carriage door in his hand; "have you taken it out? Are you going to give it to me?" Exciting boldness was in his voice, and his keen dark eyes were aflame.

"Impertinent! I lost it; it fell over the balcony while you were talking—talking nonsense, I fancy."

"I will find it when you are gone. I may———No. I will keep it."

"Some one has been too quick for you," she said, with a mischievous laugh "I saw some one pick it up and walk off with it, very quickly, too."

"What? and you———"

"Don't be foolish." she interrupted him; "shut the door, please, I'm cold. I want to pull the glass up—I want to get home. There, good night. Pooh, are you a booby also? It was only a woman!"

A brilliant light was given by the lamps in the portico, and it shone on her face as she leaned a moment from the carriage window and looked full at him, a marvellous smile on her curved lips and in her black eyes. Then the carriage was gone, and he was standing like a man in a dream.

"Has Mrs. Routh come in?" George had asked, anxiously, of the English servant at Routh's lodgings, half an hour before.

"Yes, sir; but she has gone to her room, and she told me to give you this."

It was a note, written hastily in pencil, on a card:

"I felt so ill, after you left me to get the lemonade, that I was afraid to wait for your return, and came home at once. Pray forgive me. I know you will come here first, or I would send to your house. "H. R."

"Tell Mrs. Routh I hope to see her to-morrow," said George, and to find her better." Then he walked slowly toward his mother's house, thinking as he went of Clare Carruthers, of the Sycamores, and of how still, and solemn, and stately that noble avenue of beeches in which he saw her first was then doubtless looking in the moonlight: thinking the harmless thoughts of a young man whom love, the purifier, has come to save. A carriage passing him with bright lamps and a swift vision of sheeny blue seen for an instant reminded him of Mrs. P Ireton Bembridge, and turned his thoughts to the topic of his uncle's anxiety. When he reached home, he found Mr. Felton alone; and told him at once what had passed.

"You are quite correct in supposing that I don't particularly like this woman, George," said Mr. Felton, after they had talked for sometime, "and that I should prefer any other channel of intelligence. But we must take what we can get, and it is a great relief to get any. It's quite evident there's nothing wrong with him. I don't allude to his conduct," said Mr. Felton, with a sigh. "I mean as to his safety. I shall call on her to-morrow."

George bade his uncle good night, and was going to his own room, when a thought struck him, and he returned.

"It has just occurred to me, uncle," he said, "that Mrs. Bembridge may have a likeness of Arthur. From the account you give of her, I fancy she is likely to possess such trophies. Now we may not require to use such a thing at all, and you have sent for one under any circumstances; still, when you see her, if you consider it expedient, you might ascertain whether she has one in her possession. If her information is not satisfactory, to have a likeness at hand will save time."

(To be Continued.)

OLD MUSIC.

Back from the misty realms of Time,
Back from the years agone,
Faintly we catch the ringing rhyme,
And hear the melody and chime
Of olden songs, of strains sublime,
Like carol of birds at dawn.

And even we hear them, soft and low,
Harping their music sweet,
Songs that we loved in the long ago,
Rippling their liquid ebb and flow,
Drifting their cadence to and fro,
Like the fall of fairy feet.

Some faces our hearts will ever hold,
Some smiles we may remember yet,
Some were flowing locks like the sunset's gold,
There were parted lips of Cupid's mould,
And the songs they sang can ne'er grow old,
For our hearts can ne'er forget.

That tunes that the voice of girlhood sung,
The chords that we loved full well,
When hopes were buoyant, hearts were young,
When fairy bells in the flower-cups rung,
And ever fell from a maiden's tongue
The words of witching spell.

Ah! well-a-day, 'tis a story past,
Which I may not tell again,
'Twas a happiness too sweet to last;
The heavy clouds on her grave are cast,
And her voice is stilled, and above her, fast
Falls the Autumn rain!

About Sewing-Machines.—Mrs. Alice B. Whipple, wife of the Rev Mr. Whipple, Secretary of the American Missionary Association, testifies as follows:

Q.—Are you acquainted with Sewing Machines for family use, how long have you been so acquinted, and the nature and extent of your acquaintance with them?

A.—Yes; for the last nine or ten years I have examined various machines, and have seen them in use, and have for the last nine years used a machine in my own family.

Q.—As the result of your observation and experience, what machine do you think best as a general family instrument?

A.—The Grover & Baker, decidedly.

Q.—State the reasons, such of them as occur to you, for this opinion.

A.—I think the stitch is a stronger stitch than that of any other machine I have seen used, and it seems to me much more simple in its management than other machines. One great advantage is the ease with which the seam is ripped when necessary to do so, and I think the work, by an experienced person, on a Grover & Baker Machine, is better than the work of such person on any other machine. It requires more skill to work other machines than the Grover & Baker. [From testimony taken before the U. S. Commissioner of Patents, on the application for the extension of the patent of the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine.]

Ladies Should Read Newspapers.—It is a great mistake in female education to keep a young lady's time and attention devoted to the fashionable literature of the day. If you would qualify her for conversation, you must give her something to talk about—give her education with this actual world and the transpiring events. Urge her to read the newspapers, and become familiar with the present character and improvements of our race. History is of some importance; but the past world is dead, and we have nothing to do with it. Our thoughts and our concerns should be for the present world, know what it is, and improve the condition of it. Let her have an intelligent opinion, and be able to sustain a conversation concerning the mental, moral, political and religious improvements of our times.

"Although blood may be thicker than water," says the London Saturday Review, "the difference in the degree of attenuation tends to become every day more trifling. For instance, persons who live in large and busy towns concern themselves much less with their near relations than people do who live in the country. A man may live in the same town with his uncle without knowing anything of what the uncle is doing, and without seeing him more than three or four times a year, and then only by accident." We are acquainted with a number of individuals who would avoid seeing their "uncle" altogether if circumstances over which they have no control didn't compel a call on the old man.

There is a bashful bachelor who dares not meet ladies in the street. He says they wear so many bugles on their dresses that he fears overtures from them.

ENGLISH WOMEN.

From an Article in Saturday Review on Feminine Influence.

THE majority of English women seldom think of anybody without contrasting his or her social status with their own. Success signifies to them introduction to this or that feminine circle, admission to friendships from which they have been as yet excluded, and visiting cards of a more distinguished appearance than those which at present lie upon their table. They are unable to enjoy even the ordinary interconrse of society without an arriére pensée as to their chance of landing themselves a step higher on the social ladder. From such absurdities the best and most refined women of course are free, but the mass of Englishwomen seldom meet without woudering who on earth each of the others is, and to which county family she belongs. Humorous as is the spectacle of a crowd of English ladies, each of whom is employed in eyeing the lady next her and asking who she is, and comical as the point of view appears to any one who reflects on the shortness of human life and the little of human character, the effect of these feminine weaknesses is one which no one is sure of escaping. We are afraid that half of the Englishmen who are snobs are made so by English women. It is impossible for the female portion of any domestic circle to be perpetually dwelling on their own social aspirations without communicating the infection to, or even forcing it upon, the male. Wives and daughters become dissatisfied with their husbands' or their fathers' friends. They want to meet and associate with people whom it is a social credit to know, and who in turn may help them to know somebody beyond. Every fresh acquaintance of distinction, or of fashion, is a sort of milestone, showing the ground that has been traveled over by the family in the direction of their hopes.

This sort of fever is very catching. But though men often catch it, they generally catch it from the other sex, And even when they are not impregnated with it themselves, the effect of feminine influence upon them is that they accept their lot with placidity, and acquiesce in the social struggle through which they are dragged. If a man is wise, he is content with the reflection that little foibles do not altogether spoil real nobility of nature, and takes the bad side of a woman's nature with the good. But there are innumerable matters in respect of which he cannot withdraw himself from the feminine influence about him. By degrees he comes to sympathize with the little social disappointments of his family group, and to take pleasure in their little social triumphs, which appear to be productive of satisfa ction and enjoyment to those to whom they fall. But the effect on his character is not usually wholesome. His eye is no longer single. Feminine influence has engrafted on his nature the defects of feminine character, without engrafting on it also its many virtues. Women usually fail in communicating to men their self-devotion, their gentleness, their piety; all that they manage to communicate is little more than a respect for the observances of religion, and a nervous sensibility to social distinctions.

While the mental development of women continues to be so little studied, it is not surprising that the intellectual influence of the sex should be almost nil, or that such a modicum of it as they possess should be exerted within a very narrow sphere. It is the fault, no doubt, of our systems of female education that the mental power of the cleverest women really comes in England to very little. In its highest forms it amounts to a capacity for conversation on indifferent matters, a genius for music or some other fine art, a turn for talking about the poets of the day, and perhaps for imitating their style with ease, coupled, in exceptional cases, with a talent for guessing double acrostics. To be able to do all this, and to be charming and religious too, is the whole duty of young women. It would be difficult possibly to fit out an English lady with the various practical accomplishments that are of use in matrimony, and make her at same time an intellectual equal of the other sex. But it would be possible to train her to understand more of the general current of the world's ideas, even if she could not devote herself to studying them in detail. What woman has now any notion of the broad outline of the history of human thought? All philosophy is a sealed book to her. It is the same with theology and politics. She has not the wildest conception, as a rule, of the grounds on which people think who think differently from herself; and all through all life she is content to play the part of a partisan or a devotee with perfect equanimity. While, however, feminine influence in intellectual subjects is, as it deserves to be, infinitesimal, in practice and in action women are proud of being recognised as useful and sound advisers. As outsiders and spectators they see a good deal of the game, have leisure to watch narrowly all that is going on about them, and a subtle instinct teaches them to tread delicately over all dangerous ground. It is curious how many enemies women make amongst themselves, and yet how many enemies they prevent men from making. They seem to have less of self control or prudence as far as their own strong feelings or fortunes are concerned, than they have of tact and temper in managing the fortunes and enterprises of others. Their influence is not the less real because, unlike that of Mrs. Prondie, it is exerted chiefly behind the scenes. It is possibly because the influence possessed by women is so intangible, depending less as it does on the reason than on the sentiment, affection and convenience of the other sex, that women are so jealous to assert and protect it.

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1867.

"PURE ENGLISH."

MANY of the freshest and richest productions of American writers, during the last few years, many of those that evince the highest degree of originality and vital power and that seem to herald the dawn of a genuine national literature which shall not be either an imitation or an echo, are not written in what is commonly styled pure English. The introduction of new words, phrases and idioms variously classed as vulgarisms, provincialisms and slang, though regarded with so much sensitive horror by the purists, is inevitable in every living language; and notwithstanding the protests of pedants and grammarians, it may admit of doubt whether such new coinages ought to be prononnced an evil. There is reason to believe that if the sticklers for classical correctness in style and expression were to have their way and put under ban every home-bred phrase freshly transferred from the talk of the people into literature, every collocation of words not sanctioned by the usage of the best models of English composition, in short everything that could be called an Americanism, our language would become bookish, and degenerate into mere diction, so as to be no more a fit vehicle for the living thought of the age and country, and for giving adequate expression to our natural individuality than Latin or Greek would be. After all, there is a certain higher law of language, not to be found in the text books of grammar and rhetoric, by virtue of which its forms never can become fixed and rigid until it ceases to be the speech of a people—by virtue of which, so long as it lives, the speaking usage continually modifies the writing usage, so that in the course of a period longer or shorter according to the conditions of each particular case, the books of one generation become unintelligible to a succeeding one. And it is well that this is so. It is more desirable that the language of literature should receive fresh accessions from the common speech of the people, than that the latter should become bookish and precise. The former process imparts force and vigor, the latter tends to take away picturesqueness and color. Every one must have often noticed in the conversation of uneducated persons of natural shrewdness and observation, a singular descriptive and narrative power which the novelist and poet seldom attain—a quality at which Lowell hints when he says of "Uncle Reuben's" story,

> "I could not give his language where through ran
> The gamy flavor of the bookless man,
> Who shapes a word before the fancy cools."

It is Scott's marvelous skill in imitating, or rather perhaps in reproducing pithy idiomatic language of the common people, that gives such power to his dialogue, and occasionally to his narrative when put into the mouth of one of his characters. The story of the blind fiddler in Redgauntlet, and the conversation of Peter Peebles in the same novel, are striking instances of this.

Upon the whole, we are not sorry to observe that the fear of the schoolmaster who feels bound to take up the battle-axe in favor of "pure English" and to make war against home-bred phrases and idioms, is not as strong with the rising generation of authors as it was with their predecessors, and we shall neither be greatly surprised nor afflicted if the next "Dictionary of Americanisms" shall be found to contain twice as many pages as the last.

The Nevada Gazette, in alluding to the bull lately issued by Bishop Kip against dancing at church festivals, gives utterance to the following, the truth of which will be acknowledged by all thinking persons:

"One of the strongest proofs of the divine origin of Christianity is the fact that it has so long prospered under such blundering human leadership. One bigoted and narrow-minded priest can do more harm to the cause of Christianity than twenty brawling infidels. We are glad to be able to say that in Nevada, for the last few years, at least, our ministers have been educated and liberal-minded gentlemen, whose efforts have strongly tended to advance the cause of Christianity, not to load it down with the dead ideas of the old past."

The Base Ball Clubs of New York are enjoying a sport that is quite beyond the reach of our city. Late papers speak of an exciting game which came off on the 16th of January on skates at Sylvan Lake, Hoboken, between a select ten of the Eagle and Empire clubs of New York. Five innings were played, occupying an hour and three quarters, the score standing as follows:— Empires 15.— Eagles 13 runs.

Speaking of the project of supplying all the cities and villages of the State of New York with gas manufactured at the coal pits and conveyed through mains, the New York Herald says:

"As the scheme develops itself, the immense benefits it promises become more and more evident. The price of gas will be reduced to a little over one fourth of its present cost; the quality will be so much purer than that at present supplied to consumers that the same quantity now used will afford nearly double the brilliancy of light, and the nuisance occasioned by the gas houses in cities will be removed. The tunnels and bridges of our railroads can always be lighted by gas, and travel be thus rendered less hazardous, until pneumatic railways come into existence—running one hundred miles an hour with entire safety—and drive the present slow, lumbering and dangerous twenty five miles an hour engines and cars out of use and out of memory. It is true that some scientific boobies protest that the scheme is chimerical, and declare that it cannot be done, with as much positiveness as poor Professor Loomis affirmed that the meteoric showers could not possibly make their appearance in England. But their predictions will be exploded as effectually as was Professor Loomis' astrology, and before long the mains will be conveying gas to our citizens direct from the Pennsylvania coal fields, and the impositions and extortions of powerful gas monopolies will be at an end."

We clip the following from the Marin County Journal. San Rafael has become so much of a resort for our invalids that anything relating to her interests is of interest to us:

"The financial condition of Marin county is very satisfactory and gratifying to its tax-paying citizens. The last dollar of indebtedness is wiped out and funds on hand remaining sufficient for the ordinary expenses of lubricating the wheels of the county government. There remains now no excuse for neglecting or further delaying improvements of our roads and highways. Our county can well stand, and would be benefitted by a debt created for that purpose. The making of roads demand the earnest attention of the Board of Supervisors as well as that of every owner of real estate. Easy inter-communication between every section of the county as well as to market depots or outlets for produce is the great desideratum now before the men entrusted with the management of the business affairs of the county. We can see no obstacle in the way, but the lack of skill or talent and a modicum of enterprise for the rapid improvement of property and a continually growing addition to our tax paying population. Our geographical position, contigious to the great commercial emporium of the Pacific, where buyers and sellers resort from all parts of the world: our salubrious climate—inviting to pleasant and quiet homes the worn out or wearied accumulators of wealth, cannot fail of giving to our bay county a position second to none in the State."

The New York Herald seems to think that the European papers are expressing very absurd ideas in regard to the impeachment question. From an editorial of a late issue we clip the following:

"The President, we may assume, will be impeached and removed; General Grant and Admiral Farragut will probably be elected after a short lapse of time to the offices of President and Vice President, Mr. Johnson will soon be forgotten, and the affairs of the country will go on in their accustomed channels, prospering and to prosper.

The English press foresaw in the late rebellion the downfall of our government and institutions, because, perhaps, the wish was father to the thought; and they were greatly astonished to find that we put down the rebellion and preserved the government. But they will be more astonished at the result of this impeachment business; for it will not in the least affect or imperil our institutions. It is a curious and entirely novel episode in our history, it is true, though not without precedent in France and England; but it will come, go and be forgotten without impeding the prosperity of the country."

If late reports are correct, Philadelphia may be estimated as the richest city of the Union. A writer says:

"Under that city there is a deposit of clay, measuring ten square miles. This stratum of clay has a thickness of about fifteen feet. The chemist, in applying his test, has discovered that gold exists in that clay bed to the value of three cents in each cubic foot. In that vast clay deposit there are 180,000,000 cubic ft., in which is diffused $126,000,000. There is gold enough in every brick made from it to cover it with two square inches of gold leaf, and within the corporate limits of that city there is more gold diffused than has yet been brought from Australia and California."

Craniology.—In the account of the proceedings at the semi-monthly meeting of the Academy of Natural Sciences, held during the present week, it is recorded that Mr. Gates exhibited the cranium of a Digger Indian, taken from a cemetery not used for seventy or a hundred years. We are somewhat puzzled to know what particular scientific interest attaches itself to this aboriginal cranium. They are quite plentiful up-country. There are many skulls walking the streets of San Francisco quite as empty, and yet far more worthy the attention of the Academy of Natural Sciences than that of "ye noble savage."

A woman drove up to one of the Baltimore police-stations a few days since, and delivered to the officer her husband, William Hook, tied hand and foot. She stated that she had followed the army for three years as a washerwoman, had accumulated $2,500, had purchased a farm, that her husband had become dissipated, and had attempted to kill her and her children. Throwing him down, she said: "Here he is, and I want him sent to jail." Her request was complied with, despite the appeals of her "liege lord."

[For the Californian.]

AT POINT LOBOS.

Clear noon without obscurity.
No flake of cloud 'twixt heaven and me;
No mist athwart the Golden Gate,
The hearty sun doth willfully
His profuse beams precipitate.

I cling to humped rocks that kneel
On unswept sands, where breakers reel
In splendid curves, and pile their foam
In spongey hills, that slow congeal,
And dulce and drift-wood find a home.

We clasp the silver crescent set
Within the hazy parapet
That belts the horizon: In glee,
I count the fitful puffs that fret
The eternal levels of the sea.

I watch the waves that seem to breathe
And pant unceasingly, beneath
Their silken coverings, that cringe,
As flecked with swirls of froth, they seeth,
And whip, and flutter to a fringe.

Brown pipers run upon the sand
Like shadows; far out from the land
Gray gulls slide up against the blue;
One shining spar is sudden manned
By squadrons of their wrecking crew.

My city is beyond the hill;
I cannot hear its voices shrill;
I little note its gains and greeds.
Here is my song, where waters spill
Their liquid strophes in the reeds.

And to this music I forswear
Whatever soils the world with care.
I see the listless waters toss—
I track the swift lark through the air—
I lie with sunlight in the moss.

White caravans of cloud go by
Across the desert of bright sky,
And burly winds are following,
The trailing pilgrims, as they fly,
Over the grassy hills of spring.

What Mecca are they hastening to?
What princess journeying to woo,
In the rich orient? I am thrilled
With spice and odor they imbue;
I feed upon their manna spilled!

I strip my breast with eager mind,
To tarry and invite the wind
To my embrace; by curious spell,
It quickens me with praises kind—
'Tis Ariel that blows his shell!

Invisible and soft as dews
Descending, he his love renews,
Delighting daisy colonies;
They gloss them with the lustrous ooze
Of meadows, steeped in ecstacies.

Until the homely sunburnt Heads;
The tumbling hills in browns, and reds,
And gray sand-hillocks everywhere,
Are buried in the mist that sheds
Its subtle enow upon the air.

And Prospero, aroused from sleep,
Recalls his spirits from the deep;
They cross the wave with stealthy tread;
Their shadows down upon me sweep—
And day is past, and joy is fled.

I hear the dismal bells that shout
Their warning to the ships without;
The dripping sails are reefed and furled:
The pilots sound and grope about—
The Gate is barred against the world!

San Francisco, Feb. 1867. Charles Warren Stoddard.

Pacific Law Magazine.—February, 1867. Published by F. Clarke, San Francisco. We are pleased to receive a copy of the second number of this promising monthly. Among its original matter we find a conclusion of the interesting contribution upon "Tenants in Common—Ejectment," in which the authorities have been carefully examined and the doctrines established perspicuously laid down. We are glad also to find a continuation of the very able article by Gregory Yale, Esq., one of the most eminent members of the San Francisco Bar, upon "Titles to Mining Claims and Granting the Right of Way over Public Lands to Ditch Companies." This is a subject to which the author of the article has evidently given his usual very careful attention, and is indeed one which he has adopted as a specialty in his professional study and practice. Members of the bar will be gratified to find in this number a valuable addition to the collection of recent decisions of the Supreme Court of this State, made of special interest by the careful syllabus preceding each decision. The editors assure us that they were compelled to crowd out of this number considerable original and selected matter, owing to the number of late decisions, all of which it is intended shall be presented to their readers as soon after they are made as is possible.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE P. M. MINING AND PROSPECTING COMPANY:

Or, How I Ran Copper-Mines in Tuolumne and Mono.

BY PRENTICE.

THE only merit claimed for the history of the P. M. Mining and Prospecting Company. formed to discover, develope and hold on to various real and imaginary ledges of gold, silver, coal and copper, is that of truth. It is true as gospel—in fact, more true than some gospels.

Some few years ago, there existed a great degree of excitement in this State regarding the discovery of copper. The Union Vein at Copperopolis had been proved immensely rich, and the whole country was in a cupriferous ferment. Everybody was prospecting for copper ledges, everybody found copper ledges, everybody belonged to companies formed to work copper ledges, everybody read treatises on copper mining and copper smelting, and everybody was testing copper rock with nitric acid—whereby numerous fingers were yellowed and numerous holes burned into coats and pants. Heaps of "indication rock" were piled in and about the groceries and barrooms. There was an endless jargon of talk about "gosson,," "sulphurets," "carbonates," "oxides," etc. Men of a keen business turn of mind looked grave and anxious, and planned to get all the feet they could, and filch all they could from their neighbors by the humane and skillful operation, tinctured with so much brotherly love and affection known as "freezing out." And it rejoices my uncharitable soul to say, that many among the house of Grab-All burnt their fingers terribly, and got so many worthless feet on their hands and so many beloved dollars off, as to sicken at the very sight and sound of copper forever after.

I became an experienced copper-miner—yes, even an authority on copper, in about three weeks after the breaking out of the excitement. I discovered new veins every day. The least green tinge or copper stain on the ledge was considered an infallible indication of the existence of immense deposits of ore beneath. The spot was then immediately plastered with the notices of claimants, and extensions were taken beyond, until the supposed ledge was lost, or the prospectors lost themselves in wild and unexplored regions.

Numerous towns and cities in the neighborhood of promising veins were laid out. I laid out two cities myself, and those two cities are laid out yet. Any one is welcome to them who wants them.

At length, a vast scheme took possession of my soul. I reasoned thus: Copper was everywhere, copper prospecting was going on everywhere, and a large proportion of these veins must, when developed, prove valuable. Such being the case, the ledges lying adjacent must also be valuable. I would form a company, whose purpose it should be to "take up" and hold on to mineral ground in different sections of the country. The work being done by others, would of course prove their worth. Somebody must strike it somewhere, and one good vein thus obtained would overbalance a thousand times the expense of keeping up such a company for a year. It was a kind and Christian scheme thus to realize a fortune through the efforts of others, although not many degrees worse than buying up all the beef or flour in the State on speculation. The poor devils delving in the flinty ledge and starving themselves nearly to death in the purchase of drills and gunpowder, were to perform the work, while the Mining and Prospecting Company sat quietly by and took up extensions. The cupriferous apple being ripe, it was quietly to drop into our mouths. One day's work in thirty was sufficient to keep up any amount of ledge, providing it belonged to one company. The day's work sufficient for keeping up could be effected by turning over a few shovelfuls of dirt or banging some rotten rock to pieces with a sledge. While not occupied in keeping up ledge, I intended to prospect and (if possible) to discover other large and extensive deposits of mineral.

I drew up a prospectus, constitution and by-laws; with those instruments, I tramped about the country from camp to camp seeking, and sometimes obtaining, stockholders. Oftentimes, with two biscuit in my shirt-pocket did I read my scheme to lawyers, doctors and bankers; and afterward rejoiced with joy unspeakable, when some charitable miner invited me to partake of the hospitalities of his cabin.

The scheme took with difficulty. Had it only originated in San Francisco, it would have readily succeeded. It required some two hundred miles of travel on foot to obtain a suitable number of shareholders They were to pay me three dollars per month apiece. Some paid and some did not. Those who wanted me to wait for a few days for my money, thought excellently of the scheme; those who paid down, seemed somewhat dubious, and were cross and fretful concerning those who paid not; and so I commened operations on foot.

The P. M. Prospecting Company had a resident secretary and treasurer, as well as a board of directors, but they lived so far apart that it was impossible ever to to get them together. Several attempts to hold a meeting of the company ended in failure. Two, I think, ended in a general drunk; but such occurrences were usual in our section on any occasion. Stern necessity obliged me to constitute myself both the executive and the deliberative power, as well as the board of directors. So I violated the provisions of my own constitution, which required these various officers to exercise certain duties. I usurped every thing. I became sole dictator. No wonder I failed.

Hearing of copper discoveries in the Walker-River country, I walked over there. It was one hundred and twenty miles distant from my base of operations. On starting, the treasury of the company contained eight dollars—a rather scant allowance for a three-weeks' trip in a land where meals were a dollar apiece. But when money must last, it generally lasts.

The Walker-River country was rough. The mountains were high, requiring in many cases a day to reach the summit, although it took much less time to make the descent. I clambered around these precipitous ridges about a week, found some green stains, indicative of copper, and lost the soles of my boots. I also found a man. Him I enrolled a member of the P. M. Prospecting Co., in consideration of the use of a certain mare for a time. The mare was not convenient of access, being one hundred and fifty miles distant in the lower corner of Tuolumne county. Distance was nothing to me then. My zeal in behalf of the company overran all regard for legs. So I footed it back and procured the animal. Entertainment for the man, without the beast, at the various way-houses on the route, was paid for in the stock of the P. M. P Co.; so were the fees for the mare's ranching, and so were a saddle and bridle, without which, I found the animal would be of but little use. I collected also a store of locomotory kitchen furniture. There are many deserted cabins in the mines, and when one finds coffee-pots, frying-pans, knives, forks, etc., lying uselessly about, and they are needed, they are apt to be taken. So, at last, the company got on a fair footing. It became entirely independent of hotels, and lived outside like an Arab.

But the great trouble lay, as in many other stock companies, in the collection of assessments. Nearly all the shareholders had already too many feet on their hands. It has been quite satisfactorily ascertained since, that the development of one mineral vein, be it gold, silver, or copper, will cost about all the cash a man has to spare, especially if he be a man of moderate means. Now, the claims held by most of my members, were numerous. They were trying to develop all at once: in in fact, had one third proved productive, Tuolumne county would have supplied the world with copper. Somebody could not be paid. Somebody must go to the wall; and although my scheme was the grandest and least expensive to keep in operation, still I was more used to rags and starvation than anyone else, and so to the wall I went. Where I should have received one hundred dollars, I got about thirty. And this was not obtained without many a long face and prolonged grumble. There were limits as to the probability of "not being able to stand it long," and growls about those who did not pay. Some could not pay, some were never at home, some paid and "drew out." The treasury was always in a fearfully emaciated condition, a condition which many a time led to a large vacuum in the stomach of the treasurer.

The exclamation which usually greeted me on my return from a prolonged sojourn in the hills and gulches, would be: "Well, struck anything yet?" The fact is, I had plenty of veins, but none of them were productive. Had I only brought in news of the discovery of a vein of pure gold several yards in width with a number of specimens to verify my assertion, there can be no doubt but that everyone of the shareholders would have readily come out with their monthly three dollars and perhaps paid up all arrearages.

Then I was cursed with that unprofitable sensitiveness which makes it such hard work to ask for money. I was always reduced to the verge of abjectness and humility on venturing to hint to some delinquent stockholder that I wanted my dues. Some of these shareholders were men of means; men who, owing to the eternal unfitness of things, were able to look down upon me from the summit of their little pile of dollars. And yet, I could not talk to them as I should have done—I, who in their service had suffered hunger and cold; had lain out of doors night after night, drenched with rain; had lived on fare compared with which, the rations of a jail were as one of the feasts of Lucullus. The eternal unfitness of things previously spoken of, was perhaps the reason that at times I could make bold and impudent remarks just at the time when such remarks were liable to do me the most injury.

But I harbor no ill will against the former stockholders in the P. M. Mining and Prospecting Company, formed to develop the mineral resources of the company through other people's exertions. They knew nothing of my troubles or my mare's troubles. They never suspected the frequency of the great blanks which happened to me at meal times. They had cares and vexations of their own to look after. They had other assessments to meet; and besides, whisky, billiards, segars, and various other et cetcras and necessaries of life, kept their purses short and troubled their brains. Heaven bless and protect them!

The P. M. P. Company, while in the height of its unsuccessful career, met with a serious shock in the loss of its mare. Probably she became disgusted with the eternal delinquency of the shareholders; at all events, she wandered off one day, and as the natural consequent, I wandered off in quest of her. The treasury at that time contained about two dollars. In vain, day after day, did I explore the hills of Tuolumne for th missing and tardy beast. Never were the affairs of this association—which promised so much, and pecuniarily amounted t so little—in such a desperate condition. There was the camp equipage—saddle, blankets, and locomotory cook shop in one place—the head of the company in another; and the mare, the Lord only knows where she was; but any number of people in various parts of the country, knew that a dismal wayfarer was in a chronic state of inquiry—directed to every rancher, Mexican, Chinaman, countryman and countrywoman, regarding the whereabouts of an old, bay. bald-faced mare, running loose—long rope attached. But I sought for her in vain. The more I looked, the more she was not to be found—moreover, she was not my property; she belonged to another man--a man, too, whose bearing and conversation was indicative of the desperado and the shootist.

She was found at last—found on one of the blackest nights coming through the streets of one of the meanest little camps in the county—found while she was not being sought for. She was in search of the head of the company. I embraced her; and once more the P. M. P. Co. was off of two, and on its four, legs again.

Misery does love company. Impecunious people will gravitate toward each other. This truth was developed in the history of the P. M. P. Co. As sure as I started out with a stock of provision calculated to last six or seven days, and camped by the trail, so sure would some half-starved wayfarer heave in sight with his roll of blankets, his empty pockets, and still more empty stomach. The Sonora and Mono trail abounded with this sort of people,ever going and coming. On the Nevada side, Aurora had by no means justified the anticipations at first formed concerning it. Times were as hard as usual in California. And between the two, men were ever tramping, looking for work and generally finding none. I entertained large numbers of these men. They always rejoiced in large appetites, and frequently reduced me to the necessity of a premature return to the settlements for more provisions.

My own gastronomical performances while thus wandering in the mountains was fearful, and required to be carefully watched. I carried about with me as luxuries, a little bread, butter and sugar. Sometimes at night I awoke with an unconquerable hankering for some of that bread, butter and sugar. This was because it was scarce. Had there been hogsheads of bread, butter and sugar lying about me, I should have gone and slept somewhere else to be out of their way. As it was, I was obliged to get up and have a little taste. It was better than all the delicacies one sees in the windows of the Montgomery-street restaurants. One taste led to another, and another to another, until at last, in desperation, I have finished the whole lot, just to get it off my mind and be rid of the aggravated thought of that heavenly bread, butter and sugar. If you would know the true relish of these delicacies, go out in the wilderness with but a small quantity of each.

I scarcely know, myself, how the P. M. P. Co. terminated. It mizzled. It went out gently like an expiring candle, with occasional resuscitations of vitality as some long sought for delinquent stockholder paid in his much-needed quota. Copper became at last very distasteful to the people. I commenced losing my stockholders one by one. They died off with a sort of pecuniary inanition. And finally, the association became reduced down to one beside myself—the man who owned the mare. And when he wanted back his faithful, but slow, bald-faced mare, the crisis was reached and operations were suspended. Over thousands of feet of ledge, extending over an area of hundreds of miles, are, for aught I know, still posted the notices of the P. M. P. Company; but the localities are silent and deserted. No longer is heard the stroke of the pick in the hands of the executive and deliberate power of the company pretending to do his monthly period of labor on various ledges rich in—well in imagination. That phase of my existence is past and gone. I shall plan no more gigantic schemes for the development of copper in California. There is too strong a taint of starvation, dilapidated boots and rags about them.

The Round Table has a striking article entitled "Our very Common Council," in which some of the acts of the Common Council of New York are discussed. The Editors call upon the "dark-lantern personages who have grown rich on their swindles" to disgorge or be prepared to have an unenviable immortality attached to their names. Not only from this article, but from everything we can learn of the present condition of the government of that city, we think the adjective attached to the title very appropriate. The only remedy we can conceive of, is that of reviving the Native American Party. The constitution was framed with a view to the government of the enlightened children of a Republic, and where ever it has failed it has been in consequence of admitting the ignorant and down-trodden of other nations to all the rights of citizenship.

THE MAN ANNIE LOVED.

SHE was crocheting something out of soft scarlet and white wool. Her fingers were white as the wool. Milton Etheredge sat watching her, pretending to read a paper at the same time. She was looking very charming in her buff muslin dress, with pink ribbons at the throat, and looping back her brown hair.

Annie Huntley knew the value of dress—and, what is more, she knew how to attire herself in just the manner most becoming to her. She was not so much prettier than dozens of other young ladies; but everything about her was in harmony, and people had fallen into the habit of calling her beautiful. She had a clear, wild-rose complexion—tolerably regular features—soft, brown eyes, and brown hair that was struggling continually to break into the curls and ringlets so natural to her.

Milton Etheredge—gave, silent, wise barrister—wondered within himself how long he had loved this little Annie. He could not remember. Six years ago she had come to stay with them—the dying bequest of Mrs. Etheredge's best valued friend. The good lady had been a mother to her ever since, and Milton had played the part of a kind elder brother. Annie was eighteen when she came to town—she was now twenty-five. Yes, he was sure he had loved her six years. She had made everything so different. Her pretty ways of arranging curtains, and flowers, and books, and knick-knacks, had brightened up the house wonderfully. Milton thought it was strange how he and his mother had ever managed to live without her.

So he sat and looked at her as she made the shining steel flash in and out the bright, fleecy wool. Not that he thought of ever being anything more to her than he was now. His love was quiet yet—it had not reached that passionate stage when it will not be subdued by any obstacles. He was thirty, at least, and it would be childish for him to hope she would ever link her young, fresh life with that of a man whose hair would soon be getting gray.

But there was something more to destroy the hope, if he had dared to indulge it. At one time, perhaps, he had indulged it, but certainly not now. Annie Huntley had had her life romance as well as other women. It had been sweet at first—painfully bitter at the last. It had made her smile graver—her color more fleeting—her manner, at times, subdued and sad—so Mr. Milton Etheredge thought.

Annie and Leigh Richardson had met under somewhat romantic circumstances. He had saved her from drowning at Newport, when she had ventured beyond her depth; and, after her removal to the city, he had followed her there, and settled himself in the practice of his profession—the law. He had been a constant visitor for two years. People began to speak of them as belonging to each other, and Mrs. Etheredge had, with a woman's peculiar delight, begun to anticipate the wedding breakfast and the bridal trousseau. Etheredge had looked on with a dull pain at his heart, for which he felt half angry with himself. Surely he ought to rejoice that Annie would be so happy, for Richardson was every way estimable, and was rising rapidly in his profession.

Suddenly, however, about two years before the opening of our story, his visits to Annie ceased, and he began a violent flirtation with Nellie Seymour. Annie did not die on account of it—she did not even mope, as girls generally do when crossed in love. Her manner was a little more subdued, her laugh came less frequently, but she was not heartbroken. She put aside the sympathy Mrs. Etheredge would have offered her, quietly, and gave her confidence to no one. Sometimes she met Leigh Richardson; but they exchanged no words, not even the ordinary ceremonious greetings of mere acquaintances; they were as completely separated as if an ocean rolled between them.

That evening, as Etheredge sat watching Annie, and thinking of all this, he noticed with a thrill of pain, that she was a little paler, little more quiet, than usual. He remembered that she had met Richardson at the picture-gallery that day.

Some magnetic influence in the gaze of Etheredge made Annie look up. She flushed under the serene lustre of those dark grey eyes, and her fingers forgot their cunning, and dropped the ball of wool she was unwinding. It rolled toward the fire—there was a genuine old-fashioned wood fire upon the hearth—and, in stooping to recover it, her light sleeve dipped into the blaze. The flames leaped up—Milton sprang forward, caught her in his arms, and crushed out the fire.

She was frightened—weak and dizzy with remembering what she had escaped; and, for a moment, she stood circled by his arm—her head on his shoulder—her soft hair resting against his cheek. All the love he had so long kept under foot, rose up like an unbound tyrant. He pressed his lips to hers—he would have told her, then how dear she was to him, but something seemed to hold him back. He would wait a little until the excitement of her recent peril should be over; would wait and think it over calmly.

All that night he sat up, thinking. He loved her with all his soul; he should never care for another woman. But he was not quite sure of the condition of her heart. What if she had still a lingering tenderness for Richardson? He feared she might. He had seen her kiss a picture which he felt morally sure was his. Would he like his wife to kiss Leigh Richardson's picture? Would he like to think that she ever had kissed it?

Then he remembered how she blushed sometimes when he looked at her, and took courage. It might be that the old dream could be forgotten in the new. At any rate, he would know before he slept, he said with sudden resolution, and after breakfast he went out for a walk. He belonged to the Franklin Club, and for the want of something better to do, sauntered in.

There were only two or three present—idling over the morning papers. As he entered, he caught the name of Annie Huntly. Fred Orme, a reckless, young fellow, was telling a story. Etheredge reddened at hearing her name from Orme's lips, and was about striding forward, and calling him to account for it, when Orme's next words arrested him and forced him to listen.

"You see, Leigh Richardson was dead in love with her! Well, she is a charming girl—dresses exquisitely. Leigh is smart, but I never liked him since he won that silver cup at the boat race. I meant to have had that myself. Too bad I didn't get it!"

"So it was!" drawled Edward Harrison.

"It was hotter than the tropics, and Leigh is one of the cold-blooded ones. I said then I be meant to be even with him, and I have kept my word. Don't mind telling you the story, since it is such an old affair. Matters were going on swimmingly, two years ago, between Leigh and Annie. They'd have been married before now, if nobody had interfered. But Dennis and I—you know Dennis? good fellow—got up a little plan between us, and it worked splendidly. I gained possession of some of Leigh's handwriting, and practised writing like it. I am an expert at that business, I flatter myself; and in a few days I could fairly beat Richardson with his own weapons. So I wrote a letter to an imaginary chum of his—giving a description of Miss Annie—calling her a soft little thing, telling him how she adored the subscriber, and how the subscriber cared nothing at all for her, but was enjoying a glorious flirtation. Of course the subscriber was Leigh Richardson. This note—which was a most insulting thing to any woman—we contrived to have dropped where Miss Annie would find it; and the result was even more jolly than I had anticipated. She met Richardson the next day, and refused to listen to any explanation he could make. Ha! ha! a good joke, wasn't it? Paid him for getting that cup. Always intended to pay him off in some way. He felt dreadfully of it."

Etheredge waited to hear no more. In his present frame of mind he felt as if he could not bear it. He went home and shut himself up in his chamber. After all, Richardson had been true How bitterly he had been wronged. Annie would repent, and love him more than ever, if she knew the injustice she had done him. That was a woman's nature. She atones for wrong by giving love.

Etheredge felt faint and sick. He saw his duty clearly enough: but it is not always easy to do one's duty. There was a little struggle between his heart and his conscience. A hundred times the temptation beset him to keep his knowledge to himself, and win Annie for his own. She would never know that Richardson was blameless, and his great love might make her so happy! At last, he knelt down and prayed over it. He always prayed over those things which were too hard for him. After that he rose, and there was no hesitation. If he could make Annie happy, what mattered it to him how it was accomplished?

He went down to the sitting-room about sunset. He knew he should find her there. Mrs. Etheredge was away at evening services.

Annie was sewing by a shaded lamp. She did not like the glare of the gas. There was a rich color on her cheeks, over which the loose hair drooped low. Milton Etheredge's heart leaped at the sight of her; but he stilled it down, and took a seat beside her.

"Annie," he said, "I am an old friend, and I think you will not be offended if I ask you a few questions. Not because I am the least curious, but because I desire your good more than any earthly thing."

She looked up in wonderment—noticing the strange unsteadiness of his voice, and the tremor of the hand he laid on hers.

"Offended with you, Mr. Etheredge?" she said, reproachfully; "never! Go on. I am listening!"

"Annie, you were once engaged to Leigh Richardson?"

Her head drooped low; the crimson came and went in her cheeks.

"I was" she said, in a low voice.

"You loved him—and he loved you? Was it not so, Annie?"

"We called it love."

"And you thought him false?"

"Yes."

"What if you knew that he was not false—that he was true to you always? That the contemptible letter which you read, purporting to have been written by him, was a vile forgery? What then?"

She was looking at him in mute surprise. She drew a long breath.

"Was it a forgery?"

"It was. I have just heard the history of it. An ill-natured acquaintance of Richardson's, to gratify a petty revenge, wrote the letter, and dropped it where you would be sure to find it. Leigh Richardson was leal and true."

She sat very still before him—not a line of her face changing. He waited for her to speak, but she did not seem disposed to do so.

"Annie, my dear friend, shall I speak to Mr. Richardson about this mistake?"

"If you please. I would like him to know that he is clear in my eyes. I think he would be gald to know it. Tell him just how it was, and ask him to forgive me, if I was harsh with him."

"Is that all?"

"That is all."

"Pardon me for pursuing the subject; but, if you still care for him, you will want to speak to him on the matter yourself."

"But I do not care for him."

"You do not? Why, may I ask?"

She blushed red as a rose. Etheredge put the blush and the portrait he had seen her kiss together. A sharp pang pierced him.

"Is it because you love another?"

"Yes," she said quietly; "it is because I love another."

"And that other?"

She rose abruptly, and flung off the detaining hand he laid on her arm.

"You have no right to ask me that!" she said hoarsely. "Let me go! You torture me;"

"I torture you, Annie—I?"

What possessed him he did not know—perhaps, something her eyes said to him made him bold. He put his arm around her and drew her to his side.

"Annie, if you love another, I must give you to him—your happiness shall be secured to you, though mine be shipwrecked! I did not mean to tell you, darling, but I love you so, it almost kills me to think of losing you! Oh, Annie—my little lost Annie!"

Her face grew rosy as the morning. She put her arms around his neck.

"Not lost but found," she said, softly.

"Annie," he cried breathlessly, "do not deceive me! What of the picture I saw you kissing?"

She laughed a little; and crimson with confusion, drew the locket from her bosom, and held it up to him. He saw his own face.

"Forgive me, Milton. I got it of the artist and have worn it these two years. Leigh Richardson is nothing to me—you are all."

A LION IN HIS OLD AGE.—When a young lion reaches the age of two years he is able to strangle or pull down an ox; and so he continues to grow and increase in strength till he reaches his eighth year, and his talons, teeth, and mind are perfect, and he grows no more. For twenty years after he arrives at maturity his fangs and talons show no signs of decay; but after that he gradually becomes feeble, his teeth fail him, and he grows 'cubbish." He is no longer a match for the tremendous buffalo; he is overmatched even by the peaceful ox, so he prowls around the cattle krawls, and snatches a lamb or a kid just as he did when he set out with his parents nearly thirty years before. A woman or a child at night shares the same fate. His strength and sight now decline more and more till the mighty lion grows lean and mangy, and crawls about from place to place, eating an offal he can pick up, and despising not even so small an animal as the field-mouse; so he starves and dies, or is fallen on and slaughtered by a few cowardly hyenas; or discovered unable to move beneath a tree, and knocked on the head by some wandering hunter.

A TIMELY REPRIEVE.—The Liepsic journals of late date contain accounts of an extraordinary reprieve of a condemned criminal at the very moment of execution. A tailor, named Kunscher, had been sentenced to death for murder, and on the morning of the 16th was brought on the scaffold and attached to the plank of the guillotine. Suddenly a cry of "Stay! stay!" was heard, and a messenger appeared, struggling through the crowd, bearing a telegram from the King of Saxony, ordering a respite. The dispatch had been forwarded only three-quarters of an hour before from Berlin, where his Majesty was staying, and without the haste employed by the bearer would probably not have arrived in time The man had run from the telegraph office across the park to the prison, and being delayed by the crowds of persons assembled around, he raised the cry which was repeated from mouth to month until it reached the scaffold, when a pause was made to enable the messenger to reach the spot. The official who directed the proceedings then took the telegram from the man's hands, and read aloud: "Postpone the execution until further orders. More ample details by post. JOHN, KING."

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for and take none but LYON'S, bearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervation, listlessness, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of those same complaints they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedentary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spavin, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Strains, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westbrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky. and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off and turning gray, and promotes its growth upon premturely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.

E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

Lyon's EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere. at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no other.

DR. H. A. BENTON,

The ELECTRO-MAGNETIC PHYSICIAN, is now easily fixed in his new quarters, over Congress Hall, Bush street, adjoining the Russ House, and is prepared to treat patients in all the best modes of curing. The Electro-Medicated and Hot Air Baths will do wonders in many cases, in breaking up obstructions, and if properly attended afterwards, will insure success.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

FAUST CELLAR,
Beer and Wine Saloon,
Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets,
San Francisco.
A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.

FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,
SUCCESSOR TO
WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine
Wines, Liquors and Segars,
NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,
Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,
LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the Wiet Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
WINES AND LIQUORS.
NO. 16 THIRD STREET,
Between Market and Stevenson Streets. San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,
No. 635 Washington Street,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House,
FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS,
Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.
Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.
A. ASTREDO, - - - PROPRIETOR

TOWNE & BACON,
Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
536 In this City,
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

STERETT & CUBERY,
PRINTERS,
533 Clay street, San Francisco.
B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

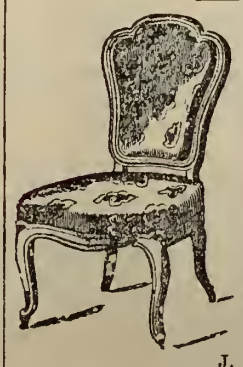
FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,
AND
Show Work of All Kinds,
GO TO THE
COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE
OF
FRANCIS & VALENTINE,
517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY
PRINTING?
IF YOU DO, GO TO
411 CLAY STREET,
BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by
M. D. CARR & CO.

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

GREAT REDUCTION!
FURNITURE
At Less than Gold Cost,
AT THE WAREROOMS OF
J. PEIRCE & CO.,
Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,
SAN FRANCISCO.



WE ARE NOW CLOSING out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth; and Main street, Stockton.

MRS. G. M. NICHOLS,
FASHIONABLE MILLINERY,
No. 661 Clay street, 2 doors below Kearney,
San Francisco.

RHEUMATISM CAN BE CURED
BY USING
Healy's Rheumatic Liniment,
Which is warranted to cure the most obstinate cases of CHRONIC OR INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.

It relaxes the muscles, removes the pain, and restores health and vigor to the system.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb 6, 1866.

MR. HEALY—Dear Sir: Having witnessed many cures effected by your Rheumatic Liniment, I take great pleasure in universally recommending it to those in search of a really good article.

Yours, &c., FRANK V. SCUDDER.

MR. FRANK HEALY: I suffered considerable rheumatic pains in both shoulders for a long time. I tried many remedies to get relief, but to no purpose. I was advised to try a bottle of "Healy's Rheumatic Liniment," which I did, and it has greatly relieved me. I am now using the second bottle, and am confident that in a few days I shall be well.

Yours, &c., R. PAGE,
316, Montgomery street.

San Francisco, Feb, 9, 1866.

SAN FRANCISCO. Feb. 13, 1866.

TO F. HEALY: I have heard much and seen practical proofs of your Liniment, and I endorse all you claim for it. L. GOETZ.
335, 337, Pine street.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 12, 1866.

Dear Sir: I have used the bottle of Liniment you sent me, and it has done me good. Please send me another. WM. HORR,
718, Battery street

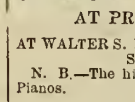
HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT is for sale by all Druggists on the Pacific coast.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Wholesale Agents, C. ANGE & BRIGHAM, and R. H. McDONALD & Co., SAN FRANCISCO.

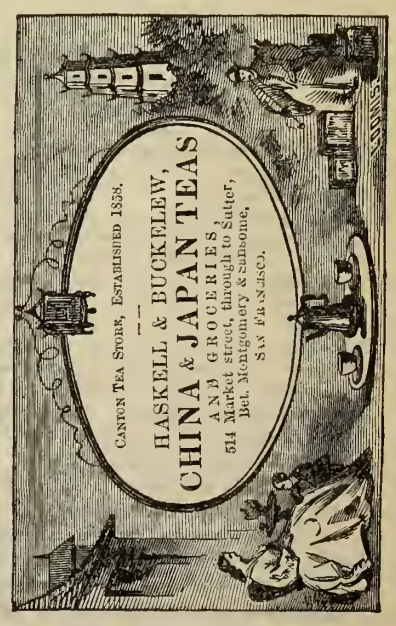
DR. HAYDEN,
Dentist,
653 Clay street, between Kearny and Montgomery, San Francisco.

PIANOS!



PIANOS!
AT
AT PRICES FROM $150 TO $600,
AT WALTER S. PIERCE'S PIANO ROOMS, 526 MARKET STREET, opposite Second.

N. B.—The highest cash price paid for Second-hand Pianos.



NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,
UNDERTAKERS,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's Porcelain refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

R. A. THOMPSON,
DEALER IN
Coal and Charcoal,
816 and 818 Mission st., near the corner of Fourth,
SAN FRANCISCO.

MY RIVAL.

My rival has great midnight eyes;
She makes them speak when she is still.
They laugh, they dance, they mock, they pray,
And with true hearts they falsely play.
Sweet luring eyes, be still, be still!
M eyes are only gray.

My rival has black lustrous hair;
She binds its ripples like a crown
Upon her forehead queenly fair,
And prisons hearts in meshes rare.
With willful ringlets straying down,
My hair only brown.

My rival has a dazzling grace,
And witching ways to win her will;
She meets the world with sweet bright face,
Yet only seems to work it ill;
But, ah! with such a dazzling grace I
While I am shy and still.

When the knight comes, the chevalier,
The one that's worshipped of us two,
He meets her jest with merrier jest,
Gives glove or flower at her behest.
Somewhat more cold than others do,
Then me comes straight unto.

He says my hair is soft and brown,
He says my eyes are honest gray,
And in his own sweet love leaps high.
I am his darling, only I,
Who some day he will hear away,
And pass my rival by.

L O V E.

Love? I will tell what it is to love:
It is to build with humon thoughts a shrine
Where hopes sits brooding like a beauteous dove:
While time seems yonng, and Life a thing divine.
All tastes, all pleasnres, all desires combine
To consecrate this sanctuary of bliss.
Above, the skies in groundless heauty shine—
Arouud, the streams their flowery margins kiss,
And if there is heaven on earth, that heaven is surely this!
Yes, this is love, the steadfast and the trne—
The immortal glory which can uever set!
The best, the brightest hoon that heart e'er knew,
Of all life's sweets, the sweetest yet!
Oh, who but can recall the eve when first they met,
To breathe in some green walk their first yonng vows;
While summer flowers with twilight dews were wet,
And winds sighed soft around the mountain's hrow,
And all was rapture then, which is hut memory now.

OLD ROMANCE.

Dost thou not love the golden, antique time,
When knights and heroes for a lady's love,
Would spear the dragon?
Or when Boccaccio's dames, now long ago,
Lay laughing on the grass, hearing and telling
Wild love adventures, witty, merry tales,
That made the heart leap high? And yet even they
Would sadden midst their flowers, when that same story
(Like a rose unfolded) was hetrayed, which showed
What love indeed was made of—when the world—
Chance—falsehood—danger tried his truth till death,
And Proved its hues nnaltered. —Proctor.

A GENTLEMAN, who lives in a qniet town near Milwaukie, was invited to bring his wife to the city and spend the holidays. He said he wonld be glad to do so, but his wife was expecting a new bonnet from New York, and if it did not come she wonld not show herself in fashionable society. On Monday, the Milwaukie gentleman received the following note: "My wife has got the bonnet! It come by express. This is an 'episode.' You onght to see it. It looks like a nigger-minstrel's breast pin; or an enormous jet finger-ring, cut so as to have the setting fit rouud the ears. Yon expect us."

JUDGE D—— and Mr. P—— were always squabbling over some legality or other. On one occasion the Judge announced his intention of holding court on Good Friday. P—— at once rose: "May it please your Honor, such a proceeding is wholly without a precedent since the days of Pontius Pilate!" The court was not held till Saturday, as a natural conseqnence.

ONE of the greatest evils in the world is that men praise more than practice virtue. The praise of honest industry is on every tongue, but the worker is often less respected than the drone.

Marriage changes the current of a man's feelings. It also changes his curreucy,

Important Notice
TO
TAX-PAYERS.

THE ATTENTION OF EVERY CITIZEN OF THE City and County of San Francisco is called to the following provisions of the Law in relation to the assessment of REAL ESTATE AND PERSONAL PROPERTY for State and City and County Taxes:

"Between the first Monday in February and the second Monday in March, EVERY PERSON, corporation, association, company or firm, owning, claiming, or having any interest in, or having the POSSESSION, CHARGE OR CONTROL of any real estate, or any PERSONAL PROPERTY, shall deliver to the City and County Assessor, at his office, a statement under oath, of all such real estate or personal property, and the CASH VALUE of such personal property." (Statues 1862, page 57.)

"All property, both real and personal, of every kind, nature, and description whatever, within this State, whether owned by individuals or corporations, and whether its owner be a RESIDENT OR NON RESIDENT of this State, is liable to taxation; and all persons, corporations, and associations doing business in this State, either as principals or partners, whether special or otherwise, and not residents of the State, shall be assessed and taxed on all sums invested in any manner in said business, in this State, the same as if they were residents of this State; and said taxes shall be collected from the property within this State of said persons, corporations, associations, or firms." (Statutes 1866, page 803.)

Printed copies of the form of statement, as prescribed by law, can be obtained at the Assessor's Office, City Hall, without charge.

WILLIAM R. WHEATON,
City and County Assessor.

1e9

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

With all the modern conveniences nttached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be bad on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel.

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and haggage to the Hotel, free of charge.

JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

MASONIC TEMPLE,
Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!
Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 yenrs (15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

A. J. PLATE,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
Guns, Rifles and Pistols.
ALSO,

COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS, Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, &c., &c.,

NO. 411 SANSOME STREET,
Between Commercial and Sacramento Sts., San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S
STEAM ENGINE WORKS
Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.
HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,
Portable Engines of all sizes,
Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP
of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

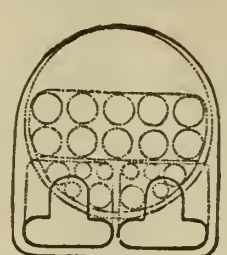
Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

FULTON FOUNDRY & IRON WORKS
HINCKLEY & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
STEAM ENGINES,
Quartz, Flour and Saw Mills,
Mining Machinery, and all kinds of Iron and Brass Castings,
45, 47 AND 49 FIRST STREET
Between Market and Mission—San Francisco.

BRODIE'S IMPROVED
QUARTZ-CRUSHER.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF
HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS
Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

PIONEER WORKS.
KITTREDGE & LEAVITT,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Fire Proof Doors and Shutters,
Bank Vaults, Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc,
Corner Fremont and Market street, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of Second Hand Fire Proof Doors and Shutters.

Also, manufacture to order the California Burglar and Fire-Proof Safe, with the Burglar's Lock invented by Mr. W. C. Bussey, of Jackson, Amador county, Cal. No Key required to open this State. It is done by Mathematical Calculation. Call and examine for yourselves, at our Works.

THIS LOCK PUT ON SAFES NOW IN USE

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOSEPH H. WEED,
V. KINGWELL.

SAN FRANCISCO
Foundry and Machine Works,
Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,
Manufacturers of
MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,
Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.
ALSO,
Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,
Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight, without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,
Bought, sold, or exchanged. Belt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.
DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

WILLIAM BRODIE,
California Foundry,
FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,
San Francisco.

LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS
Of every description, made to order.
Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyneken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cobb & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomas Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co., (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Lougbran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 206 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st.
G. G Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market.
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.
John Steumann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S E cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morsbead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis, and 124 Market

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 220 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gostave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard.
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOODAND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

THE WRONG ROOM.

The Rev. W. H. Milburne, in his "Ten Years of a Preacher's Life," relates the following anecdote of Rev. Peter Cartwright, who had been deputed to attend a conference at New York. A room had been reserved for him at the "Irving House;" but arriving late at night, the sleepy hotel clerk did not recognize his name in the somewhat illegible characters which the backwoodsman inscribed in the register-book, nor Cartwright himself in the farmer-like looking man before him. The great preacher was therefore lodged very high up, and immediately below the tiles:

The patronizing servant explained to the traveler the use of the various articles in the room, and said on leaving, (pointing to the bell rope,) "If you want anything, you can just pull that and somebody will come up."

The old gentleman waited until the servant had had time to descend, and then gave the rope a furious jerk. Up came the servant, bounding two or three steps at a time, and was amazed at the reply in answer to his "What will you have, sir?"

"How are you all coming on down below? It is such a ways from here to there that a body can have no notion even of the weather where you are."

The servant assured him that all was going on well, and was dismissed; but he had scarcely reached the office before another strenuous pull at the bell was given. The bell in the City Hall had struck a fire alarm, and the firemen, with their apparatus, were hurrying with confused noise, along the street.

"What's wanting, sir?" said the irritated servant.

"What's all this hulla-balloo?" asked the stranger.

"Only a fire, sir."

"A fire, sir!" shouted Cartwright. "Do you want us all to be burned up?" knowing well enough the fire was not on the premises.

The servant assured him of the distance of the conflagration, and that all was safe, and again decended. A third furious pull at the bell, and the almost breathless servant again made his appearance at the door.

"Bring me a hatchet," said the traveler, in a peremptory tone.

"A hatchet, sir?" said the astonished waiter.

"Yes, a hatchet."

"What for, sir?"

"That's none of your business; go and fetch me a hatchet."

The servant descended, and imformed the clerk that, in his private opinion, that old chap was crazy, and that he meant to commit suicide, or to kill some one in the house, for that he wanted a hatchet.

The clerk, with some trepidation, ventured to the room beneath the leads, and having presented himself, said, in his blandest tone, "I beg your pardon, sir, but what was it you wanted?"

"A hatchet," said the imperious stranger.

"A hatchet, really! but for what?" said the clerk.

"What for! Why look here, stranger. You see I am not accustomed to these big houses, and it's such a journey from this to where you are, that I thought I might get lost. Now it is my custom, when I am in a strange country, to blaze my way. We cut notches in the trees, and call that blazing, and then we can always find our way back again. So I thought if I had a hatchet, I'd just go out and blaze the corners from this to your place, and then I would be able to find my way back."

"I beg your pardon," said the mystified clerk, "but what's your name, sir? I could not read it very well on the book."

"My name," replied the other—"certainly; my debts are paid, and my will is made—my name is Peter Cartwright, at your service."

"Oh, Mr. Cartwright," responded the other "I beg you ten thousand pardons. We have a room for you, sir, on the second floor—the best room in the house. This way, sir, please."

"That's right," said the old gentleman; "that's all I wanted."

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE
" CHRYSOPOLIS.CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light draft steamers for Marysville, Colosa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.
When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

STEAMERS FOR FEBRUARY.

February 18th—GOLDEN CITY, Captain Jas. T. Watkins, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Harris.
February 28th—MONTANO, Capt. Jos. Sottou, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt. Furher.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their haggage on board before 10 o'clock

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on April 31, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

The steamship HERMANN, Capt. M. P Nolan, will be dispatched on Friday, March 1, for Yokohama, carrying passengers and freight, and the U. S. mails.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

PRESERVE YOUR SIGHT.

PERFECT SPECTACLES EXactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minute employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill-suited or common Spectacles.

PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent pre-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.

Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,
(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Manufactorer and Dealer in
SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,
From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.
Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

THEODORE KALLENBERG,
No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,
Machinist,
Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instroments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.
REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

Asphaltum Roofing.

PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of
Asphaltum Work,
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco.

TRUMP & BRADY,
No. 615 Market street,
In Basement of St. Lawrence House, opposite Montgomery,
STEAM AND GAS FITTING,
PLUMBING, Etc.

Gas Letters and Reflectors made to order. Ships, Stores, and Dwelling fitted up with Steam, Water and Gas Pipes, at the lowest rates.

Pumps Repaired, and all kinds of Jobbing done at the shortest notice.

All Work warranted, or no charges made.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street, - - - Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

MRS. G. M. NICHOLS,
FASHIONABLE MILLINERY,
No. 661 Clay street, 2 doors below Kearney,
San Francisco.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

Splendid Presents
TO SEND ABROAD.
STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS
.....OF.....
California Scenery!
A SERIES OF OVER
ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!
ILLUSTRATING

The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.

PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,
And Published by
LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
OPTICIANS,
317 & 319 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

Belduke & Co.,
(Formerly of Concord, New Hampshire.)

LONG IN THE EMPLOY OF THE CELEBRATED firm of L. DOWNING & SON, having arrived in this city for the purpose of the Manufacture of
CONCORD CARRIAGES,
And having on hand a large assortment of EASTERN MATERIAL, we are prepared to receive orders for the same. CARRIAGES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS, equal in style and Durability to those imported from the East. Special attention given to setting axles in Concord style. CARRIAGE SPRINGS MANUFACTURED TO ORDER.

All the work from our establishment warranted to give entire satisfaction. Also, we are prepared to furnish Concord Harness made to order at our establishment.

NO. 820 FOLSOM STREET,
Between Fourth and Fifth.

AGENTS WANTED TO CANVASS FOR THE only official Southern History of the War. THE LOST CAUSE, by E. A. Pollard, the popular Historian of the South, and editor of the Richmond Examiner during the war. Complete in one large royal octavo volume, with

24 FINE STEEL PORTRAITS,

giving a full and authentic account of the rise and fall of the late Southern Confederacy. Written under the encouragement of Generals R. E. Lee, Johnston, Beauregard and others. The work is being liberally patronized by leading men of all classes, eager to hear

"THE OTHER SIDE,"

and thus arrive at the truth of history, which it is impossible to do from the many histories written only from a Northern stand-point.

Agents and the public are cautioned against any other work purporting to be this one. To energetic men and women a rare chance is offered to make money. Don't fail to send for circulars of this great and important work. Adddress

F. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION.

INCORPORATED JANUARY 23d, 1867.

THE OBJECT OF SAID CORPORATION IS THE purchase of forty-three full Blocks and fifteen fractional Blocks of Land in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in what is known as the "University Mound Tract Survey," on file in the office of the City and County Recorder of said city and county, as follows:

FULL BLOCKS.

Numbers Twenty-one, Forty-four, Forty-five, Forty-seven, Sixty one, Sixty-two, Sixty three, Seventy-five, Seventy-six, Seventy-seven, Seventy-eight, Seventy nine, Eighty-five, Eighty-six, Eighty-seven, Eighty eight, Eighty-nine, Ninety, Ninety two, Ninety-three, Ninety-four, Ninety-five, Ninety-six, Ninety seven, One Hundred, One Hundred and One, One Hundred and Two, One Hundred and Four, One Hundred and Five, One Hundred and Six, One Hundred and Seven, One Hundred and Ten, One Hundred and Eleven, One Hundred and Twelve, One Hundred and Thirteen, One Hundred and Fourteen, One Hundred and Fifteen, One Hundred and Sixteen, One Hundred and Seventeen, One Hundred and Eighteen, One Hundred and Nineteen, One Hundred and Twenty-eight, and One Hundred and Twenty-nine.

FRACTIONAL BLOCKS.

Numbers Eight, Nine, Sixty, Sixty-four, Eighty-three, Eighty-four, Ninety-one, One Hundred and Three, One Hundred and Eight, One Hundred and Nine, One Hundred and Twenty-two, One Hundred and Twenty-three, One Hundred and Twenty-four, One Hundred and Twenty-five, One Hundred and Twenty-six; and the same being a portion of the Bernal Ranch—the improvements thereof—and the subdivision thereof into lots and parcels suitable for Homesteads, and the distribution of such lots or parcels among the shareholders.

For further information, READ THE PROSPECTUS containing Act of Incorporation, Articles of Association, etc. All persons desirous of securing lots in the UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION, are requested to apply at once at their

OFFICE, IN STEVENSON'S BUILDING, CORNER OF MONTGOMERY AND CALIFORNIA STS.

As shares are being rapidly taken, and the opportunity will soon be lost. Prospectus and maps can be obtained free of charge, at the office of the Association.

OFFICERS OF THE UNIVERSITY HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION.

E. THOMAS, D. D., - - - - - President.
LESTER L. ROBINSON, - - - - - Treasurer.
THOMAS B. LEWIS, - - - - - Secretary.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

E. Thomas, Lester L. Robinson,
Geo. B. Taylor, Thomas B. Lewis,
H. A. Gorley.

By order of the Board.

THOMAS B. LEWIS,
Secretary University Homestead Association.

REMOVAL!
Wightman & Hardie's
DRY GOODS AND CARPET WAREHOUSE
HAS REMOVED
To No. 220 Sansome Street,
TWO DOORS SOUTH OF CALIFORNIA.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter,
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
735 Market street,
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

GREAT WESTERN
Life Insurance Company.
OF NEW YORK.
STOCK and MUTUAL

The Security of the Stock Plan, with all the Advantages of the Mutual System.

POLICIES AND DIVIDENDS ARE NON-FORFEITABLE.

Thirty Days Grace for Payment of Premiums.

J. W. BRUMAGIN.
General Agent for California,
Office 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.

INCORPORATED.....1821.

Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000

Insurance effected against both

Fire and Marine Risks,

AT THE LOWEST RATES.

Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.

R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Capital Stock, - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchanise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pre'st.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. Rothschild, Secretary.

GREAT WESTERN
Life Insurance Company.
OF NEW YORK.

STOCK and MUTUAL

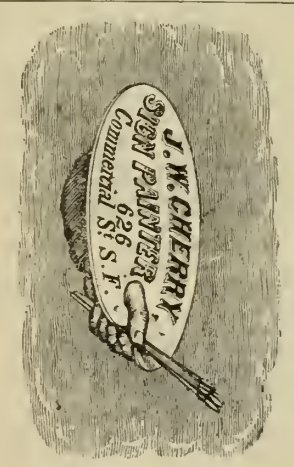
The Security of the Stock Plan, with all the Advantages of the Mutual System.

POLICIES AND DIVIDENDS ARE NON-FORFEITABLE.

Thirty Days Grace for Payment of Premiums.

J. W. BRUMAGIN.
General Agent for California,
Office 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.



SIGNS OF THE TIMES AT

FIRST PREMIUM

Billiard TABLE MANUFACTORY.

P. LISENFELD,
612 BATTERY STREET,
Between Jackson and Pacific, San Francisco,
Has constantly on hand a large assortment of the best BILLIARD TABLES, with all the modern improvements.
Also BILLIARD TRIMMINGS of every description.
All goods sold are warranted.

REMOVAL!

Wightman & Hardie's
DRY GOODS AND CARPET WARE HOUSE
HAS REMOVED
To No. 220 Sansome Street,
TWO DOORS SOUTH OF CALIFORNIA.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter,
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
735 Market street,
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

SAUL & McARRON,
Carriage Manufactory,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.
A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.

Larkins & Co.,

Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

Pollard & Carvill,

Dealers in and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

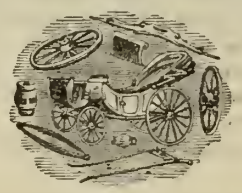
A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of

WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,

A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.
Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.
H. CASEBOLT.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.
Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

WILLIAM TRUMBULL,

Manufacturer of
Saddles, Harness and Collars,
No. 4b-west corner Davis and Commercial streets.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

A good assortment, made from the best Materials, in the highest style of Workmanship, constantly on hand.
Manufacturing and Repairing done promptly, on reasonable terms. Country Trade solicited.

DR. FONDA SAN FRANCISCO
EYE INFIRMARY,

PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUSIVELY for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.
P. W. FONDA, M. D.,
Surgeon in charge Infirmary,
223 Kearny street between Bush and Sutter.

VAN VLECK & KEITH,
Designers and Engravers
ON WOOD,
No. 611 Clay street, San Francisco.
WM. KEITH. D. VAN VLECK.

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

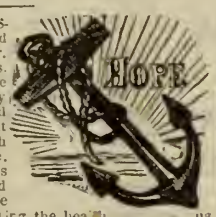
HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yielding to healing powers.
PRICE 50 CENTS.
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor. Sansome & Commercial streets.
Also Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicines, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE OF POTASS.
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would do well much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirits ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

CLEANSE THE BLOOD.



WITH CORRUPT, DISordered or vitiated Blood, you are sick all over. It may burst out in Pimples, or, Sores, or in some active disease, or it may merely keep you listless, depressed and good for nothing. But you cannot have good health while your blood is impure. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA purges out these impurities and stimulates the organs of life into vigorous action, restoring the healthy tone of disease. Hence it rapidly cures a variety of complaints which are caused by impurities of the blood, such as Scrofula, the Kings' Evil, Tumors, Ulcers, Sores, Eruptions, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose, or Erysipelas, Tetter, or Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Cancer or Cancerous Tumors, Sore Eyes, Female Diseases, such as Retention, Irregularity, Suppression, Whites, Sterility, also Syphilis or Venereal Diseases, Liver Complaints, and Heart Diseases. Try AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and see for yourself the surprising activity with which it cleanses the blood and cures these disorders.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound "Sarsaparilla," and intend to promptly sustain a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. We think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of diseases it is intended to cure. We can only assure the sick, that we offer them the best alterative which we know how to produce, and we have reason to believe it is by far the most effectual purifier of the blood yet discovered by any body.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is so universally known to surpass every other remedy for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease, that it is useless here to recount the evidence of its virtues. The world knows them.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
and all Dealers

WONDERS OF WONDERS!
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma.

A beautiful and accomplished young lady of one of the wealthiest families of Louisville has recently pined away to a mere shadow, without any perceptible cause. Her friends were sorely perplexed, to learn the cause, but all to no avail. Last week the mystery was solved. The girl was discovered to be a sleep-walker, getting up in her night clothes every night and visiting an arbor attached to her residence, where she spent, in dreamy silence, several hours, and would then return to the parental roof. Of course she would be unconscious next day of her walk and rigid airing of the night previous.

A WISCONSIN official who had arrested a couple of rascals, was riding with his prisoners when a prairie chicken made its appearance, and the officer drew his revolver and fired two or three shots at it. One of the prisoners suggested that he could do better, and the revolver was handed over to him. The prisoner, however, did not try his skill on the chicken, but presented the shooting-iron at the officer and "backed off," leaving the officer to cogitate on the "uncertainty of man," and to return home minus prisoners and a $20 revolver.

A large leopard, attached to a menagerie exhibiting in Cincinnati, escaped from his cage last week, and after devouring a couple of small dogs, attacked the elephant. That animal, however, declined to be eaten, and in a few moments the assailant found itself hurled against the bars of the lion's cage, bruising it considerably, but still not daunting it. In the meantime the keepers having armed themselves with iron bars, succeeded in capturing the ferocious animal and recaging it, so that its dream of liberty on New Year's Day, vanished.

A short time ago, a Boston physician was summoned to the door at a quarter past eleven o'clock by the violent ringing of the bell—with visions of a good fee, doubtless—and found there a little urchin, who plaintively asked if he would give him an old sled. The boy was advised to run home and make his calls at more seasonable hours. The boy replied that the most seasonable hour to apply for a sled was when it was snowing.

A young lawyer of St. Louis, who had given more attention to Bones and Banjo than Blackstone and Kent, applied for a situation in a minstrel troupe; and because he was rejected, sent a challenge for a duel to the principal manager. The cartel was handed to the police, and the ambitious aspirant made himself scarce. The last seen of him, he was getting down hill at a rapid rate, whistling - "Railroad Traveling's Getting Mighty Slow."

FROZEN TRUTH.—A soldier, about one hundred and fifty years ago, was frozen in Siberia. The last expression he used was, "It is ex--." He was froze as stiff as marble. In the summer of 1860, some French physicians found him, after having laid frozen for one hundred and fifty years. They gradually thawed him, and upon animation being restored, he concluded his sentence with "confidingly cold."

A countryman, not long since, on his first sight of a locomotive, declared that "he thought it was the devil on wheels." "Faith, an' ye're worse than myself," said an Irish bystander, "for the first time I saw the craythur, I tho't it was a shame boat hauling for wather."

THE effect of advertising in the Vicksburg Times is thus illustrated: "A lady advertised in the Times last week for a stray cow, and the cow came home next day, pawed down the cowpen fence, bellowed till the milkmaid came, and then kept off her own calf."

A New Bedford lady who recently wrote to a Boston publisher for a copy of "Gellert; or, Trust in God," received the sad reply: "There is no 'Trust in God' to be found in Boston."

A sweet woman's soul sits and looks out of a bright eye like a cat out of a sunny window.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

RUDOLPH STEINBACH, Plaintiff, vs. JOSEPH L REED, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, and the complaint filed in the said city and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JOSEPH L. REED, CAROLINE L. REED, CHRISTIAN L LIEN, PETER S McNIEL, SARAH J McNIEL, EDWARD STRODE, NEWELL WINANTS, JOHN C. FRY, JAMES RYAN, S. CLINTON HASTINGS, Administrator of the Estate of Austin E. Smith, deceased, WILLIAM SMITH, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to compel the defendants to set forth the nature of their several claims in and to the lands and premises described in the complaint, and that adverse claims of said defendants may be determined by a decree of this Court, that it be declared and adjudged that the defendants, or either of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said lands or premises, and that they be forever debarred from asserting any claim thereto adverse to plaintiff, and that he is the owner thereof in fee, and for such other and further relief as to equity shall seem meet.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 24th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-six. WM LOEWY, Clerk

[SEAL.] By W. R. SATTERLEE, Deputy Clerk.

Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled. 50 cts.

B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. d22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ELIZABETH BARRETT, Plaintiff, vs. CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and that the sum of $30,000, being the one-half of the common property of the parties, be adjudged to belong to and be delivered to this plaintiff; and that the care, custody and education of the children of the said parties, viz: Cornelius William and Arthur Joseph, be awarded to the plaintiff; and that pending this suit, the defendant may, by order of this Court, be restrained and enjoined from selling, or in any manner disposing of the common property referred to in the complaint—that is to say, $60,000; and that defendant be ordered to pay plaintiff $250 per month for the support of herself and children, and the further sum of $1,000 as attorneys' fees for the prosecution of this action, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 25th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[SEAL.] By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]

PIXLEY & SMITH, Attorneys for Plaintiff. d29 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, defendants. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovenamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudging and ascertaining the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defendant Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers, incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and be put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk,

By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j193m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

CECILE PEBELIE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELIE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelie, Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you, by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this County; or, if served out of this County but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff be permitted to resume her maiden name, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[L. S.] By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Depnty Clerk.

[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 60 cents, canceled.]

J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of FRANCOISE P. BETUEL, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Francois M. Betuel, the Executor of the last will and testament of Francoise P. Betuel deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the devisees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Francoise P. Betuel, deceased, appear before the said Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the devisees of the said Francoise P Betuel, deceased, according to law:

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before the said eleventh day March, A. D. 1867: in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 5th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
Of the City and County of San Francisco, }

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true, full and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 8th day of February A. D. 1867

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM LOEWY, Clerk.

19 5t By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

GEO. F. & WM. H. SHARP, Attorneys for Petitioner.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHN F. LOGAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Mary Banks and Catherine Rogan, claiming to be the nearest relatives and heirs, being the aunts of John F. Logan, deceased, setting forth that the administrator has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said John F. Logan, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the fifth day of March, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said John F. Logan, deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said fifth day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated January 30th, 1867. feb2-4w

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said Court, this first day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk

[Seal and stamp.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—In Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JAMES FITZPATRICK, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the estate of James Fitzpatrick, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratrix at the place of the transaction of her business, at the office of her attorney, Geo. B. Merrill, Esq., No. 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco. MARY FITZPATRICK,

Administratrix of Estate of James Fitzpatrick, deceased.

San Francisco, February 2d, 1867. 4w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF ELLEN O'CONNELL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of Ellen O'Connell, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his office, No 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco. WM. A. QUARLES, Administrator of the Estate of Ellen O'Connell, deceased.

San Francisco, February 9, 1867.

W. & C. BARTLETT, Attorneys for Administrator, 323 Montgomery street. f9 5t

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, made on 6th day of February A. D. 1867, in the matter of the Estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on THURSDAY, the 14th day of March, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the counting-room of J. C. Merrill & Co., Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title, interest and estate of said minors Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, of, in and to all the undivided two ninths of the lot of land situated in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the westerly side of Berry street, one hundred and thirty-seven and a half (137 1-2) feet northeasterly from the northeast corner of Berry and Third streets; thence running northeasterly along said westerly side of Berry street one hundred and thirty seven and a half (137 1 2) feet to a point; thence at a right angle northwesterly two hundred and forty (240) feet more or less to a point in the easterly line of King street; thence at a right angle southwesterly along said line of King street one hundred and thirty-seven and a half (137 1 2) feet; and thence at a right angle southeasterly two hundred and forty feet, more or less, to the point of beginning.

And offers or bids for said property, in writing will be received at said place, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county, from this date till Thursday the 14th day of March, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon, by the undersigned. J. C. MERRILL,

Guardian of the Estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, minors. 19

Dated February 8th, 1867.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOSEPH W. KERR, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Honora Kerr, the Administratrix of the Estate of Joseph W Kerr, deceased, setting forth that she has filed her final account of her administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, Anno Domini, 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, according to law:

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published once a week, for four successive weeks, before the said 11th day of March A. D., 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated, February 5th, 1867. 19 5t

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of said City and County, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order on file and of record in my office.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 8th day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,

[SEAL AND STAMP.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

HAIGHT & PIERSON, Attorneys for Petitioner.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDIcial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretofore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF WILLIAM SHANAHAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of William Shanahan, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his office, at the store of Maurice Dore & Co, No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California. Dated February 1, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator and the Administrator of the Estate of William Shanahan, deceased. 12 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE HAMILTON THOMPSON, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of GEORGE HAMILTON THOMPSON, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the U. S. Surveyor General's office, Pioneer Hall, Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, January 25th, 1867.

G. HOWARD THOMPSON,

Administrator of Estate of George Hamilton Thompson, deceased, j26 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF AUGUSTA SAAL.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of Augusta Saal, deceased, to the creditors and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at the office of his Attorney, R. W. Hent, Esq., northwest corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets, in the city and county of San Francisco. Dated February 9th, 1867.

H. O. GOUGH, Administrator of the Estate of Augusta Saal, deceased. f9 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

In the matter of the estate of MINA HOFFMAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Isaac D. Barnard, Executor of the last will and testament of Mina Hoffman, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the legatees of the will of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Mina Hoffman, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the 19th day of March, A. D. 1867, at two o'clock, P. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the legatees of the last will and testament of the said deceased, according to law:

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before the said Tuesday the 19th day of March, A. D. 1867, in the CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 11th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss.
OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, }

I Wm Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 14th day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Messrs. W. & C. BARTLETT, Attorneys for Petitioner.

February 16th, 1867. 1e16 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of GEORGE H. HOSSEFROSS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by R. H. Sinton and H. M. Whitmore, the Executors of the last will of George H. Hossefross, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate and also all the personal property of the estate of George H. Hossefross, deceased, to pay the debts due by the said deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on MONDAY, the eighteenth day of March A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court Room of said Probate Court at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Executors to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary; and also the personal property of deceased.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 12th, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK, } ss.
OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. }

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 14th day of February A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Messrs. Winans & Belknap Attys. for Petitioners.

fe15-3t

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE.—Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and State of California, made on the 12th day of February, A. D. 1867, in the matter of the estate of Thos. W. Sutherland, deceased, the undersigned, Administrator in charge of said estate, will sell at private sale for cash payable in United States gold or silver coin, on and subject to the confirmation of said Probate Court on or after the fifth day of March, A. D. 1867, in one parcel all the right, title, interest and estate of the said intestate at the time of his death; and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has by operation of law or otherwise acquired, other than and in addition to that of said intestate at the time of his death, in and to the following real property, lot, piece or parcel of land situate in said city and county of San Francisco and State of California, bounded and described as follows:

A certain unknown undivided interest of in and to that certain 50 vara lot situated lying and being in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and known on the official map of said city and county as 50-vara lot number 32.

Persons wishing to purchase said real estate will present their bids in writing to the undersigned at his store Nos. 219 and 221 Front street, in the city and county of San Francisco on or before the day set for the sale.

Dated February 13th, 1867.

ALEXANDER R. BALDWIN,

Administrator of the estate of Thomas W. Sutherland, deceased. fe16 3t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of John Couch, the Administrator of Sarah McLaughlin, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his annual and final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled;

It is ordered that all persons interested in the estate of the said Sarah McLaughlin, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said City and County, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order for distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Sarah McLaughlin deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County.

M. C. BLAKE Probate Judge.

Dated San Francisco, February 8th, 1867.

I. N. THORNE, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. fe9 5t

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T MAGUIRE, - - Sole Proprietor and Manager
CHAS. TIBBETTS, - - Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES, - - - - Stage Manager
W. STEVENSON, - - - - Treasurer

ENGAGEMENT OF THE WITCHING ELFIN STAR,
ALICE KINGSBURY!
—SUPPORTED BY—
Mrs. Sophie Edwin, Mrs. H. Jackson,
Mr. J. McCullough, Mr. H. Edwards.
And a Full Corps Dramatique!

THIS AFTERNOON, FEB. 23D,
KINGSBURY MATINEE!—
CHILD OF THE SAVANNAH!

THIS EVENING, FEB. 23D,
Miss Kingsbury will appear as Calanthe in
DAMON AND PYTHIAS.

MONDAY NIGHT,
THE LONG STRIKE!

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle, - -	$1 00	Orchestra, - -	$1 00
Parquette, - -	50	Upper Circle, -	25

No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS.

Art Gallery, Museum,

CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,

On Mission and Valencia streets.

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

"SHERMAN'S

March through Georgia."

ADMISSION, - - - TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

The Exhibition of this Painting will close on the 9th of March. SNOW & ROOS,
219 Montgomery street. (Russ Block.)

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre. Montgomery street,
Between California and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

UNION BUSINESS COLLEGE.

(MERCHANTS' INSURANCE BUILDING,)
403 California St.

THIS Institution is designed to prepare Boys and Men for business pursuits, and to impart a thorough commercial education. It is conducted upon thorough business principles. The student, upon entering the college, is furnished with a capital in cash and merchandise, rents a place of business, opens an account with the bank, insures his goods in the insurance office of the College, and enters upon the arena of business. He commences speculation, carrying out all the details of trade, buying and selling goods, depositing in and checking from the Bank, making and negotiating notes, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., recording the transactions and keeping the books in a regular and scientific manner. From this he advances to other capacities, until he finally takes his position in the Union Business College Bank, a regularly established institution, complete in all its appointments, and having a circulation of one million in college currency. This course saves from four to six weeks time in copying useless manuscripts There is no vacation, and students can enter upon any business day during the year. The public are invited to call and examine the various Departments. Sessions day and evening.

JAMES VINSONHALLER, President.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,
Shoulder Braces, etc.,
FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,
AT
GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S
NEW YORK BRANCH
Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,
No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,
(Opposite the Russ' House,)
J. H. A. FOLKERS. Sole Agent.

Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,
No. 224 Montgomery street,
Opposite the entrance of the Russ House,
San Francisco

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER
AMERICA.
WILL SAIL FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua,
From MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on TUESDAY - - - MARCH 5th, 1867
Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship
NICARAGUA.
(2500 tons) For NEW YORK.

The MOSES TAYLOR will sail on March 25th.
For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco

Removal!!

JOHN F. SNOW.

COLORING, CLEANING AND RESTORING OF FEATHERS, Kid Gloves, Silks, Woolens, Furs, etc., has removed to the new building of the "MECHANICS' INSTITUTE," opposite the old stand, 25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny.

☞'RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA' for sale as usual.

E. POWER,

Architectural and Ornamental

WOOD CARVER

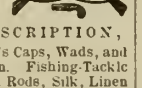
—AND—

COMPOSITION ORNAMENT MANUFACTURER, ETC.,

Robinson & Co.'s Mills,

30 and 32 California Street, San Francisco.

WILSON & EVANS,



No. 513 Clay street,
Importers and Dealers in
FIREARMS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION,
SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Pouches, Eley's Caps, Wads, and all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing-Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Linen and Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.

WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY

NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warranted to give satisfaction.
WILSON & EVANS.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Adam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Cogbill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blum & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

JOHN GORMAN,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

No. 619 Merchant street,

Above Montgomery,.....(South side.)

REAL ESTATE FOR SALE

....BY....
DAM & SUTHERLAND.

FINE IMPROVED BUSINESS

PROPERTIES ON

Pine street for	$60,000
Market street for	25,000
Market street for	30,000
Post street for	7,000
Pacific street for	7,000
Montgomery street for	37,000
California street for	21,000
Mission and Fifth streets	20,000

CHOICE HOMESTEAD PROPERTIES, BEAUTIFULLY improved, at the following prices:

One at	$25,000
One at	22,000
One at	21,000
One at	18,000
House and 50-vara lot centrally located	16,500
House and Corner 50-vara Lot and Stable	6,500
New Cottage, well located, gas and water	3,300
House and Lot, 40x137.6, on Harrison near Beal street	4,500
Two Houses and Lots on Silver, between Third and Fourth streets	3,200
House and Lot on Bush street, near Taylor	10,000

SEVEN FIFTY-VARA LOTS on Lafayette Avenue, near Mayor Coon's residence on Gough street.

Also, FURNISHED and UNFURNISHED HOUSES TO LET, from $90 to $35.

OAKLAND PROPERTIES FOR SALE.—SEVEN Houses and Lots very desirably located, from $2,000 to $10,000 each.

LAND BY THE ACRE—From ten to fifty acres within two miles of the Depot.

DAM & SUTHERLAND,
320 Montgomery Street.

NOTARY PUBLIC—

SPANISH NOTARY.

The undersigned having been commissioned by Gov. Low as Notary Public, vice Henry Dieschfell, deceased, has removed his office to 509 California street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co., where he will be pleased to see his former patrons, and receive a share of public patronage.

A. G. RANDALL.
Notary Public, Broker, Translator, etc.
No. 509 California Street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S

Private Medical Office,

617 MERCHANT STREET,
Near Commercial, San Francisco.

OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

CORNS!

DR. V. POPPER,

Surgeon Chiropedist,

No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.

Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

DEXTER STABLES,

Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.

W. G. JONES, - - - - - - Proprietor

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,

Importers of

Hardwood Lumber,

ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.

315 PINE STREET,
Near corner of Sansome, San Francisco.

NOTICE.

The Steamship
GOLDEN CITY
Will leave this port at 8 A. M., FEBRUARY 18th, and will reach Panama on 2d March, making an unusually quick trip, and will connect at Aspinwall with the French Trans-Atlantic Co.'s steamer for St. Nazaire.

D. J. OLIVER

101, 103 and 105 Front street, 110 Pine street.
ON THE
NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STREETS,
Where he offers for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

B. MACKAY,

ARCHITECT,
NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Corner of Bush,

SAN FRANCISCO.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 1?
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco.

VAN VLECK & KEITH,

Designers and Engravers

ON WOOD,
No. 611 Clay street, San Francisco.
WM. KEITH D. VAN VLECK.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco

SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHER T. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A SON, Defendant

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs of suit.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven

[L. S.] WM. LOEWY, Clerk
By JAS. E. ASHCUM, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] f23-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS THOMAS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Administrator of the Estate of Thomas Thomas, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of the said Thomas Thomas, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said City and County, on TUESDAY, the twenty-sixth day of MARCH, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Thomas Thomas deceased, according to law:

It is further Ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said twenty-sixth day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 21st, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK } ss
Of the City and County of San Francisco,

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 21st day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
[Seal and stamp.] By A. J. JEGUERS, Deputy Clerk.
J. F. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. 123 5t.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHN F. LOGAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Mary Banks and Catherine Rogan, claiming to be the nearest relatives and heirs, being the aunts of John F Logan, deceased, setting forth that the administrator has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said John F. Logan, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the fifth day of March, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said John F. Logan, deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said fifth day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated January 30th, 1867. feb2-4w

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said Court, this first day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk
[Seal and stamp.] By A. J. JEGUERS, Deputy Clerk.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JOHN THOMAS, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of John Thomas, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated February 14th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of John Thomas, deceased.
J. F. FINN, Atty for Administrator. fe16 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE C. PETERSEN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of George C Petersen, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated February 14th, 1867

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of George C. Peterson, deceased. fe16-5t

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 15
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 2, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:—Snowdrop and Rosebud, a California story, by May Wentworth; California Male Cookery and Housekeeping, by Prentice; "Blaying Mit der Tiger" by John Clerk; Americans Abroad; A Duty on Thought; A Notable Champion; "Lion's Mouth;" The Late Riot; The Demoralized Critic of the "Times;" Curing the Blind; Diabolical Ingratitude; A Counterblast against Tobacco; POETRY:—The Electric Telegraph, by Isabel A. Saxon; Rare-Ripe, By W. A. Kendall; Lines to James Linen, by R.C. Hopkins; In Memoriam, by Aurelio Luis Gallardo;—Literary Gleanings; Dramatic Matters; Paragraphs etc. SELECTED: Down in a Coal Mine; After the Ball; "Black Sheep;" Ocean Yacht Race, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

The Late Riot.

GENERAL INNOCENCE AND IGNORANCE OF THE ACCUSED.

HOW is it that so many parties have been arrested, and accused of an active participation in the late riot? Here is in substance their testimony. Read it:

T. Jones.—On the day of the riot, I saw a crowd of white men on Long Bridge. Afterward I saw two Chinamen running away. Didn't know there had been a riot until I read of it in the papers. Don't know what I was arrested for. Heard Chief Crowley tell the rioters to go home.

Sam Smith.—I was promenading Long Bridge with some friends the day when it is reported the disturbance took place. I and Pat Mahony were discussing the question whether suffrage should be based on intelligence, and became separated from the rest of our friends About an hour afterward I saw a house on fire; heard some one say there had been a riot. Saw a Chinaman crossing the bridge with a divine and contented expression of countenance What am I arrested for?

John Jones.—On the day of the riot I saw a crowd of men crossing Long Bridge; they bore with them a large American Flag. I am a Union man and believe in rallying around the flag. Was at work on a sewer at the time, but imagining the country to be in danger, threw down my shovel and followed the flag. After this I saw a Chinaman running away and some rice scattered about. I called to the Chinaman to come back; he would not come back, so I ran after him to bring him back. I do not now recollect what I wanted to bring him back for. Heard some women say afterward that there had been a riot. Crowley was there.

Billy Burke.—On the morning of the 12th, I was at work at Meiggs' Wharf. Saw five or six hundred men crossing Long Bridge, and started after them to see what they were going to do. Saw a house on fire, and one man trying to put it out. Turned in to help him, and while throwing bricks at the fire in order to extinguish it, was arrested by a policeman. Saw next day that there had been a riot, in the papers. Thought this was a free country. Heard the inspiriting address of Chief Crowley.

Stupid H. Brown.—I was arrested for participation in a riot on Long Bridge; never was on Long Bridge but once in my life; don't know where it is; don't want to know. Have nothing against Chinamen; never molested one in my life; never saw one; don't know where they come from or go to. Never was at a riot in my life; never want to be; don't know what a riot is; don't want to know. Didn't see anybody at the riot I knew or wanted to know. Don't know what I am arrested for; don't want to know. Haven't set down to eat a meal at a table for three months. Have no trade or profession. Studied law once for three weeks. Don't know whether I have truly sworn or not; don't want to know. Didn't know that it was Crowley who told the crowd to go home; didn't want to know.

Liberal Merchants.

We learn from a recent number of the Bulletin that the shipping merchants of this city have resolved not to charge the farmers the usual commissions on their grain, so long as the present low prices rule. This liberality is commendable. It ought to be encouraged. It ought, indeed, to be imitated. We suggest that during the prevailing hard times the grocers, butchers and provision dealers pretermit their profits on goods sold to consumers in this city, who are quite as badly off, in most cases, as farmers in the interior. We should be glad to have the opportunity of giving them a commendatory notice for so doing.

That Flying Machine.

The day after the postponement of the sailing of the "Avitor" from the 21st to the 28th was announced, a certain "bloody blarsted Henglishman," who devoutly believes that the "bloody blarsted haitch (h) ought to be kicked hout hof the halphahet," met the illustrious projector of aerial navigation on Montgomery street, and thus accosted him: "Say now, old chap, isn't this a cutting things rather fat? Isn't it rather crowding the mourners? Why in 'eaven's name can't you ome out plain, and let us know whether we're to 'avit-or not?"

The Demoralized Critic of the "Times."

San Francisco amusements are not all of them of a commendable nature; but we object to our really respectable city being made out worse than it really is. There was a time when shooting and cutting matches were popularly supposed in the Eastern States and Europe, to be reckoned among the amusements of San Francisco, when bull-fighting was a Sunday amusement; but we have indifferently reformed that. Under these circumstances, we were startled—not to say shocked—on taking up the Times, a "first-class morning journal" (vide prospectus) published in this city, to observe a most reprehensible act—one which we are sure must be reprobated by the respectable portion of the community, even if laughed at or winked at by the readers of the Times—classed under the head of "Amusements." The first paragraph in this department, is a notice of the performance at the Metropolitan Theatre, then follows the paragraph to which we raise an objection as unfit to be classed as an amusement; and after it comes a notice of the Anatomical Museum. We republish this paragraph, and ask the respectable and law-observing portion of the community if they consider it worthy of a place under the head of "Amusements:"

STEALING A DRESS.—Michael Larkin was arrested last night by officer Gillespie, on suspicion of having stolen a woman's gown which was found in his possession, and which he is supposed to have taken from a clothes line somewhere. It is what is called a delaine (we believe) the pattern being a small check in shaded blue and white. Michael may call that larkin, but if he intends to fight it out on that line he will certainly require address.

Admitting the fact that the Metropolitan Theatre and the Anatomical Museum are the only two places of amusement advertised in the columns of the Times, in extenuation of this offense, we still hold that to term stealing an amusement is unjustifiable. We are quite prepared for the quibble by which the demoralized dramatic and anatomical critic of the Times will seek to justify himself. He will say, "I observe in this paragraph 'Michael may call this Larkin,' and isn't 'larkin' amusement? This miserable subterfuge should not shield him from the scorn and reprehension of an outraged community. Is it to be trumpeted forth to the world that stealing dresses is a recognized and favorite amusement in San Francisco? Because a critic has, in consequence of the Metropolitan Theatre being the only one which advertises in the paper on which he holds a position, utterly lost his sense of the distinction between right and wrong, between meum et tuum, is this misguided man, we say, because he observes the audience nightly applaud and laugh at the clown in the pantomime when he steals a dress or other, to hold that Michael Larkin, when he steals a dress, also administers to the amusement of the public? We have never considered pantomimes good in their effect on the mind.

We cannot but rejoice that the pantomime season has closed, when we observe the obliquity in the moral vision of the critic of the Times, and reflect that we may, with good grounds, affirm that this obliquity of the moral vision has been superinduced mainly by too much pantomime. Pope makes a sensible remark about vice being a monster of such hideous mein, that to be hated, needs but to be seen; and continues that in course of time becoming familiar with its face, we cease to notice how mean it is—and first endure, then pity, then embrace. This is doubtless the experience of the unhappily depraved critic of the Times. (N. B.—one of the best fellows in the city in his private capacity.) When he first witnessed the shameless thefts committed by the pantomime clown at the Metropolitan, we have no doubt he shuddered and repeated the 8th commandment softly. Soon becoming familiarized with theft, he laughed, then applauded, and finally brought himself to look upon stealing as "larkin" or amusement. Is this poor young man in his present state of mind—brought about by his becoming connected with the Times—competent to sit on a jury in a case of grand larceny? No. He would term larceny a spree, burglary a "jolly lark," and in course of time, might come to consider murder a diversion. The lost and hardened Fitz-Smythe has long been in the habit of chuckling delightedly over robberies and murders as exquisite jokes, and defiling the graves of his fellow creatures with loathsome puns; but he—even be—never published an account of a robbery between a notice of the Metropolitan Theatre and a puff of the Anatomical Museum.

Telegraphic News.

The news received by telegraph during the week has been most important. Governor Brownlow made a speech in which he declared that "he would rather receive the votes of black loyalists than of white traitors." We fancy we have heard of his making that remark before, but still it is important. President Johnson will certainly be impeached; a late telegraphic dispatch assures us of this fact. A still later dispatch proves conclusively that President Johnson will not be impeached, and one later still, informs us that it is very likely that he will be impeached. Senator Saulsbury got drunk and appeared in the Senate Chamber with a cigar in his mouth, but put it out when ordered to do so by Vice President Foster. Daniel Devlin, the "City Chamberlain" of New York, is dead. Wheat was quiet in England and so were the Fenians. The Princess of Wales has been delivered of a girl, and the English Chancellor of the Exchequer has been delivered of a budget. We await with intense anxiety the arrival of the next dispatch respecting the impeachment of President Johnson. Whether it be right or wrong to impeach the President, the veracity of dispatches received by telegraph is unimpeachable.

Diabolical Ingratitude.

The public of this city have been deeply shocked by a case of terrible ingratitude, which almost makes one lose all faith in human nature and subscribe to the doctrine of utter depravity. The harrowing details are thus set forth in the Alta of Saturday:

"STEALING FROM HIS EMPLOYER.—Charles Smith, former employé of Dr. Isaac Rowell, was arrested last night by detectives Ellis and Cannon, on the charge of robbing his employer of a lot of instruments of considerable value. It is alleged that he was allowed to sweep in the office as a particular favor, and took the opportunity thus afforded to effect the robbery."

If it had been anyone else that had been robbed, the public would not have been so terribly shocked. But Dr. Isaac Rowell, the humane, the kind, the modest, Dr. Isaac Rowell! Oh 'twas foul! Dr. Isaac Rowell, who has treated more sick men gratuitously (the week before election) than any other man in the city, who professed his willingness to prescribe for political enemies, and even declared that to "prescribe for Copperheads" would give him extreme delight! Oh, 'tis sad to think of the manner in which Charles Smith rewarded him for his kindness! Dr. Isaac Rowell, knowing that "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do," took pity on the unoccupied Charles Smith, and through the generosity of the noble-minded physician, this Smith "was allowed to sweep in the office as a particular favor." It is alleged that Smith thought that while he was about it he might as well make a clean sweep, and accordingly, wearying of the healthful exercise provided for him "as a particular favor," swept off a lot of instruments. We trust that this will serve as a warning to Dr. Rowell not again to allow any one to sweep in his office "as a particular favor."

Curing the Blind.

John W. Farmer has brought suit in the Fifteenth District Court against Dr. J. P. Bryant to recover $30,000 damages for mal-practice on his part, by which he, the plaintiff, lost his eyesight. Mr. Farmer states that he was in August last, suffering from disease of the eyes, and was for two months nearly blind. He placed himself under the treatment of a physician and recovered his sight; though his eyes still remained weak. He about this time heard of Dr. Bryant, who was reported to cure all diseases by "laying on of hands." He says that Dr. Bryant, on his stating his case to him, promised to cure his diseased eyes in twenty days. In a week after he placed himself under Dr. Bryant's care he became totally blind, and has been so ever since. Mr. Farmer states that Dr. Bryant explains this circumstance by saying that he had rubbed into the eyes a quantity of blue-stone, with which they had been covered by the first physician. Farmer believes that Dr. Bryant tried to throw dust in his eyes by laying on of hands, and thus prevent him from finding out his "tricks and his manners." The plaintiff also complains, that Dr. Bryant ordered him to have four teeth extracted, the same being sound and healthy and that said teeth were accordingly extracted. This part of Dr Bryant's treatment for the cure of blindness is incomprehensible. Surely Mr. Farmer could not have had four eye-teeth which injured his vision. If Dr. Bryant is really guilty of, by his mal-practice, robbing Mr. Farmer of two valuable though somewhat damaged, eyes and four sound teeth, we think that the jury, remembering what was said by them of old time: "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," should condemn Dr. Bryant to lose two eyes and four teeth.

A Counterblast Against Tobacco.

Dr. Isaac Rowell, who, it appears, would attempt to speak on any subject, get into any scrape, or go through any performance for the purpose of bringing himself before the public, spoke in abuse of tobacco at Dashaway Hall on Sunday last. He classed the use of the sweet nicotian weed with rum-drinking as a deadly social evil, and to prove that a man who smoked a mild Havanna cigar was outraging his nature and perilling his life, he stated that there were "only two animals beside man that would eat the noxious weed: the Rocky Mountain goat and the tobacco worm." We were not aware that man was in the habit of "eating" tobacco. Monkeys will chew tobacco whenever they can get hold of it. Because Dr. Isaac Rowell does not happen to like ice-cream he will scarcely be able to succeed in convincing the rest of the world that it is deadly poison because hogs, toads, and other animals of uncultivated taste will not eat it. Dr. Rowell told the old, old story of how a single drop of the essential oil of tobacco would kill a dog, and indulged in many other stale platitudes, which form the staple of anti-tobacco fulminations. After talking much against the evil effects of tobacco, he begged "the Dashaways, aided by the ladies, to put their faces against it." They can do so if they like, but if they get smoke puffed in their faces by those who enjoy the weed, they can turn their faces away and allow their neighbors to enjoy themselves in the manner which seems best to them.

Cause of Quarrel.

A Southern paper tell of a freedman who "quarreled with his wife about a month ago." That is the strangest thing to quarrel about we remember ever to have heard of!

Very bad Con.

Of what character in Herman Melville's "Typee" does the people's rejection of Mr. Fay's claims to the Governorship remind you? Fay, away!

[For the Californian.]

SNOWDROP AND ROSEBUD.

A CALIFORNIA STORY.

BY MAY WENTWORTH.

YEARS ago, before the gold-seekers came to California, there lived at the Mission of San Gabriel, a Spaniard, whose beautiful vineyard was admired by all the country.

In early life he had been a great traveler, and while in Germany he met a fair golden-haired maiden, whom he loved and married. After a few years he immigrated to America and settled at the Mission of San Gabriel—near the Spanish town of Los Angeles. There he was greatly prospered ; his cattle increased to great herds, covering the green hill-sides, and his vineyard was the pride of his heart. He built a pleasant house, and surrounded it by a garden filled with all kinds of fruit. In that delicious climate, fruits of the tropic and temperate zones grow together ; while the white flowers of the North and their crimson-hued sisters of the South blossom side by side.

There seemed nothing wanting to make his happiness complete but children. The house was too silent ; he wished for the silvery laughter of childish voices ; he longed to press little ones to his heart, and call them his own.

At last God gave him two little girls ; but the fair golden-haired mother lived only to bless them, and was then buried by the clear " Lake of the Tules." At first he was inconsolable, and for months refused to see his little ones ; but one day, while he slept, the old Indian nurse took them into his room and laid them on the bed by his side.

Little Snowdrop nestled in his bosom, but Rosebud ran her finger into his beard and pulled it so hard that she woke him. There she was, when he opened his eyes, crowing with delight —her little rosy lips close to his, and the fair Snowdrop in his bosom. Then all the father's love, which had only slept, awoke, and he pressed the little ones to his heart, weeping : but especially he loved the beautiful Snowdrop, she was so like her mother. After this, although he still mourned greatly for his wife, he loved these little ones very dearly ; and as years passed by, became happy in the absorbing devotion to them, which filled his whole heart.

He watched over them with the most jealous care. Even in childhood, he would not allow them to play with other children; and as they grew older, his fear was awakened lest some of the young men of Los Angeles should see and fall in love with them. For his daughters to form a misalliance, he was quite sure would break his heart.

As he was obliged to go often from home on business, he employed an old Indian woman as duenna, and charged her never to allow the two girls out of her sight for a moment.

Rosebud was a Spanish girl, with purple-tinged hair, soft black eyes, and clear olive complexion. Through the satin skin warm blood flushed her cheeks, and her lips were more tempting than ripe cherries ; but Snowdrop was a rare German maiden in complexion, clear and fair as the noonday. Her eyes were like violets. Her hair in the sunshine was like fine spun gold, and so long that it reached to her feet, and hung like a mantle of glory about her.

It was no wonder the old man guarded his daughters so carefully ; for though so different, they were equally beautiful, and all the young men of good family were anxious to pay court to them.

Day by day they sat upon the piazza of the inner court, reading the fascinating romances of old Spain, which was to them the dreamland of delight. They longed very much to go out and see something of life among the rich Spanish families about San Gabriel and Los Angeles, but their father would not allow it ; and the old dueuna was always near them ; even when they walked through the vineyard or the orange orchard, she followed them.

One day Rosebud called Snowdrop into the garden, and sitting under a large almond tree, she said : " Look over this book of prints with me, while we talk softly, for the duenna must not hear everything."

Snowdrop rested her golden hair upon her sister's arm, and turning over the leaves of the book they talked together.

" Sister dear," said Rosebud, " we lead a very dull life here. All young girls are gay and happy. What's the use of being beautiful, with no one to see us but servants and old women ?" A look of conscious beauty gathered around her ponting lips, as she ran her dainty fingers through the silken meshes of her sister's golden tresses.

" Our dear papa loves us," said Snowdrop, " but I do wish to be loved by others," she added—her violet eyes softening, and a faint flush spreading over her fair cheek and neck.

" And I to be admired ! but how can we be either ?" replied Rosebud, " shut up here, with an old duenna to watch everything we do ? God made us beautiful, and I'm sure he intended us to be seen. And for my part, I am determined to go to the Consul's grand ball, if I have to run away !" and her pretty dark eyes filled with tears.

" Oh ! sister Rosebud, think of dear papa !" said Snowdrop. " He did not tell us not to go out of the garden alone ; he only told the duenna to watch us. If we could only manage her," said Rosebud, thoughtfully.

" I'm afraid 'twould not be right," replied Snowdrop, " but I want to go very much. We will make an altar-cloth and embroider it with gold, as an offering to the Blessed Virgin. Perhaps she will pity our loneliness and help us."

So they sat down and wrought an altar-cloth of purple and gold, and spread it upon the altar before the picture of the Blessed Mother, in their own chamber ; putting vases of beautiful flowers upon it. When they had finished they were quite happy, and sat down with their guitars and sang very sweetly together till their father came home.

The next morning, an old Mexican woman with baskets of trinkets for sale, knocked at the garden gate.

When she was admitted, she spread out her finery before the senoritas. The duenna hastened to the piazza where they were sitting—for no one was more fond of looking over the peddler's basket than she, and always found something she could not do without among its tempting stores—this time it was a gay-colored shawl, and she ran away for her purse.

As soon as she was out of sight, the old woman whispered : " Pretty Senoritas, I have charms to sell. This will make you admired and this loved," she said, holding up two curious little bags—one tied with long pink ribbon, the other with blue—" and this will make you sleep. It contains a powder. You must drop one grain into a glass of water. It is perfectly tasteless, but it brings on a sleep so profound, that until the effect passes away, nothing could awaken you from pleasant dreams."

The young girls bought the charms. Snowdrop took the one tied with blue ribbon, and placing it in her bosom, whispered, " I wish to be loved."

" I to be admired," said Rosebud, taking the other ; but the charm for sleep she concealed in her pocket, just as the old duenna returned, eager for her purchases.

" I have pretty slippers for little dancing feet," said the old woman, holding up two pair of the daintiest white satin slippers you could imagine. " The senoritas have no use for them," exclaimed the duenna, frowning ; but the young girls found they fitted so nicely and looked so pretty that they bought them. " Papa is rich enough to give us any thing we want, and we fancy these," said Rosebud. They bought strings of beads, ribbons and combs for their hair, until the old duenna was nearly frantic. What they could want of all these, shut up as they were, she could not tell.

Then Rosebud said : " We will have some new dresses ;" so they bought fine white muslin and lace. Snowdrop bought a bright-colored handkerchief which she gave the duenna, who was so much pleased that she promised to help them make their dresses.

As soon as the old woman went away, they all sat upon the piazza shaded with vines, and commenced cutting and stitching upon the delicate fabric so busily, that by evening the skirts of their dresses were quite finished. The next morning they were early at work again.

" Why do you hurry so much," said the duenna, who never liked to work very long at a time.

" To have all the bother over sooner, dear duenna," answered Snowdrop, smiling so sweetly that the duenna took her needle again quite pleasantly

Snowdrop's dress was trimmed with blue ribbon, Rosebud's with crimson and gold. The young girls wrought upon them all their pretty fancies, till when they were finished the duenna thought them beautiful enough for a queen.

At evening the work was all done ; and the duenna, quite fatigued with her unaccustomed task, sat dozing in her armchair.

Suddenly she roused herself, exclaiming : " How warm it is ! I am very thirsty."

Rosebud jumped up quickly, saying : " I will bring you fresh water ;" so she ran down to the spring at the foot of the garden, and there she met the faithful old Michael—who had been in the family for years before she was born, and loved the young senoritas as though they were his own children.

Rosebud caught him by the arm and whispered : " Have the horses at the back garden gate to-night at nine o'clock, you dear old Michael, for you shall take us to the Consul's ball."

" But the Señor ?" said the old servant in astonishment.

" Never mind the Señor, you dear, careful man."

" But the duenna ?" he continued.

" Never mind ! never mind ! I tell you I will go ! So be sure you are ready in time," said Rosebud, laughing and shaking her finger as she ran away.

Poor old Michael was in a great dilemma. He loved the pretty senoritas and wanted to help them ; but he feared the Señor.

" It may cost me my place ; and in this family I have lived, and here I would die : but my pretty children are so lonely, 'tis too bad to shut them up—and old Michael won't fail them.''

Thus his fond love for the fair girls he had carried in his arms in their helpless infancy, conquered his discussion ; and he went to the stable to groom the horses.

Rosebud brought the water—clear, cool and sparkling—to the old duenna, and she drank it eagerly in her thirst, little dreaming of the sleep-charm the gay young senorita had dropped into the cup.

Almost instantly she became very drowsy, and closing her eyes, she fell asleep in her chair. In a short time her heavy breathing told how surely the charm had taken effect.

" Now for the ball !" said Rosebud. So the young girls dressed themselves quickly, but with great care—looping their sleeves with rare flowers from the garden, and tying their ribbons very tastefully.

" I think we shall do," said Rosebud, looking at the beautiful girl reflected from her mirror ; then at the softer beauty of her sister.

Snowdrop answered by a kiss, and they went out softly, and down the garden path to the gate where the faithful Michael waited for them. An hour's ride brought them to the brilliantly-lighted mansion of the Consul, and all the young men were delighted at the arrival of the fair sisters.

No one was so much courted and admired among all the fair senoritas at the ball that night, as Snowdrop and Rosebud ; and no one of all present was more happy than old Michael, who was peeping from behind the hall-door, enjoying the triumph of his darlings. At last he became uneasy ; and approaching them with a respectful bow, told them it was time to go home.

Taking special leave of their host and hostess, bowing gracefully to the guests, they started for home—leaving admirers and many lovers behind them.

When they entered their chamber, they found the duenna still sleeping soundly. They undressed themselves noiselessly, putting away all their clothes but their slippers, which they forgot.

In the morning, when the sun arose, the duenna awoke, and was much surprised to find herself sitting in a chair instead of being in bed. She had but a confused recollection of things, and began to think she must have taken a little more wine than she intended at dinner the day before. She thought she remembered Rosebud giving her a glass of water when she was was very thirsty, but she was not sure that it might not have been wine. She looked around, but could discover nothing to help her. The two girls were sleeping soundly, and upon the face of Rosebud there was a smile. She was dreaming of the ball—again surrounded by a crowd of admirers.

Snowdrop dreamed of their dear papa ; he was angry with them for their disobedience, and her long eyelids were wet with tears.

" How different they are in their ways even in sleep," said the duenna.

She turned away, and as her eye fell upon the forgotten slippers, her searching glance detected that they had been worn.

" What does this mean ? So much worn, and bought yesterday ! 'Tis very strange," mused she ; and put them in her pocket. She woke the young girls, but they fell asleep again. They were so unused to dancing late at night, that they were very tired ; and when the bell rang for breakfast, they did not appear.

" Where are my dear daughters ?" said the father, with a clouded face.

She could only tell him that they were still asleep, and seemed very tired.

" So are my horses," replied he, angrily ; " but I will see about this."

The duenna was afraid to show him the shoes, lest he should blame her ; but in her confusion, she drew her handkerchief from her pocket, and one of them dropped out upon the floor.

" What is this ?" said the Señor, sternly; and she was obliged to tell him all she knew.

For some time the troubled father walked the floor with great agitation without speaking, while the duenna stood trembling before him. Then turning to her quickly, he said :

' Call my daughters," and he rang the bell for Michael. All three came into the room with fearful hearts ; but Snowdrop's face was covered with her golden hair, and the tears were shining through it.

Turning to Michael, he said sternly, with a black frown covering his whole face :

" Stand here and tell me how it is, that this morning I find my horses reeking with foam ?"

The old man only answered : " I alone am to blame, Señor. Pardon your old servant, who loves you and yours !" and he clasped his hands and looked imploringly at the dark, angry face that frowned upon him.

Then Snowdrop could bear it no longer, so she ran to her father—throwing her white arms around his neck, and resting her golden-crowned head upon his bosom—and said :

" Dear papa, I will tell you all ! Only don't blame dear, good old Michael."

Then she told him of all their loneliness and eager longings for companions of their own age ; about the altar-cloth and all, without reserving one thing. "And now we are sorry ; it was wrong ; but dear papa will forgive !" and she raised he pretty face, all shining with tears, and begged him to kiss her.

How like her mother she was! and the father thought of the sunny days of his youth, when he had wandered on the banks of the Rhine with the fair German maiden, and wondered how he could forget that the young and ardent hearts of his children must be like the heart of his youth.

He kissed the innocent face upturned to his, and forgave his children, saying: "I, too, have been to blame; and in future I will go with you to all places, my darlings, where it is proper and right for you to go."

Snowdrop and Rosebud were delighted, and willingly promised never again to deceive "dear papa;" and from that day there was mutual confidence and love between the young girls and their father.

After a time, when two brave and true-hearted sons of Maine sought of the father the hands of the fair senoritas in marriage, he answered: "Let the hearts of my dear children decide for you. My only wish is to see them happy."

There was a great feast made at their marriage, and the old Spanish house, so long wrapped in seclusion, resounded with joyous music and the merry laughter of light hearts. Again old Michael stood behind the door and rejoiced to see his darlings loved, admired and happy.

WHAT THE SATURDAY REVIEW SAYS ABOUT THE OCEAN YACHT RACE.

PEOPLE are undeniably pleased at the recent performance of the American yachts. There is something about it which disposes the British public to pat their owners on the back, or to give them three cheers, or bestow upon them some other conventional token of approval. It may be difficult to determine exactly what it is about the feat which suits our fancy with such nicety. To hit the public between wind and water requires a curious felicity which is given to few events.

There may have been rope-dancers as good, or nearly as good, as Blondin; but the lucky thought of walking across Niagara occurred only to the man of genius. There have been many shipwrecks marked by great heroism and suffering, but, for some unassignable reason, a peculiar pre-eminence belongs to the wreck of the Kent East Indiaman. The fight of Sayers and Heenan, the charge of the six hundred at Balaclava, Captain Barclay's feat of walking a thousand miles in a thousand hours, the fight of the Shannon and Chesapeake, the discovery of the source of the Nile, and other events which stand out in the public memory with a pre-eminence out of proportion to their historical importance. We need not investigate the principle of art involved in this, further than to remark that between the work of genius and the merest commonplace the difference often lies in the last shade of finish. At all events, the yacht race across the Atlantic at Christmas certainly deserves to be reckoned amongst the genuine successes of this kind.

There is a simplicity and neatness about the design which can hardly be surpassed, at least until some heroes of still more daring have a yacht race round the world. Till then, we look upon Mr. Bennett as having won a right to become a proverb for the highest pitch of yachting excellence; and to be quoted amongst yachtsmen as Columbus is quoted amongst navigators, or Newton amongst mathematicians, or Napoleon amongst soldiers. May the correspondents of sporting newspapers continue for years to show insatible curiosity as to Mr. Bennett's name, weight, age, and parentage, and as to the tonnage and rig of the Henrietta; and many American newspapers glory for an equal length of time in the example which they have set to their respectable relatives. We shall see with pleasure all appropriate honors bestowed upon gentlemen who have done a very spirited action, and given us another reason for respecting the pluck and energy of their country.

Another question is, of course, raised by the race, and still more by the speeches to which the race gave occasion. We may ask whether "down the long vista of years to come, England and America will continue to march hand in hand;" whether under these agreeable circumstances they will "perform the great mission of the Anglo-Saxon race, the civilization and emancipation of the world"—Bunker's Hill, New Orleans, and the Alabama difficulties being forgotten in consideration of the fact that three American yachts have sailed across the Atlantic, and their owners been hospitably entertained at Cowes. These anticipations were, and very properly, highly colored to suit the temper of the audience.

It is only proper to swear eternal friendship, to prove that the two peoples are identical, and intensely fond of each other, and to show that any little disputes between them are merely lovers' quarrels; not because anybody believes it, but because it is the easiest way to raise the social temperature. From this point of view, neither Sir John Simeon nor any of the other speakers went too far in their protestations. It is very desirable that England and America should be good friends. By swearing vehemently that they are good friends, a certain number of people are induced to believe it for a short time; and that is the first step towards making the belief permanent instead of intermittent, which would be a not inconsiderable step towards making it true. Moreover, if we do not ask too strictly what is likely to be the precise weight of this new motive to amity, there can be no doubt that it tells, so far as it tells at all, in the right direction.

It is a good thing about all genuine sports—that is, about all which are not mere pretexts for gambling—that they tend to increase Christian charity. For the moment, it is true, there are few objects of bitterer hatred than the man who has just bowled you out at cricket, or passed you in the last hundred yards of a foot-race. But it is impossible not to like him the better afterwards: for, in the first place, the necessity of good temper under such defeats is so obvious to every one that it has become habitual. A man cannot afford to be angry, because every one will think his anger so excessively childish. And, moreover, defeat is not necessarily humiliating. We always exemplify this feeling in our international relations.

It is not so pleasant to be beaten in other ways; we are rather annoyed than otherwise by seeing other people raising bigger armies, or keeping better schools, or paying off more of their national debt than we can do in the time. Such matters are too serious; but it really seems to gratify the British public to be beaten in one of its pet athletic pursuits. We take more pleasure in the exhibition of the virtue of fair play than pain in the humiliation of defeat. We made Gladiateur into a national hero, with the utmost good temper. Whenever our American friends show symptoms of cutting us out in sports, we are equally gratified. Deerfoot, and Heenan, and the yacht America were all raised to the height of popularity; and the gentlemen who welcomed the American yachtsmen at Cowes seem to have expressed the national verdict on this occasion with the utmost fitness.

Perhaps the views which took somewhat hyperbolical forms under the influence of wine and speaking may be summed up somewhat as follows: Every nation, in the eyes of its neighbors, is represented by a mythical hero, exhibiting, as a rule, a rough caricature of certain national peculiarities. The frog-eating Frenchman used to be produced on the 18th of June, for example, although a somewhat improved model has lately been introduced. Brother Jonathan, as seen by the eyes of John Bull, is of course no exception. We keep a rough image of him on hand; and to its various attributes, such as the propensity to chew tobacco, to carry "six-shooters," and to whittle with bowie-knives, will be in future added a singular skill and audacity in one of our national sports; and that is a merit which we make it a point of honor to acknowledge frankly and fully, especially as we can do so without forswearing the British Constitution, or the many inestimable privileges of our highly-favored land. The signboard portrait of Uncle Sam, as hung in the gallery of the popular British imagination, will in future add to his other significant symbols the pleasant one of a fast-sailing yacht; and, doubtless, we shall like him all the better for it.

It usually takes very little excitement to destroy the new impression, and to bring out the old one in all its hideousness. An animated discussion about Fenianism and the Alabama claims would speedily resuscitate the darkest images of the popular imagination. It was very well meant advice of one of the speakers that we should meet each other with racehorses and yachts, and leave the politicians to themselves; and it is ardently to be wished that it could be followed. Unluckily all the yachts and all the racehorses in the world might be put out of mind by a courteous note of Mr. Seward's. All we can honestly say is, that such meetings tend to soothe the vanity of each nation, and to soften down some of the ugly features of the rival as set forth by its imagination. From which it follows that the wounds made by plain speaking are less likely to fester.

That manifestation of English arrogance which is nourished by our profound belief in our sporting pre-eminence is among the most unpleasant varieties of the passion. It is not pleasant for a foreign nation to be conscious that, in this respect at least, we regard them with infinite, if good-natured, contempt. Consequently, anything is good which tends to diminish this impression, and to show that we can acknowledge excellence pleasantly, and even admit that foreigners are in some respects on an equality with ourselves. It is especially useful when we see some of our pet qualities exhibited pre-eminently in those who may be supposed to inherit them from us; for pre-eminence in yachting may certainly be claimed, over the rest of the world, as one virtue shared by England and America.

FURNITURE FASHIONS IN PARIS. The Paris correspondent of the London Queen says:—"The newest fashion in Paris—where even the fashion of furniture changes completely every two or three years—is to have dining-room chairs no longer covered with morocco or moleskin, but with dark cloth, the walls equally hung with dark-colored velvet paper or cloth, and relieved by candelabras, behind which are attached plates of metal or of glass, the whole being highly 'becoming,' as the well-informed and well-spoken dealer told me, to ladies in full dress, whose brilliancy the contrasting dark shades set off. Some houses confine their manufacture entirely to certain periods; so, at a certain dealer's, who had some magnificent specimens of Louis XIII. furniture, (imitated) I was told that he never designed or worked later than the Louis XIV. style, and there much of the carving was in sycamore wood, bearing much analogy to the pear-tree wood, though not of so fine a grain, and not so expensive. It is impossible to give moderate-minded English persons an idea of the extent and universal spread of extravagance in the way of furniture in this country."

AFTER THE BALL.

THEY sat and combed their beautiful hair,
Their long bright tresses, one by one,
As they laughed and talked in their chamber there,
After the revel was done.

Idly they talked of waltz and quadrille,
Idly they laughed, like other girls,
Who over the fire, when all is still,
Comb out their braids and curls.

Robes of satin and Brussels lace,
Knots of flowers, and ribbons, too,
Scattered about in every place,
For the revel is through.

And Maude and Madge, in robes of white,
The prettiest night-gowns under the sun,
Stockingless, slipperless, sit in the night,
For the revel is done.

Sit and comb their beautiful hair,
Those wonderful waves of brown and gold,
Till the fire is out in the chamber there,
And the little bare feet are cold.

Then out of the gathering winter chill,
All out of the bitter St. Agnes weather,
While the fire is out and the house still,
Maude and Madge go together.

Maude and Madge in robes of white,
The prettiest night-gowns under the sun,
Curtained away from the chilly night,
After the revel is done.

Float along in a splendid dream,
To a golden gittern's tinkling tune,
While a thousand lustres shimmering stream
In a palace's grand saloon.

Flashing of jewels and flutter of laces,
Tropical odors sweeter than musk,
Men and women with beautiful faces,
And eyes of tropical dusk.

And one face shining out like a star,
One face haunting the dreams of each,
And one voice, sweeter than others are,
Breaking in silvery speech:

Telling through lips of bearded bloom
An old, old story over again,
As down the royal hannered room,
To the golden gittern's strain.

Two and two they dreamily walk,
While an unseen spirit walks beside,
And, all unheard in the lover's talk,
He claimeth one for his bride.

Oh, Maude and Madge, dream on together,
With never a pang of jealous fear;
For, ere the bitter of St. Agnes weather
Shall whiten another year,

Robed for the bridal and robed for the tomb,
Braided brown hair and golden tress,
There'll be only one of you left for the bloom
Of the bearded lips to press.

Only one for the bridal pearls,
The robe of satin and Brussels lace—
Only one to blush through her curls
At the sight of a lover's face.

Oh, beautiful Madge, in your bridal white!
For yon the revel has just begun;
But for her who sleeps in your arms to-night,
The revel of life is done.

But robed and crowned with your saintly bliss,
Queen of Heaven and bride of the sun,
Oh, beautiful Maude, you'll never miss
The kisses another hath won!

ABOUT SEWING MACHINES.—Mrs. Jane McCready, wife of Dr. McCready, 43 East 23d street, New York, says: "I have used for nine years a Grover & Baker Machine, and upon it I have done all kinds of family sewing for the house, for my children and husband, besides a great deal of fancy work, as braiding, quilting, and embroidering. During all that time my machine never needed repair, except when I had the tension altered, and it is as good now as it was the day I bought it. * * * I am acquainted with the work of all the principal machines, including Wheeler & Wilson's, Finkle & Lyon's, Wilcox & Gibbs', Ladd & Webster's, the Florence Machines, and Sloat Machines, besides a number of the $10 ones, and I prefer the Grover & Baker to them all, because I consider the stitch more elastic. I have work now in the house which was done nine years ago, which is still good, and I have never found any of my friends who have used the other machines able to say the same thing."

[From testimony taken before the U. S. Commissioner of Patents, on the application for the extension of the patent of the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine.]

LITERARY GOSSIP AND GLEANINGS.

COLERIDGE AND CARLYLE.

"THE name of Thomas Carlyle," it has been said by one of his admirers, "is one that ought never to be pronounced by any friend of genuine and masculine literature without respect." This is a proposition which we do not feel inclined to dispute; the influence which he has exerted upon modern thinking is undoubtedly very great, and, in the main, beneficial. Yet all, or nearly all, that is best and most valuable in Carlyle is probably the result of the influence exerted upon him by Coleridge. At the time when the author of "The Friend" and of the "Biographia Literaria" drew towards his center all the young and enthusiastic spirits of his time, Carlyle, then a mere youth, was one of the multitude of inquiring minds who delighted to listen to the splendid and affluent, though somewhat nebulous eloquence of the great master. Yet, though impressed, and perhaps unconsciously influenced by Coleridge, to a greater degree than he was himself sensible of, he never relinquished a critical attitude in reference to his utterances, and never surrendered himself to his intellectual dictation. In his "Life of Sterling" he gives an exceedingly graphic, cynical and amusing account of the oracular Coleridgean meetings at Highgate, where the author of "Christobel" and the "Aids to Reflection" sat in his easy chair, surrounded by docile disciples, uttering, amid floods of unintelligible mystic eloquence, those radiant thoughts and startling truths which attest his claim to genius. It has been remarked upon as a curious fact, that at this early period of Carlyle's life, when all the talent and learning of England bowed at these levees before the gigantic speculator and dreamer, he, almost alone, stood aloof from the throng of worshipers—"coolly analyzing every sentence delivered by the oracle, and sufficiently learned in the divine lore to separate the gold from the dross." A writer in an old number of the Atlantic Monthly thus speaks of the intellectual relations existing between these two great thinkers:

"Carlyle seems to have regarded Coleridge at this period as a sort of fallen demigod; and although he sneers, with an almost Mephistophilean distortion of visage, at the philosopher's half inarticulate drawling of speech, at his snuffy, nasal utterance of the ever-recurring 'omniect' and 'sumniect,' yet gleams of sympathy and affection, not unmixed with sorrow, appear here and there in what he says concerning him. And, indeed, although the immense fame of Coleridge is scarcely warranted by his printed performances, he was, nevertheless, worthy both of affection and homage. For whilst we pity the weakness and disease of his moral nature, under the influence of that dark and terribly enchanting weed, we cannot forget either his personal amiabilities or the great services which he rendered to letters and to society. Carlyle himself would be the last man to deny this laurel to the brows of "the poet, the philosopher, and the divine," as Charles Lamb calls him; and it is certain that the thinking of Coleridge helped to fashion Carlyle's mind, and not unlikely that it directed him to a profounder study of German writers than he had hitherto given to them.

"Coleridge had already formed a school, both of divinity and philosophy. He had his disciples, as well as those far-off gazers who looked upon him with amazement and trembling, not knowing what to make of the phenomenon, or whether to regard him as friend or foe to the old dispensation and the established order of things. He had written books and poems, preached Unitarian sermons, recanted, and preached philosophy and Church-of-Englandism. To the dazzled eyes of all ordinary mortals, content to chew the cud of parish sermons, and swallow, Sunday after Sunday, the articles of common belief, he seemed an eccentric comet. But a better astronomy recognized him as a fixed star, for he was unmistakable by that fitting Few whose verdict is both history and immortality."

Ralph Waldo Emerson, in his account of his visit to Carlyle, in "English Traits," tells us that "he reads Blackwood, but it does not satisfy him," which is not greatly to be wondered at. That "Frazer's is a little better, but not good enough to be worthy of a higher nomenclature than the 'Mud Magazine,'" and that "the best thing he knew about America was, that there, a man could have meat for his labor." Emerson and he talked of the immortality of the soul; but Carlyle was guarded and reticent, and evinced a disinclination to commit himself. Yet, we are told, "he was honest and true, and cognizant of the subtle links that bind ages together, and saw how every great event affects all the future." He said to his American visitor, as the two were seated on the hill-tops of Criffel looking down upon "Wordsworth's Country"—"Christ died on the tree; that built Denscore Kirk yonder; that brought you and me together. Time has only a relative existence." The Atlantic reviewer thus briefly sums up Carlyle's religious teaching: "There is a God, and not a blind chance as governor of this world. The soul has infinite relations with this God, which man can never realize intellectually, or manifest in his practical life, save by a devout reverence for him, and his miraculous, awful universe. This reverence, this deep, abiding religious feeling, is the only link which binds us to the Infinite. That severed, broken, or destroyed, and man is an alien and an orphan; lost to him forever is the key to all spiritual mystery, to the hieroglyph of the soul, to the symbolism of nature, of time, and of eternity." This estimate as written some ten years ago, and was probably based upon general spirit of Sartor Resartus and the earlier essays, in which the writer frequently uses old words and phrases, and forms of expression in altogether a new sense. From his later writings, it would seem doubtful whether he has any steady and hearty belief in anything—except Carlyless heroes.

THOUGHTS

SUGGESTED BY READING THE SCOTTISH POEMS OF JAMES LINEN.

But that I think no spirit e'er
From Azrael's land of gloom returns,
I would believe these simple strains
Are from the Magic Harp of Burns.

What hand but his could touch the chord
That wakes these wild and warbling lays,
That tell of Scotia's heathery hills,
And of her bonny banks and braes?

But in the silent halls of death
I know the matchless Poet sleeps;
And well I ween, the Scottish Muse
Still o'er his dust in anguish weeps;

And ever have I thought, till now,
That while in death the Minstrel lay,
The sorrowing Muses seized his harp
And tore its tuneful chords away.

But now I know, with trembling hands,
They gently took the Magic Thing,
And weeping, hung it in their halls,
Till other hands its chords could string.

And other hands have tuned it now,
And waked its wild and witching strain;
For in these simple lays, I'm sure
I hear its magic notes again.

R. C. HOPKINS.

A MEXICAN POEM.

[A little pamphlet of the utmost elegance in typographical appearance, and containing a poetical tribute in the Spanish language, to the memory of a young Mexican lady who recently died in this city, has been laid upon our table. The author is a countryman of the deceased, and we furnish the following somewhat too literal translation, by A. G. Randall, Esq., as a specimen of a species of composition which will probably be new to the majority of our readers.]

IN MEMORIAM.

A TRIBUTE TEAR SHED OVER THE GRAVE OF THE BEAUTIFUL AND LAMENTED LOUISA ALVAREZ DEL CASTILLO.

"Beati qui moriuntur in Domino."

IN unfolding the Book of Life, our attention is drawn to its opening pages, illuminated by the spotlessness of innocence and purity, combined with the brilliancy of Aurora at the opening of a new-born day. But alas! though we would fain ne'er pass beyond, these leaves are rapidly turned by inexorable destiny, until we soon find ourselves facing the weird and gloomy page of Death! These sentiments are, in substance, the paraphrased version of the affecting stanzas of a French poet. Their philosophy is saddening but true.

She has passed away! Thus in one brief page is human life epitomized. How often 'tis but a step from the cradle to the grave. Mysteries and misfortunes alike blighting the flowers of the hymeneal banquet. The white curtains enclosing the couch of the virgin are exchanged for the mournful habiliments of death. The venerable man, stricken in years, with trembling hands wreathing with roses the icy brow of his child's child. The seed which germinates and becomes fruitful forms the tree, which falls at its alloted time, as if riven by the angry lightnings of Heaven. A fleeting hour of merriment, hope and pleasure, and sad and blissful tears continually flowing.

Inexorable Providence! When will the mother cease wailing over the now vacant couch of her child? When will the maiden's supplications fail to be heard, while grieving over lost affections? In what place will the orphan's prayers fail to be listened to, while shedding tears among the melancholy fragments and abodes of the dead? Death is, has been, and will always be a certainty! And yet we marvel through our decreasing days, as if it were a new order of things. Unhappy truth! discernible to our vision even amid the most festive scenes of life, as when like the mystic sentence appearing to Belshazzar, it is written on the walls of a palace!

The affectionate and dutiful daughter—the loving sister—the kind friend—a model of all the virtues has ceased to exist, in the plenitude of her spring time—a rose is missing in the maternal chaplet. Dear girl! She drooped her angelic head, and the dark wing of death descended, and received her in its folds, like a sweet friend, and as a pale vision of its last hopes. Blessed one! Your crown of fragrant lilies brightened like a mournful gala dress over the sad trappings of your virgin bier. Farewell! grace of spring-time May you ever listen to the sweet songs of angelic choirs, and breathe the perfumed odors of the garden of Paradise!

Farewell! immortal absent one, now thou art clothed in the white robes of the elected, striking the mysterious lyre of the Seraphs. Farewell! sweet dove, for whom the heavens have opened to give thee passage! God has taken you to his bosom with a benignant smile, and I have remembered thee with tears!

AURELIO LUIS GALLARDO.

San Francisco, January 31, 1867.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE.—This new saloon, located at No. 123 Bush street, between the Occidental and Cosmopolitan hotels, was thrown open to the public on Saturday evening last, when its genial proprietors—Dunbar and Harry Riker—gave their friends a hearty welcome and many bumpers of champagne. Long may they enter for the public, and improve the taste of the public palate by serving up their superior wines and liquors, and their accompanying hot lunches, flavored with all the luxuries of the Oriental, and the adaptation of their Cosmopolitan neighbors.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS,

THE rain it raineth every day, and the comforts of the home fire-side are preferred to the amusement offered at the theatre on a rainy night. The Long Strike was played at Maguire's Opera House on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. On Thursday The Cricket on the Hearth was played, Mrs. Harry Jackson taking the character of "Blind Bertha," last played by Miss Kate Denin, who is at present, up country. Mrs. Jackson's characterization of the blind girl was very fine; and she read beautifully. Miss Alice Kingsbury as "Dot," and Mr. John McCullough as John Peerybingle were as usual excellent. The evening's entertainment concluded with the stupid drama of The People's Lawyer which John Owens has caused to be retained on the stage in consequence of his wonderfully comic impersonation of "Solon Shingle." This drama was produced on Thursday to afford Mr. C. B. Plummer an opportunity of making his second appearance on the stage in this character. Mr. Plummer's dialect is perfect, and he reads his part very cleverly throughout; but he is of course lacking in stage experience, and fails to make the "points" by which Owen convulses the audience. Mr. Plummer's impersonation of "Solon Shingle" is, however, on the whole, a very creditable performance; and was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. Mr. H. Edwards, who has by the talent which he evinces in every part which he undertakes, established himself firmly in the good graces of the San Francisco public—played "Robert Howard, the People's Lawyer," so well, that all were afforded an opportunity of seeing how even a stupid part might be redeemed from insignificance when it was committed to a good actor. The nebulous body known as the supernumerary force of the theatre, a body from which ever and anon a star of the first magnitude is eliminated, was on this occasion called on to furnish actors to fill several small parts. Mr. E. Russell most creditably sustained the office of "Judge," Mr. O. Wilson acquitted himself very well as the lawyer "Tripper," and of course Mr. H. Macklyn, who has had a longer experience on the stage than many a star, who has supported many a renowned tragedian and many a gorgeous banner, was perfect as "John." Last night the ever popular Fanchon was produced. This afternoon, Miss Alice Kingsbury will appear in the Little Barefoot. This evening, the domestic drama, in four tableaux, entitled the Mariner's Compass, which was successfully produced at the Old Surrey Theatre, London, some years ago. There are some fine scenic effects in this play.

At the Metropolitan Theatre, the Martinetti Troupe produced ballets and pantommes until Thursday evening, when Mr. Henri Herberte, the favorite tenor, and one of the best deserving artistes who have ever arrived here, took his first benefit in California. The fact that the theatre was well filled on such a night as Thursday, when the rain was falling in torrents, attests strongly the high estimation in which this artiste is held. It is all very well to talk about going "through fire and water" to serve a friend, but I am sure those who took an interest in Mr. Henri Herberte's benefit went through floods of water on Thursday. The Bohemian Girl was, on the whole, very well rendered. Mr. Herberte sang and acted the role of "Thaddeus" with great spirit, and received a most enthusiastic encore of "The Fair Land of Poland." Miss Emma Howson sang "Arline" beautifully, and was especially effective in the last act. Miss Clelia Howson was loudly applauded for her enaction of the "Gipsy Queen," and sang charmingly. Mr. Frank Howson was not in good voice and consequently for once did not receive an encore for "The Heart Bowed down with Weight of Woe." It is a wonder anyone can sing at all during such vile weather as we are at present experiencing. Mr. S. W. Leach's voice is not what it used to be, but he acted "Devilshoof" so superbly that few would prefer a worse actor with a more robust voice in that part. This opera has never before been so well put on the stage here as it was on this occasion, and not often better performed. The members of the ballet of the Martinetti Troupe were engaged by Mr. Herberte to appear in this opera and added to the complete manner in which it was produced. The pleasant pantomime and ballet season which the Martinetti Troupe have been giving at the Metropolitan for the last three months, closes with to-night's performances. On Monday Heller will appear.

The farewell benefit of M. and Mme. Heine which took place at Platt's Hall last night, was not nearly so well attended as it should have been, taking into consideration the merit of the beneficiaries and the attractiveness of the programme. M. Joseph Heine performed L. T. Planel's violin solo "Katy Darling" with exquisite taste and feeling. Mme. Heine performed several brilliant and intricate musical compositions on the piano with great effect. Geo. T. Evans' quartette composed for this occasion, "Am I Dreaming Beauty?" is a beautiful composition, and was sung excellently well by the composer, Swift, Wunderlich and Nordblom. The duet "Sainted Mother" from Maritana was sung so exquisitely by Miss Emma Howson and Miss Clelia Howson, that all who heard them were satisfied that they were fully compensated for their expenditure by that beautiful performance alone

Henri Herberte sang Sims Reeves' favorite song—Beethoven's "Adelaide" in splendid style. Altogether the concert was a great success, though the benefit to the two well deserving, talented but unlucky astistes was, we fear, but small.

Master Louis Schmidt's musical matinee takes place to-day. A capital programme has been prepared. The youthful violinst will be assisted by Miss Emma Howson, Henri Herberte, George Felix Benkert, members of "The Twelve" and the Germania Society. In the first part, the Allegro and Andante of Alexander Fosca's Grand Septuor in C Minor, will be performed by Geo. Felix Benkert and members of the Germania Society. Henri Herberte, the most popular tenor in San Francisco, will sing "Come into the Garden, Maud." Master Louis Schmidt will perform a Souvenir de Bellini, by Singelli, on the violin. Miss Emma Howson and Henri Herberte will sing Loder's "She Loves Me; Loves Me Not;" and George Felix Benkert will perform Le Reve, by Wallace. In the second part, Miss Emma Howson will sing Hatton's beautiful ballad, "Wild Mountain Horn;" Master Louis Schmidt will perform Dancla's Fantasie sur Pirate, and the performance will conclude with the Bishop's famous trio, Mynheer Von Dunck, by Herberte, Swift and Wunderlich. This concert will certainly be the cheapest, as well as the most popular concert of the season, as the price of admission has been fixed at the sum charged at the theatres for admission to the ladies' and childrens' afternoon performances. The fact of the price of admission being fifty cents, will not, however, keep the most fashionable people away. "A Morning concert" is always quite comme il faut.

M'lle Rosa Celeste, the brave young funambuliste, whose terrific feat of walking on a rope from the Cliff House to Seal Rock, caused such a sensation, has, everyone will be glad to learn, nearly recovered from the injuries which she sustained from the accident at the Willows some four months ago. After the long and painful confinement which resulted from the plucky artiste's endeavor to astonish the public by performing a feat never before attempted by a woman, the public will doubtless be glad to express their sympathy, their admiration and their satisfaction on some early occasion, by giving the young heroine a bumper benefit. TOUCHSTONE.

On next Tuesday evening, March 6th, Signor C. Vellimiro will deliver a lecture at the Academy of Music on the subject of "Man and Man," which is intended to be the first of a series of the "Progress of Mankind." The range of the lecture will include "Progress, Social, Political and Religious; or, the Development of Social, Political and Religious Ideas." Signor Vellimiro is a gentleman of liberal education and culture, an origiual thinker and a clear and forcible writer. He has made a special study of the subject of his lecture, and I have no doubt he will both entertain and instruct his audience.

THE NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY.—At a meeting of the stockholders of this company, on Monday evening last, they resolved, by a unanimous vote, to continue both branches of their insurance business, and to sink all petty bickerings and put their united shoulders to the wheels of the "National" and push her into the front ranks of our insurance companies. The National is certainly one of our largest companies—with its paid up capital of one million of dollars—and no one can deny but that it has been one of our most carefully managed ones. The legitimate method of avoiding dangerous risks that the National has adopted, in conjunction with its large capital, offers positive security to the insured, and must win for it a continuous increase of patronage and confidence from the buisuess community.

DEATH OF AN ARTISTE.—The lady professionally known as Miss Rosalie Durand, died of the heart disease at Sydney on the eighth of last December. Miss Durand had been for many years a member of the Lyster Opera Troupe, and was very popular when that troupe were playing in this city several years since. Miss Durand will be remembered by many old New Yorkers as Miss Singleton, the first reiguing favorite of Mitchell's New York Olympic, who, on her marriage and retirement was succeeded by those rival stars, Mary Taylor and Miss Clark. All three have found premature graves.

TEACHING TELEGRAPHING.—The Union Business College, an institution devoted to instructing young men in the higher branches of commercial education, located at 408 California street, in this city, has recently erected a telegraph, with rooms at different ends of the building for stations, where the pupils are instructed as telegraph operators in addition to their other course of studies. The Union Business College is fully engrafted with the spirit of the age.

A fashionable woman, who appeared at a ball in Paris on Christmas, wore jewels that cost two hundred thousand dollars.

An innovation has been quite recently noticed in ladies' dresses in Paris, jet ornaments having been replaced by amber.

Photo-sculpture is becoming the rage in Paris. People are no longer satisfied with a carte-de-visite for their album.

L. MILLER & Co., stalls 59 and 60 Washington Market, advertise a speciality in the way of meats, on the 16th page of to-day's paper.

[For the Californian.]

"BLAYING MIT DER TIGER."

A TEUTON'S EXPERIENCE.

THERE are many men in this city, both old and young, who more or less occasionally indulge in the exciting pastime of "fighting the tiger." (The beast has his jungles in many places—vide the Bulletin.) Some of them pursue it as a regular calliug—if that may be so termed which is altogether irregular, legally, morally, physically and finaucially. It is said by its professors to be a very "gay" life; and I think it must be from what I have observed. [If I have ever had any experience in it I don't intend to confess. What little reputation I have I shall not ruin by foolish confidences.] It seems to consist in sleepless nights and moping, listless days; in sudden alternations of comparative wealth and luxury with poverty, seediness and despair; of strutting like a peacock in gaudy plumage on one day, and the next, in ragged habiliments, subsisting upon scanty mouthfuls picked up at lunch tables, and "sparring" at night with a lodging-house keeper for a "two-bit" bed. Whenever a confirmed gambler is reduced to the "bed-rock," and cannot borrow a "stake" from a friend, he will hypothecate every available article of property he possesses, even to his last "boiled shirt" and his necktie, to "my uncle" for the means of carrying on the war against the striped beast, trusting to winning to redeem his pledges—against ill-luck he makes no provision, but in case of total loss is prepared to resort to any dodge, however dishonorable or criminal, to set him on his legs again. And so he passes through life, contemned by society and distrusted even by his associates, until he sinks prematurely—worn out by unnatural excitement, irregular habits and dissipation—into a dishonored grave. Oh! it's a gay life, that of the "gambolier." Wouldn't you like it, reader?

But this interesting sport has also its humorous phases, as witness the following, the truth whereof I vouch for.

As I sat one evening at my frugal meal in a cheap but respectable restaurant, a gentleman came in and sat down at the same table, opposite to me. He was a short, thick, low-browed, square-faced, dark-complexioned man, evidently of Teutonic birth. As he sat down I looked up, and he saluted me with a cordial "Goot efenin', sir," which I returned with a slight improvement in the pronunciation, for which, however, I magnanimously omitted to make any charge. My vis-a-vis, after a second look at my open (capacious) countenance, continued:

"Tidn't I vos seen you someveres?"

Now, here was a splendid opportunity to revamp an old joke; but I despise borrowed wit—I consider the revamping of old jokes, and the resurrection of dead, buried and rotten ones, the special province of Fitz-Smythe; besides, although the question was rather indefinite it was asked in all seriousness, and I replied as seriously:

"Perhaps you have, sir; I have been in a great many places."

[That is what I call courteous and gentlemanly, under the circumstances. How few persons (I hope I am one of them) know enough to give a courteous response to an ordinary-looking stranger, at the expense of a miserable, second-hand joke. Fitz-Smythe would have perpetrated the joke and published it in the —— next day, without regard to the gentleman's wounded feelings, or to the fact that he himself had added one more to the list of those who dislike him.]

"Did you efer vos in San Andreas?" proceeded my interlocutor.

"I am happy to say that I have had the pleasure of visiting that very nice place," I replied.

"Did you vos know mine shtore?—Sweitzer und Pretzelkase, right by der hodel, rount de gorner opposite mit der putcher's shop—ve geeps try-goots und groceries und leetle dings for der miners. My name is Sweitzer, unt I gooms town here to puy some goots, unt my pardner he keeps der shtore. You rememper, eh?"

"I remember the locality you speak of; but as my stay in that lovely village of the mountains was limited to one day, I did not enjoy the felicity of becoming acquainted with your estimable firm."

"Vell, I dells you von leedle tings. Did you efer vos blay mit der tiger?"

"Play with a tiger?" No, I should think not. Do you take me for Driesbach or Van Amburgh? I can find much safer and quite as cheerful amusement."

"Oh! dat vos not vot I vos mean. You know ven de poys vos puck at Pharaoh dey calls dat 'blay mit der tiger.' Vould you vos like to go and see some fun?"

"What kind of fun?"

"Vy, blay mit der tiger. You see, I knows all dem blaces, und if you vould like to go und blay off a vife or a den, yust gooms along mit me und I dakes you in. Mybee ve might vins fifty or a hoondert tollar, and den ve vos go und haf a goot time. Vos vos you dink?"

"My friend, I never gamble, and just now I haven't a five or a ten about me to invest in that species of amusement. But how does it come that you, a country merchant, can afford to patronize gambling houses? Does your partner know it?"

"Vell, I shposhe he vos not know it; but den, you see, it makes no difference, for my pardner, sometimes ven he vos git troonk he blay a leedle himself. But I dells you all apout it. 'Pout ash more ash four vecks ago I vos gome town to puy some goots. Vell, I hat ash more ash four, fife tousand tollar mit me, und I shtop at der hotel und puts der money in der safe till I vos look arount a leetle. Vell, ven after I vos put der money in der safe, dere vos a young man dere vot goes up und shpeaks mit der clerk, und den he goes out avile, und den he gomes pack after vile, und he gomes to me, und he calls me py my names, und he ask me 'pout San Andreas, und he say he vos ushed to mine dere, und he know me in mine shtore. So ve vos make acquainted, und ten ve goes und dakes a trink togedder—mybee tree or four. Vell, in der efenin I meets dat young man on Montgomery street, und ve dakes anodder trink or so, und den he say, 'let us go und see some fun;' yust like I vos say to you. Und so ve vent arount to a blace on Commercial street, und dis young man he dakes me in dere, und py-und-py ve gommence to blay a leedle, und I vins, und den I gits egsited und I pets higher all de time und I vins agin, und I vins more ash vife hoondert tollar. Den de young man, he say, 'Sweitzer, how long you vos blay?' Und I say, 'Py-und-py ven I vins a leedle more I vos quit.' Den he say, 'Vy ton't you quit now, vile you vins? Py-und-py yon vos make some pat pets, und den you vos lose it all vot you vos vin.' So I quits den, und ve goes out und haf a goot dime. Vell, de nex' night dis young man he gomes to me nnd he say, 'Sweitzer, you vos got some mouey, let us go up dere to-night und preak de pank. You vos got such luck, dat if yon dake 'pont two tree tousand tollar you preak de pank sure. I never vos saw a veller haf such luck as you had.' So I vos trink a leedle, und I vos blease to dink de luck vot I vos haf; so I dakes two tousand tollar, besite de vife hoondert tollar vot I vins, und ve goes up dere, und ve blays, und de first two tree dime I vin, und den I lose; und den I git mat—pet vifty tollar—hoodert tollar—ton't gare a tam—on de turn, und py-and-py I didn't vos had one tollar out of all dem money. Und den dis veller he say: 'Vot de matter vis you, Sweitzer? You blays like von tam fool. Vot for you make dis blay und dat blay. Now, you dakes some more money und I shows you how to blay.' Und I say: 'I vos not got no more money not here.' 'Vell,' he say, 'I know you vos got money town at de safe, und if you gifs de man vot geeps de par your node he lets you haf vot you vonts—vife hoondert tollar—tousand, mybee.' Vell, den I shmells de rat, dat dis young man vos only a shtool pidgeon, nnd diuks I, I quits und leafs here; und deu again I dinks mybee I vin him pack; so I dells de young man I vos do dat, und so he introdnce me to de man vot geeps de par, und I gifs my node, und he gifs me vife hoondert tollar. Den I goes nnd blays again, und I vins, und I pets higher und higher, und I vins all de time, und I blay long time—somedimes I vin, und somedimes lose,—und I quit dat game dwenty-vife hoondert tollar vinner, glear! Und den dat young man he gomes arount me und he vants to shpeak to me, und I tell him 'go avay, you tam rascal! If you spheak to me again I vos kick you!' Und I would do it, you pet! So he didn't vos gome no more, und I blays no more—mybee vife or den tollar, no more. Vell, vos you go vith me?"

"No, I thank you my friend; I have other business to attend to. Good evening."

"Goot efenin', sir; mybee ve meets again, und ve dakes a trink."

I have since heard that my friend from the Rhine, while under the inspiring influences of "two drce trinks," made another assault on the tiger, and lost every dollar he was worth.

JOHN CLERK.

FIELDS OF DOCK.—The root of the yellow dock, so troublesome to farmers, is an effectual alternative and a most valuable medicine. In the neighborhood of Lowell, Doct. J. C. Ayer & Co. have planted fields of it, where they raise many tons at a crop. It is grown like the carrot or beet, in drills, and its quality or properties have been much improved by cultivation. It is one of the ingredients in AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and, we are informed, the extraordinary virtues of this preparation are largely due to the extract of this root that it contains. The Sarsaparilla root, used by this firm, is grown on plantations of their own, in Honduras, to secure an article of superior and wholly reliable quality. One of the reasons for the universally acknowledged superiority of their medicines, may be seen in the watchful care that is used in preparing them.—Vermont Statesman.

EVENING AND BRIDAL SILKS.—Meagher, Taaffe & Co., received by the last steamer an invoice of choice dress silks and other goods, which our lady readers will find fully specified in their advertisement in to day's paper.

HEALTH—said to be one of the greatest blessings—is restored to the sick by a scientific and natural method of treatment, without medicines, quickly, by Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, who guarantees cures in almost all cases. *

"DR. BOURNE'S BATH."—The uniform testimony is, that as luxury, or for the cure of ailments, they are unequalled—No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

TO THE SICK.—You are guaranteed quick and pleasant cures in almost all cases. No medicines! Twenty-five years' experience. Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street *

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER IV.—THE SWORD OF DAMOCLES.

MR. FELTON was scrupulously polite towards women. His American training showed in this particular more strongly than in any other, and caused him to contrast advantageously with the pompous and self-engrossed Mr. Carruthers of Poynings, who was not a general favourite in the small society with whom he condescended to mix while in "foreign parts," as he carefully designated the places of his sojourn which were so unfortunate as not to be under British rule.

The manners of his brother-in-law were at once more simple and more refined. There was no taint of egotism in them, and, though his engrossing cares, added to a naturally grave disposition, made him serious and reserved, every one liked Mr. Felton. Except Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, who disliked him as much as she could be at the trouble of disliking anybody—which, indeed, was not much, for her real nature was essentially trivial, and her affections, except for herself and her enmities, alike wavering, weak, and contemptible. Mr. Felton neither liked nor admired the brilliant woman who was so much admired and so very much "talked about" at Homburg; but he said nothing of his contumacious dissent from the general opinion except to George, and was gravely courteous and acquiescent when the lady, her dress, her ponies, her "dash," and her wealth—the latter estimated with the usual liberality of society in such cases—were discussed in his presence.

They have been pretty freely discussed during a few days which preceded the conversation concerning her which had taken place between the uncle and nephew. When they met again on the following morning, George asked Mr. Felton when he intended to visit Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, and was informed that his uncle purposed writing to the lady to inquire at what time it would be her pleasure and convenience to receive him. George looked a little doubtful on hearing this. The remembrance of Harriet's strongly expressed opinion was in his mind, and he had a notion that his uncle would have done more wisely had he sought her presence unannounced. But such a proceeding would have been entirely inconsistent with Mr. Felton's notions of the proper and polite, and his nephew dismissed the subject; reflecting that, after all, as she had said "he knows where to find me if he wants to know what I can tell him," she could not refuse to see him. So Mr. Felton's note was written and sent, and an answer returned which perfectly justified George's misgiving that if Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge were afforded an opportunity of offering Mr. Felton an impertinence, she would not hesitate to avail herself of it.

The answer was curt and decisive. Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge was particularly engaged that day, and would be particularly engaged the next; on the third she would receive Mr. Felton, at three o'clock. Mr. Felton handed the missive to his nephew with an expression of countenance partly disconcerted and partly amused.

"I thought so," said George, as he tossed the dainty sheet of paper, with its undecipherable monogram and its perfume of the latest fashion, upon the table—"I thought so. We must only wait until Thursday, that is, unless we chance to meet your fair correspondent in our walks between to-day and Thursday."

But Mr. Felton and his nephew did not chance to meet Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, either on that or on the succeeding day. Once they saw her pony-carriage coming towards them, but it turned off into another road, and was out of sight before they reached the turn.

"I am pretty sure she saw and recognised us," George Dallas thought; "but why she should avoid my uncle, except out of sheer spite, I cannot imagine."

There was no further to look for the lady's motive. Sheer spite was the highest flight of Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge's powers of revenge or anger. She was an accomplished and systematic coquette; and, having more brains than heart, however mediocre her endowments in either sense, she was perfectly successful. She disliked Mr. Felton, because he had never betrayed any admiration or even consciousness of her beauty, and it was very annoying to a woman of her stamp to have tried her arts unsuccessfully on an elderly man. She had tried them merely in an idle hour, and with the amiable purpose of enjoying the novelty of such a conquest; but she had failed, and she was irritated by her failure.

Mark Felton had wounded the sensitive self-love of a woman who knew no deeper passion. She was animated by genuine spite towards him, when she declined to accede to his request for an immediate interview.

By what feeling was Stewart Routh, who was with her when she received Mr. Felton's note, and who strongly urged the answer she sent to it, actuated? He would have found it difficult to tell. Not jealousy; the tone in which she had spoken of Arthur Felton precluded that feeling. Routh had felt that it was genuine, even while he knew that this woman was deliberately enslaving him, and therefore was naturally suspicious of every tone in which she spoke of any one. But his judgment was not yet entirely clouded by passion; he had felt, in their brief conversation relative to Arthur Felton, that her tone had been true. He hated George Dallas now; he did not deceive himself about that. There was a vague dread and trouble in his thoughts concerning the young man. Once he had only despised him. He no longer despised him; but he hated him instead. And this hatred, further reaching than love, included all who were connected with George, and especially Mr. Felton, whose grave and distant manner, whose calm and penetrating glance, conveyed keen offence to Stewart Routh. They had not spoken of the matter to each other; but Routh had felt, as soon and as strongly as Harriet, that his influence over Dallas was at an end. As it happened, he had successfully used that influence for the last time in which he could foresee any need for its employment, and therefore Mr. Felton had not done him any practical injury; but that did not matter: he hated him all the same.

He had watched the smile with which Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge read Mr. Felton's note, a little anxiously. He did not dare to ask her from whom the missive came, but she graciously gave him the information.

"He wants to see me, to find out Master Arthur's doings," she said, with a ringing mischievous laugh. "Not that I know anything about him since he left Paris, and I shall have to look serious and listen to more preaching than goes well with the sunshine of to-day. It's rather a nuisance;" and the lady pouted her scarlet lips very effectively.

"Don't see him," said Routh, as he leant forward and gazed at her with eager admiration. "Don't see him. Don't lose this beautiful day, or any part of it, for him. You can't give him any real information."

"Except that his son is coming here," she said, slyly.

"I forgot," said Stewart Routh, as he rose and walked moodily to the window.

Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge smiled a little triumphantly, and said gaily: "He shall wait for the news. I dare say it will be quite as welcome to-morrow."

"Don't say to-morrow, either," said Routh, approaching her again, as she seated herself at the writing-table, and bending so as to look into her eyes.

"Why?" she asked, as she selected a pen.

"Because I must go away on Thursday. I have an appointment, a man to meet at Frankfort. I shall be away all day. Let this anxious parent come to you in my absence; don't waste the time upon him."

"And if the time does not seem so wonderfully precious to me, what then?" said the lady, looking straight at him, and giving to her voice a truly irresistible charm, a tone in which the least possible rebuke of his presumption was mingled with the subtlest encouragement. "What then?" she repeated. ("Decidedly, he is dreadfully in earnest," she thought.)

"Then," said Routh, in a low hoarse voice, "then I do not say you are deceiving me, but I am deceiving myself."

So Mr. Felton received the answer to his note, and found that he must wait until the following Thursday.

People talked about Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge at Homburg as they had talked about her at New York and Paris, at Florence and at Naples; in fact, in every place where she had shone and sparkled, distributed her flashing glances, and dispensed her apparently inexhaustible dollars. They talked of her at all the places of public resort, and in all the private circles. Mr. Felton was eagerly questioned about his beautiful compatriot by the people whom he met at the springs and in the gardens, and even by the visitors to Mr. and Mrs. Carruthers. Probably he did not know much about her; certainly he said a little. She was a widow, without near relations, childless, and possessed of a large fortune. There was no doubt at all about that. Was she "received" in her own country? Yes, certainly. He had never heard anything against her. Her manners were very independent, rather too independent for European ideas. Very likely Mr. Felton was not a judge. At all events, ladies rarely visited the brilliant American. Indeed! But that did not surprise him. Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge did not care for ladies' society—disliked it, in fact—and had no hesitation about saying so. Women did not amuse her, and she cared only for being amused. This, with the numerous amplifications which would naturally attend such a discussion, had all been heard by George, and was just the sort of thing calculated to excite the curiosity and interest of a young man of his disposition and antecedents. But it all failed to attract him now. Life has become very serious and real to George Dallas of late, and the image he carried about with him, enshrined in his memory, and sanctified in his heart, had nothing in common with the prosperous and insolent beauty which was the American's panoply.

It was rather late in the afternoon of the day on which Mr. Felton had received Mrs. Bembridge's note, before George presented himself at Harriet's lodgings. He had been detained by his mother, who had kept him talking to her a much longer time than usual. Mrs. Carruthers was daily gaining strength, and her pleasure in her son's society was touching to witness, especially when her husband was also present. She would lie on her sofa, while the two conversed, more and more freely, as the air of making one another's acquaintance which had attended their first few days together wore off, and was replaced by pleasant companionship. At such times George would look at his mother with his heart full of remorse and repentance, and think mournfully how he had caused her all the suffering which had indirectly led to the result for which she had not dared to hope. And when her son left her, quiet tears of gratitude fell from his mother's eyes—those eyes no longer bright indeed, but always beautiful. There was still a dimness over her mind and memory; she was easily interested in and occupied with things and subjects which were present; and her son was by no means anxious for her entire awakening as to the past. Let the explanation come when it might, it must be painful, and its postponement was desirable. There were times, when they were alone, when George saw a troubled, anxious, questioning look in his mother's face, a look which betokened a painful effort of the memory—a groping look, he described it to himself—and then he would make some excuse to leave her, or to procure the presence of a third person. When they were no longer alone, the look gradually subsided, and placid calm took its place.

That calm had been uninterrupted during their long interview on the morning in question. For the first time, George talked to his mother of his literary plans and projects of the fair measure of success which had already attended his efforts, of his uncle's generosity to him—in short, of every pleasing subject to which he could direct her attention. The time slipped by unnoticed, and it was with some self-reproach that George found he had deferred his visit to Harriet to so late an hour.

This self reproach was not lessened when he reached Harriet's lodgings. He found her in her accustomed seat by the window, but totally unoccupied, and his first glance at her face filled him with alarm.

"You are surely very ill, Mrs. Routh," he said. "There is something wrong with you. What is it?"

Harriet looked at him with a strange absent look, as if she hardly understood him. He took her hand, and held it for a moment, looking at her inquiringly. But she withdrew it, and said:

"No, there is nothing wrong with me. I was tired last night, that was all."

"I am afraid you thought me very stupid, Mrs. Routh; and so I was indeed, to have kept you waiting so long, and not brought you the lemonade you wished for, after all. I was so frightened when I returned to the place where I had left you, and you were not there. The fact was, I got the lemonade readily enough; but I had forgotten my purse, and had no money to pay for it, so I had to go and find Kirkland in the reading-room, and get some from him."

"Was he alone?"

"Kirkland? Oh yes, alone, and bored as usual, abusing everybody and everything, and wondering what could possibly induce people to come to such a beastly hole. I hate his style of talk, and I could not help saying it was odd he should be one of the misguided multitude."

"Did you see Mr. Hunt?"

"Yes; he was just leaving when I met him, not in the sweetest of tempers. The way he growled about Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge (her mere name irritates him) amused me exceedingly."

"Indeed. How has she provoked his wrath?"

"I could not wait to hear exactly, but he said something about some man whom he particularly wanted as a 'pal' here—delightful way of talking, his—beats Kirkland's—having fallen into her clutches. I suppose he is left lamenting; but I fancy Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge is the safer companion of the two, unless the individual in question is uncommonly sharp."

Harriet looked attentively and searchingly at George. His unconsciousness was evidently unfeigned, and she refrained from asking him a question that had been on her lips.

"I came back to look for you as soon as ever I could get rid of Hunt," continued George; "but you had disappeared, and then I came here at once. Routh had not come in, I think, then?"

"No," said Harriet, curtly.

Then the conversation drifted to other matters, and George, who felt unusually happy and hopeful that day, was proportionately self-engrossed, and tested Harriet's power of listening considerably. She sat before him pale and quiet, and there was never a sparkle in her blue eyes, or a flush upon her white cheek; yet she was not cold, not uninterested, and if the answers she made, and the interest she manifested, were unreal, and the result of effort, at least she concealed their falsehood well. He talked of his mother and of his uncle, and told her

Mr. Felton had made him a present of a handsome sum of money only that morning.

"Aud, as if to prove the truth of the saying that 'it never rains but pours,'" said Geerge, "I not only got this money from him, which a little time ago would have seemed positive riches to me, and a longer time ago would have saved me from—well, Mrs. Routh, I need not tell you from what it would have saved me; but I got a handsome price for my story, and a proposal from The Piccadilly people to do a serial for them, to commence in November."

"Do you really think, George," Harriet said, as if her attention had not extended to the concluding seutence—do you really think that money would have kept yon all right?" George reddened, and looked disconcerted; then laughed uneasily, and answered:

"I know what you mean. You mean that I know myself very little if I lay the blame of my sins and follies on circumstances, don't you?"

She did not answer him, nor did she remove her serious fixed gaze from his face.

"Yes," he said, "that is what you mean, and you are right. Still, I think the want of money made me reckless, made me worse than I should otherwise have been I might not have spent it badly, you know, after all. I don't feel any inclination to go wrong now."

"No; you are under your mother's influence," said Harriet. And then George thought how much he should like to tell this woman—for whom he felt so much regard and such growing compassion, though he could not give any satisfactory reason for the feeling—about Clare Carruthers. He thought he should like to confess to her the fault of which he had been guilty towards the unconscious girl, and to ask her counsel. He thought he should like to acknowledge the existence of another influence, in addition to his mother's. But he restrained the resolution, he hardly knew why. Harriet might thiuk him a presumptuous fool to assign any importance to his chance meeting with the young lady, and, besides, Harriet herself was ill, and ill at ease, and he had talked sufficiently about himself already. No, if he were ever to mention Clare to Harriet, it should not be now.

"Routh is too rich now, too completely a man of business, for me to hope to be of any use to him with my little windfalls," said George, heartily; "but of course he knows, and you too, I shall never forget all I owe him."

Harriet forced herself to smile, and utter some commonplace sentence of deprecation.

"There is one thing I want to do with some of the money I have been paid for my story," said George, "and I want to consult you about it. I have to touch on a painful subject, too, in doing so. You remember all about the bracelet which my dear mother gave me? You remember how we broke it up together that night?"

Harriet remembered. She did not tell him so in words, but she bent her head, and turned it from him, and set her face towards the street.

"You remember," he repeated. "Pray forgive me, if the allusion is agitating. We little thought then what had happened: however, we won't talk about that any more. What I want to do is this: you have the gold setting of the bracelet and the blue stones, sapphires, turquoises: what do call them? I want to replace the diamonds. I can do so by adding a little of my uncle's gift to my own money, and, when you return to England, I shall get the gold and things from you. I can easily procure the Palais Royal bracelet—Ellen will get it for me—and have the other restored exactly. If my mother is ever well enough to be told about it—and there is every probability that she will be, thank God—I think she will be glad I should have done this."

"No doubt," said Harriet, in a low voice. She did not start when he spoke of the strange task they had executed in concert on that memorable night, and no outward sign told how her flesh crept. "No doubt. But you will not have the bracelet made in England?"

"No," said George; "I shall have it made in Paris. I will arrange about it when my uncle and I are passing through."

"When does Mr. Felton go to England?"

"As soon as he gets his letters from New York, if his son does not turn up in the mean time. I hope he may do so. When do you think of returning?"

"I don't know," said Harriet, moodily. "If it depended on me, to-morrow. I hate this place.'

Energy was commou to Harriet's mode of speecch, but vehemence was not; and the vehemence with which she spoke these words caused George to look at her with surprise. A dark frown was on her face—a frown which she relaxed with a visible effort when she perceived that he was looking at her.

"By-the-by, she said, rising and going to a table in the corner of the room, "you need not wait for my return to have the bracelet made. My desk always travels with me. The little packet is in it. I have never looked at or disturbed it. You had better take it to Paris with you, and give your directions with it in your hand. There will be no ocasion, I should think, to let the jeweller see the other."

She opened the desk as she spoke, and took from a secret drawer a small packet, folded in a sheet of letter-paper, and sealed. George Dallas' name was written upon it. It was that which she had put away in his presence so many months before (or years, was it, or centuries?) He took it from her, put it into his pocket, unopened, and took leave of her.

"You won't venture out this evening, Mrs. Routh, I suppose?" said George, turning again to her when he had reached the door.

"No," said Harriet. "I shall remain at home this evening." When he left her, she closed and locked her desk, and resumed her place at the window. The general diuuer-hour was drawing near, and gay groups were passing, on their way to the hotels and to the Kursaal. The English servaut, after a time, told Harriet that the dinner she had ordered from a restaurant had been sent in; should it be served, or would she wait longer for Mr. Routh?

Dinner might be served, Harriet answered. Still she did not leave the window. Presently an open carriage, drawn by grey ponies, whirled by. Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge was unaccompanied, except by her groom. The carriage went toward the Schwarzchild House. She was going to dine at home, probably. The servant asked if she should close the blinds. No, Harriet preferred them left as they were; and when she had made a pretence of dining, she once more took her place by the window. Lights were brought, but she carried them to the table in the corner of the room, where her desk stood, and sat in the shadow, looking out upon the street. Soon the street become empty, rain fell in torrents, and the lights glimmered on the surface of the pools. The hours passed. Harriet sat motionless, except once or twice she pressed her hands upon her temples. Once she murmured, half audibly:

"I wonder if I am going mad?"

At eleven o'clock Routh came home. He opened the door of the room in which Harriet was sitting, came in, and leaned against the wall, without speaking. In quick instinctive alarm, she went to the table in the corner, took up a candle, and held it toward his face. He was quite pale, his eyes were glassy, his hair was disordered. In a moment Harriet saw, and saw for the first time in her life, that he was intoxicated.

CHAPTER V.—RECOGNITION.

With the unexpected return of George Dallas to London from Amsterdam, an occurrence against which so much precautiou had been taken, and which had appeared to be so very improbable, a sense of discouragement and alarm had stolen over Stewart Routh. In the coarse, bold sense of the term, he was a self-reliant man. He had not done badly; he had schemed successfully, and cunning and crime had availed him. He had relied upon them without any doubt or misgiving until the day on which he was convinced by George Dallas' appearance on the stage, which he believed him to have abandoned for an indefinite time, that he had made a miscalculation.

Then a slow, cold fear began to creep over him. Had his luck—what marvelous luck it had been—turned? He had felt some such dread; then, from the moment when Harriet—Harriet, who should have seen that he had blundered: confound the woman, was she losing her head?—had told him, in her smooth, encouragiug way, that this new difficulty should be surmounted as the others had been. Not the smallest touch of repentance, not the lightest shadow of remorse, fell upon him with the stirring of this fact,—only a hard, contemptuous anger against himself and Harriet, and a bitter, scornful hatred for the young man who had been his tool for so long, and might now, in a moment, be turned into the agent of his punishment. When George Dallas left Harriet after the discussiou which had terminated in his promise not to move in the matter of the identification of Deane, Stewart Routh, though he bore himself with calmness in his talk with his wife, had invariably writhed and raged under the galling sense of the first check he had received.

If he could have done it safely, if the deed would not have been more fatal than the conjuncture he feared, he would have murdered Dallas readily. He was not a man to kill one human being because it suited his purpose to do so, and then to hesitate about killing another, if a still more powerful preventive presented itself. His hatred of George was mixed with the bitterest contempt. When he found the young man amenable beyond his expectations; when he found him unshaken in the convictions with which Harriet had contrived to inspire him, his reassurance was inferior to his scorn.

"The fool, the wretched, contemptible idiot!" Routh said, as he looked round his dressing-room that night, and noted one by one the signs which would have betokened to a practised eye, preparations for an abrupt departure, "it is hardly worth while to deceive him, and to rule such a creature. He was full of suspiciou of me before he went away, and the first-fruits of that pretty and affecting conversion of his, under the influence of his mother and the territorial decencies of Poynings, was what he flattered himself was a resolution to pay me off, and be free of me. He believes in Harriet as implicitly as ever; and if he is not as fond of me as he was, he is quite as obedient."

Harriet had miscalculated her strength; not the strength of her intellect, but that of her nerves, and the strain had told upon them. She still loved her husband with a desperate kind of love; but all its peace, and its strength, all its frankness—and even in the evil life they had always led it had possessed these qualities—had vanished. She loved him now, but with an element of fierceness added to it, with a horrid craving and fear, sometimes with a sudden repulsion, which she rebelled against as physicial cowardice, causing her to shrink from him in the darkness, and to shut her ears from the souud of his breathing in his sleep. Aud then she would upbraid herself fiercely, and ask herself if she, who had given him all her life and being, who had renounced for him—though she denied to herself that such renunciation was any sacrifice, for did she not love him, as happy women, the caressed of society, do not know to love—home, name, kindred, and God, could possibly shrink from him now?

If a terrible anguish had come into that life latterly, that was her share of it, her fair share. It was not easy, for she was a woman and weak; her nerves would thrill sometimes, and phantoms swim about her; sleeplessness would wear her down, and a spell be set upon her lips, under which they strove vainly to curve with their old smile, and to utter their old words of endearment and protestation; for she scorned and hated herself for such weakness, and could have torn her rebellious flesh with rage, that sometimes it would creep and turn cold when he touched her, or even when he only spoke. She fought this false and dastardly weakness, as she called it, with steady bravery, and with the resolve to conquer, which is always half a moral battle; but she did not conquer it, she only quelled it for a little while.

All such conflicts of feeling had their effect. A lassitude which her owu good sense told her was dangerous began to take possession of her. They were better off now—she did not rightly know how, or how much, for she had gradually lapsed from her previous customary active overseeing of Routh's affairs, and had been content to take money as he gave it, and expend it as he desired, skillfully and economically, but with an entire indifference, very different to the cheerful, sunny household thriftness which had formerly been so marked a feature in their Bohemian life. His comforts were as scrupulously looked after as ever, and far more liberally provided for; but the tasteful care for her home, the indescribable something which had invested their life with the charm of a refinement contrasting strangely with its real degradation, had vanished.

Harriet's quietude was peculiarly unpleasant to Routh. "Eat, drink, and be merry" had been their rule of life in time that seemed strangely old to them both; aud if the woman alone had sometimes remarked that the precept had a corollary, she did not care much about it. "To-morrow ye die" was au assurance which carried little terror to one absolutely without belief in a future life. Stewart Routh had never had the capacity, either of heart or of intellect, to comprehend his wife thoroughly; but he had loved her as much as he was capable of loving any one, in his own way. His best aid in business; his shrewd, wise counsellor in difficulty, his good comrade in pleasure; his sole confident,—it must be remembered that there was no craving for respect on the one side, no possibility of rendering it, no power of missing it, on the other,—and the most cherished wife of the most respectable and worthy member of society might have compared her position with that of Harriet with considerable disadvantage on many points.

Things were, however, changed of late, and Harriet had begun to feel, with something of the awfully helpless, feeble foreboding with which the victims of conscious madness foresee the approach of the foe, that there was some power, whose origin she did not know, whose nature she could not discern, undermining her, and conquering her unawares. She was no longer young, and she had suffered,—yes, she had certainly suffered a very great deal; no one could love as she loved and not suffer, that was all. Time would do everything for her; things were going well; all risk was at an end, with the procuring of George's promise and the quieting of George's scruples. And every week of time gained without the revival of any inquisition, was a century of presumptive safety. Yes, now she was very weak and certainly not quite well; it was all owing to her sleeplessness. How could any one be well who did not get oblivion in the darkness? This would pass, and time would bring rest and peace. Wholly possessed by her love for her husband, she was not conscious of the change in her manner towards him. She did not know that the strauge repulsion she sometimes felt, and which she told herself was merely physical nervousness, had so told upon her, that she was absent and distant with him for the most part, and in the occasional spasmodic bursts of love which she yielded to showed such haunting and harrowing grief as sometimes nearly maddened him with auger, with disgust, with ennui,—not with repentance, uot with compassion,—maddened him, not for her sake, but for his own.

(To be Continued.)

The N. Y. World says two hundred and fifty thousand dollars were sunk in trying to make a religious paper of it: but that it is now a paying paper.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1867.

AMERICANS ABROAD.

WE notice that the New York papers are poking all sorts of fun at James Gordon Bennett, fils, in connection with that young gentleman's offer of his splendid yacht, as a present to H. R. H. Prince Alfred. The tender was made in a letter, and was of course declined in the epistolary form; so that, if the gallant young yachtsman suffered the disappointment of a failure in his attempt to give away a marine plaything that cost a hundred thousand dollars or two, he at least enjoys the consolation of having been a correspondent of an "H. R. H.," with the letters to show for it.

Indeed, Bennett, Jr. appears not to have been quite satisfied with simply exhibiting the princely autograph in private circles, and so he has permitted the correspondence to appear in print. All the accounts in the English papers, of the manner in which Mr. Bennett, Mr. Jerome, and their companinons were received, and entertained while abroad, evince the utmost good will and courtesy on the part of our trans-Atlantic friends. This is all very pleasant, but doesn't the young yachtsman make a trifle too much of the courtesies extended to his party when he declares that "they will be remembered with the warmest gratitude in the United States?" One would almost imagine from Mr. Bennett's excessive effusion when speaking of his reception, and his abundant professions of "gratitude," that he did not expect to be courteously treated by his English hosts, and scarcely considered himself entitled to look for such treatment. As to the cordiality (not altogether unconscious of condescension, we suspect) of the reception of the yachting party being made the subject of national gratitude, the notion indicates not only Mr. Bennett's high estimate of the great value of English hospitality, but also his unbounded faith in the readiness and warmth of American gratitude. Meantime, we observe with mortification, that the Provincial mind is far from regarding the matter in the same light with the English metropolitan press. A Canadian journal thinks that it was a sad offense against aristocratic dignity to treat the democratic visitors with so much "distinguished consideration," and is quite horrified at the idea of Prince Alfred's consenting to a yacht-race with "the son of a New York editor." But this alarm is premature. At last advices, nothing definite had transpired in regard to the rumored race with the Viking, and even if such a thing was at any time seriously contemplated, the Barnumism of the more recent proceedings of Bennett, Jr. would in all probability interfere with its being carried out. It is not often that we are permitted to read the details of the life and conversation of wealthy Americans traveling in Europe, with feelings of unalloyed complacency; but we ought not to expect too much, nor to be disappointed at what common sense would show us to be quite natural and probable. Wealth in one generation has a tendency to insure some degree, at least, of culture and refinement in the next. Furthermore, the existence of good and sterling qualities is quite possible without cultivation or refinement—and there are far worse elements in character than that slight infusion of snobbishness which seems peculiar to a certain phase of American society, or than that tendency to Barnumism which marks another. As for the present case, it is quite natural that a young man of wealth should prefer to make a costly present to a Prince, to endowing a school for the benefit of peasants; and though to attach a higher value to a letter from an "H. R. H." than to one from Tennyson or Ruskin may evince a certain vulgarity of mind, it is not to be regarded as conclusive evidence of depravity of heart. The worst feature of the matter is the difficulty of understanding how a young man of average American acuteness could have supposed for a moment that such a present would be accepted by the Prince. It is one thing to follow a youthful impulse of thoughtless and blundering generosity; it is quite another to scheme to obtain a cheap notoriety by a tender of a costly gift which you have no mind to part with, and which you well know will not be accepted. Mr. Bennett, Jr. is either a delightfully ingenuous boy, or he is destined to develop a very high order of talent in those fields of enterprise where cunning and impudence carry off the chief prizes.

"Snowdrop and Rosebud," by May Wentworth, a very prettily told California story, will be found on the second page of to day's paper. Other original sketches will be found on the fourth and fifth pages.

A DUTY ON THOUGHT.

THE New York Nation is making itself merry at the expense of those American authors and authorlings who are endeavoring to get Congress to pass a literary tariff-act, and clap an import duty on foreign intellect. It is said to be the recent application of the artists for the imposition of a duty on cheap foreign pictures, that has stirred up "the small fry of native novelists, historians, and poets" to a similar enterprise. "They say," remarks the Nation with sarcastic pleasantry, "that with proper protection, they are confident they can before long furnish as good histories of any period or country, ancient or modern, and as good fictions, sonnets, epics, madrigals, and even conundrums, as any foreign authors—they care not who they may be—and they ask Congress to stop Tennyson, Swinburne, Mommsen, Merivale, Grote, George Eliot, and Reade, and others, from taking the bread out of their children's mouths. The free admission of the works of Shakespeare, Virgil and Dante, Spenser, Chaucer, Livy and Thucydides, and some other old masters, they say they have no objection to: but, as for the herd of their modern imitators who are now corrupting the taste and morals of the American public, they want to have them rigidly excluded." It may be true that the attempt of the artists to exclude a certain class of pictures led to the movement which has provoked the satire of the Nation; but there is no true analogy between the two measures. The former, proposes a duty upon a class of cheap and worthless pictures, literally "made to sell," while the latter would tend to deprive the great mass of our population of ready access to the most valuable literary treasures of our time. It is undoubtedly both natural and proper, that the amiable and accomplished gentlemen who are devoting their energies to the ungrateful and far from lucrative task of "trying to build up an American Literature," should feel anxious to "provide bread for their children;" but we trust they will be able to discover some other mode of accomplishing this very desirable object, than one which will tend to starve the intellect of the nation by placing obstacles in the way of contact with the freshest, brightest, and most advanced thought of the world. No intelligent friend of literature, and indeed no lover of fair play who has any respect for the rights of property, will object to a judiciously drawn international copyright act. Such a law would be in the interests of broad and simple justice—justice to the foreign no less than the native author. But the kind of legislation said to be desired by a class of our writers, and for the purpose of securing which, it is asserted that a powerful lobby is being sent on to Washington, would seem not only too manifestly impolitic, but too ridiculous, to be seriously contemplated, even by distressed litterateurs troubled with domesti c anxieties touching the bread-supply.

A NOTABLE CHAMPION.

RUMOR hath it that Zach. Montgomery of the Occidental is about to transform that paper into a daily morning dime paper, whose special mission it will be to advocate the interests of the workingmen! This we consider the richest joke of the season—not the project of starting (establishing is a word not found in the vocabulary of new papers in San Francisco at this time) another paper, but that Zach. Montgomery should set himself up as the special advocate of the working classes. Why, he has all his life labored with might and main against their interest. He has advocated slavery, which, wherever it was been tolerated, has been a blight and a curse upon poor whites—depriving them of employment and of any means of education for their children; reducing them, in fact, in many districts of the South, to a lower level of degradation than that of the poorest slaves on the meanest plantations. He has advocated the recognition by our Government of the Southern Confederacy, a step which, had it been taken, would have firmly established slavery in the South, and forever closed against white laboring men one of the fairest fields of industry ever prepared in the good providence of God for the enjoyment of his creatures. He has worked night and day against the interests of the Common School system, which alone can afford to laboring men the means of educating their children so that they, at least, may stand on an intellectual level with the best, and not be doomed to perpetuate a race of day laborers and menial servants. Mr. Montgomery's idea of benefitting workingmen seems to be, to keep them down by closing to them every available avenue to mental improvement and worldly advancement, and thus constraining them to a life of ignorance, toil and degradation. A glorious champion for the workingmen, truly! When he takes the field with his new organ, we tremble for the fate of the Call and the Dispatch, which have hitherto been rivaling each other in the affections of the "oppressed" laboring men.

THE exhibition of Nast's fine painting, "Sherman's March through Georgia," at Snow & Roos', under the Russ House, will close on Saturday next. This painting is well worth a visit, and those who have not yet seen it should not fail to do so. The admission price, twenty-five cents, is extremly moderate.

[For the Californian.]

CALIFORNIA MALE COOKS AND HOUSEKEEPERS.

BY PRENTICE.

A man who can cook, imagines that in any well-regulated family he should be regarded as an inestimable treasure and a priceless boon. Generally, he is not. The female portion of the household do not take kindly to the manipulation of pots, pans and kettles by one of the other sex. A man is looked upon as good to build fires and make occasional little excursions after coal and kindlings. Amateur male cookery will always bear traces of masculine coarseness. He may think he is doing the thing up in the neatest possible style, but very apt is he to leave traces behind which never escape detection by an experienced feminine eye. Grease is his direct enemy. Grease takes a malicious pleasure in betraying him.

Most of us who have passed the initiation of a mining experience in California, have performed more or less cooking for ourselves. We have boiled beans and baked bread. The majority of California amateur cooks have boiled their beans to the consistency of bullets, owing to a premature insertion of the necessary pork. We have all encountered several hundred failures in the manufacture of bread. First, of course, it was too heavy; and then it went to the other extreme of lightness, and consequent sourness, and possibly yellowness, with a strong alkaline flavor, owing to excess of salæratus. Woman does not always arrive at perfection in making bread; with most men this line of experience is marked by naught save one unbroken succession of disastrous failures.

In the mines I studied a variety of the phases of masculine cookery. The result of these observations, added to my own experience, convinces me that there is a general predisposition on the part of mankind, in a culinary point of view, to piggishness. Did the usages of society permit, I should denominate this propensity by a term indicative of a later period in the existence of the porcine animal.

Yet, there is more than the shadow of an excuse for this. The miner comes home at night to his cabin tired, wet and hungry. There is water to bring and wood to cut. He hardly ever has more than six sticks in advance. I have known an old stump, near by, to last for months—like the widow's cruse.

He becomes heated and feverish from bending over a hot stove. These little cook-stoves, by the way, so common among miners, are disgusting. They take in too much wood and give out by no means a corresponding degree of heat One moment they roar like an angry bull, and are as red as a turkey's comb; and then while your back is turned, engaged in unprofitable converse with a neighbor or deep in the perusal of a sensation story, there comes over that little stove an ominous silence; you lift the cover, all within and without is cold, black and gloomy. Briefly, the fire is out. Those little stoves require no end of nursing; and likewise, exercise in the use of the saw and ax. Give me in their stead a fireplace—a frank, open, honest, cheerful fireplace, in which may be rolled logs six feet in length by one in diameter.

Let me see how many classes of amateur cooks I can enumerate: There is the Super Lazy and Nasty Cook. He may be good-natured, but it does not always follow that good nature is allied to laziness. Such a man I have known, who averaged ten minutes in cooking his meal. On the way to his cabin he employed himself in snatching at the dried, dead weeds and bits of wood in his path. With these he made his fire for boiling his kettle and warming meat, which he deemed by a culinary fiction to be cooked. This man was rather above the average in intellect and intelligence. Considered in a gastronomical point of view, however, he was a baboon and a disgrace to humanity. There was ever on his table a plate, knife and fork, a cup and spoon, two yeast-powder cans containing salt and pepper, and a bottle of pepper-sauce. Platters for meat and vegetables there were none. The frying pan was obliged to perform this duty in addition to its legitimate office. About his plate, which was not movable by a slight touch, there was a deposit of a decided greasy character, the accumulation of hundreds of unwashed meals. This man washed his crockery once a month. And yet, he was human and had a soul. Often he entered our cabin just as we were sitting down to a meal, and exclaimed: "What! just sitting down to dinner! Why, I finished mine ten minutes ago." He seemed to consider eating merely in the light of an animal necessity—a task to be finished as soon as possible, and cooking one of the evils entailed upon man by the miserable defection of Adam.

Above him in the scale are a blundering, rather slovenly, but more pains-taking set of cooks. They wash their dishes once a day. They peel their potatoes, but the rinds are always too thick. This is not economy. Besides, they leave small bits of skin on the tubers; neither do they dig out the eyes. This is not nice. They fry beef-steak in lard, and deem it fit to eat. This is villainous. They do not hesitate to warm—aye, and boil old coffee with new. This is uncivilized. Sometimes, rather than be at the trouble of cooking a warm meal, they content themselves with a cold one. They will even eat of an old stew trembling on the verge of sourness. This is an unpardonable sin against the digestive organs.

Then there are the Hasty Cooks, who do everything in a hurry; often running to the extremes of neatness and the reverse. They will not take the time to measure anything accurately; so the tea and coffee are either too weak or too strong, the steak bloody or burnt to a crisp, the potatoes boiled to pieces or of an adamantine hardness. They smash much crockery, are apt to lose considerable temper in the preparation of a meal, and often sit down without appetite and in a state of positive antagonism with themselves and everybody else. Indeed, bad temper is generally an adjunct of hasty cookery. I was once quartered with a man, the ne plus ultra of this phase of California cookery. He always burnt his fingers while preparing breakfast; this made him mad; angry was not the proper term to apply to his condition of mind. I am obliged to refer to him as "mad." We had an unfortunate stove whose constitution was so far gone that the whole top, with the super-imposed pots, pans and kettles, fell in regularly every morning. Then ensued fishing in the fire with sticks for the disorganized stove covers, or desperate snatchings for the same with hands dressed in rags. The profanity on such occasions was dreadful—even to my ears. In revenge, he would kick that stove. The stove would take the kicking in a meek and Christianlike manner. Its resistance to these assaults was passive in its nature, and not wholly agreeable to my gentleman's toes. Forcible projections of household articles in various directions were not uncommon, and his rage used ultimately to concentrate itself upon a quiet little tin pepper-box, which was invariably kicked with difficulty out of the door and regularly brought in again when the storm had subsided.

I always "cleared the kitchen" on such occasions, and took to the bushes. I allowed this gentleman of an excitable temperament to have the whole apartment to himself. Providence threw me in the way of that man, that I might witness the spectacle of humanity in extreme rage, and thus be cured of a similar infirmity. It was a fearful experience.

Fussy Cooks make much more work for themselves than absolutely necessary. They are generally neat, but their neighborhood, while engaged in an avocation for which they falsely imagine themselves fitted by nature, is unpleasant. I once experienced this sort of cook for several months. He could set, and would set, vast numbers of men at work in the preparation of a single meal. He would plan more dishes than his mind was able to grasp at once, or his hands to handle. For instance, he would insist on having hash when there was already a respectable variety of food; and besides, we owned no chopping tray to grind our hash in. He would seduce me into chopping a pile of meat and potatoes on a flat board. You cannot chop hash on a flat board conveniently. It seems inclined to spread and fly in all directions. I endured any amount of martyrdom while living with that person, merely from trying to chop hash on a flat board.

Then he suffered aberration of mind brought on by having too many dishes in the fire, and would run about distractedly with a knife in one hand and a fork in the other, looking for a pot-lid, which was found sometimes at the well or in the hen-coop. I have heard it said that one cannot have too many irons at once on the fire; but I do think that my friend erred in imagining that he could do himself justice when he undertook, as he sometimes did, to shave, dress and cook breakfast all at the same time. In the estimation of the Fussy Cook, I was his inferior. This was because I modestly hinted my disapproval of two hours of preliminary bustle to twenty minutes of hasty mastication. The reverse of the arrangement suits me better. And then I happened to be the slovenly man of the household. In my various experiences, I have at times been the neat man of the firm; that happened when my partner was not so nice as I was. Neither of us were divine in this respect. But the Fussy Cook proved a torment. He raved if things were not exactly in their places—wanted all the pot-lids and tinware polished brightly, insisted on washing the crockery after every meal, and read me so many lectures on slovenliness that I felt in his presence like a nasty, blundering lump of humanity.

Fate once placed me with an Experimental Cook, who was constantly trying new dishes. An old cook-book, which by some chance had found its way into our cabin, was the indirect cause of the waste of large quantities of provisions. Moreover, he entertained plans and inventions of his own which resulted in strange and diabolical mixtures. His culinary victories to his defeats were in the proportion of two to ten. His mind ran mainly to hash. Now, hash that is legitimate home-made hash, I don't disparage. But the Experimental Cook was very much opposed to waste, and accordingly wished to reduce everything left over from our meals to a general olla podrida. During the week the Experimental Cook gloated over recipes for puddings found in that work on cookery, and on Sundays his studies were carried out. So the main body of our Sunday meal would be slighted and cast in the shade by the projected dessert, which generally turned out a wretched failure, a sodden, heavy, watery mass of flour, eggs, and suet, with a concentrated accumulation of plums in its lowest depths. Experiment has accomplished wonders for science, but it has always been attended with danger. The Experimental Cook devoted his time and risked the welfare of his stomach in search of discoveries in the unexplored regions of gastronomy; nor had he any hesitation in risking the stomach of his best friend. I had no idea of becoming a martyr to science. I left him.

There are Fickle and Uncertain Cooks. My life has been partly bound up with this class. They are subject to fits of order and neatness. These are violent, and of short duration. When over, the establishment quietly and gradually travels back into its normal condition of dirt and disorder. There is a place for everything and everything in its place about once a mouth. When the fit is on, the coffee-pot is put up in the closet, and so is the frying-pan; but the home for the coffee-pot is on or under the stove; so is that of the frying-pan. And if the coffee-pot and frying-pan feel more at home unwashed on the stove, and it is more convenient for their master to keep them in that situation, why, there they remain until jerked out of their places by another convulsion of order. This class are also subject to spasms of bed-making. We Californians have all slept in blankets. Bed making means a shaking of these blankets and laying them down again in such a shape as to allow of their being crawled into. I have seen single men who arose to the dignity of sheets. Yes, and I have known men who washed their own sheets and shirts. I know not how they did it. I never could. I have rubbed and soaped with aching back a shirt for hours, and when it was dry it looked like a map. Spots of dirt represented islands and continents, and the clean portions meant water. There is a knack about washing linen which I never could discover—I do not wish to, either.

The result of my observation and experience convinces me that, as a general thing, man cannot compete with woman in housekeeping or family cookery. We become ridiculous in attempting to "lord it" in the kitchen. Californians who have kept "bach" for years are given to vain assumptions of culinary perfection. Let them beware. Confine yourselves to the transportation of coal and kindlings from the cellar and of brown paper parcels from the butcher's, the baker's and the grocer's. This done, keep away from the stove except in the capacity of an humble assistant. Be "'umble"—don't brag about what bread you can make; you may be seduced into the attempt—you may fail. You know how apt bread is to fail at critical and important epochs; and if it should, the last of that failure will never be heard.

[For the Californian.]

RARE-RIPE.

All the bloom-summers of my younger life,
I louged for kindred nature to bequeathe
My fairer self to me;
Until one harvest day, the fruitage Sonth,
Dropped down a luscious windfall in my mouth,
And I knew thee.

Rare-ripe offence! Flushed to perfected bliss,
Rose-tipped and nectar-centred e'er it fell;
I feast, yet famish still:
While thirsts absorb, divine delights increase,
Pulsating either verge of Joy's release
With triple thrill.

O, when our lips met! At the first I knew
Thy prime of subtle juices, mellow pulp,
And flowers full and fine:
Ecstacies of taste and touch did me possess,
Each time thy hand delicious did caress,
I swoon with wine.

Yea, I am caught—yet I would not escape;
Let but the bonds, I say, be closer knit,
That stay me at thy feet.
For, oh, I knew not even what rest meant
Till thou didst rock me into dumb content,
With white arms sweet!

Beyond ourselves stretches a desert world,
Barren of aught to wake a warm desire;
We do acknowledge this:
Perpetual transports circle one blest zone,
Standing in which, beholding each alone,
We smile and kiss.

Morns blush and broaden into crimson days,
And crimson days transmute to tender eves
That sigh for tranced nights:
Oh, thou and I are as a twisted skein,
Whose silken threads have captured all the train
Of Love's delights!

San Francisco, February 1867. W. A. KENDALL.

CALIFORNIA SCENERY.—Messrs Lawrence & Houseworth, the opticians and photographic dealers of this city and the exponents of our California scenery, and have already published and forwarded throughout the Eastern States and Europe, over one thousand different views taken in towns, cities, valleys, and in the mining, mountain, and coast ranges of our State. The most valuable of these are known as the mammoth views of Yo-Semite and the Big-Tree Grove; any one of which invariably attracts a concourse of admirers when placed in the show window of this store. The set consists of thirty views, and is worth nearly one hundred dollars. A choice copy of this set was presented during the present week by Messrs. L. & H. to the Mechanics' Institute Association. Nothing could be more Californian or more appropriate for their New Library Rooms than these magnificent photographs of our famed California scenery.

[For the Californian.]

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.

IMMORTAL Courser—of mortal form!
Proud Science' grand bequest;
There has work been done since thine advent here
Has enfranchised Earth from many a fear
In Grief's insatiate crew.
Onward! tried courier of the storm
With meteor nerves and quiverings warm
And fiery pulses, true
To Heaven's high behest!

Now here! Now there! Flash far and wide
Thy glorious signal gleam!
There is work to do—there are hearts to break,
There are hopes to tell—there are thrones to shake
Within this busy world.
Away! Upon thy timeless ride
Thou hast the speed of light defied,
On in wild triumph whirled
Far as Ambition's dream!

Stride on! Than thought more swift thy speed,
Cleave the unconscious air!
There is work to do—in the city street;
In the Arctic snow; in the Tropic heat,
No bounds thy steps delay.
A myriad leagues of mount and mead
Thou laugh'st to scorn, thou winged steed,
Arrest thee, he who may;
Thy path is everywhere!

Away! There's life on thy breathless leap,
There's Death to foil—away!
There is work to do—for relentless Gold
Hath forged strong fetters, whose power, of old
The victim's doom had sealed.
Now—praise to thee—let the Gold-god creep
Back to his caverns drear and deep;
Truth, victor, stands revealed,
And Freedom wins, to day.

Time, space, thou dost annihilate—
Steed by the lightning fed!
Thou hast plenteous work. In this world of ours,
O'er the ocean cave, by the forest bowers,
Thy burthen thou must bear.
Onward! Triumphant and elate
On thy glowing path, thou barb of fate,
Mighty to do and dare
For living and for dead!

San Francisco, February, 1867. —ISABEL A. SAXON.

CRAFT, OR CHEEK.—A story is going the rounds of the papers, telling how Mrs. Ellen Crafts, who some years ago made her escape from slavery disguised as a gentleman, accompanied by her husband in the character of her servant (he appears to have played the subordinate character ever since), recently at a gentleman's house in London made ex-Governor Eyre of Jamaica and "A. Ward, showman," exceedingly uncomfortable by her impertinent remarks to them regarding their feelings toward the African race. If there is any truth in the story, it only illustrates the well-known fact that persons suddenly raised from a low to a comparatively high position are apt to become vain, supercilious and impudent. No lady, white, black or mixed, would have spoken without occasion to comparative strangers as Mrs. Crafts is reported to have done. We are inclined to think, however, that the whole story is a fabrication. We don't know what social status Artemus Ward maintains in London; but we are certain that no English gentleman, at whose house ex-Governor Eyre is a visitor, would tolerate such rudeness toward his guests. The gentlemen have doubtless erred in opinion and in practice; but that is no excuse for such a flagrant violation of the laws of hospitality and good-breeding as reported in the case above referred to.

THE NEW STYLE OF PHOTOGRAPHS.—By the Eastern journals devoted to the Photographic Art, we learn that a new size and style of picture has been introduced which seems destined to supplant the old style Cartes de Visite. The Philadelphia Photographer of October calls attention to them, and explains the size, which is about three times the size of the ordinary Cartes de Visite, but wider in proportion to the length. The January number of the Photographer gives a magnificent photograph, from life, of a lady, showing the new size and explaining its advantages for portraiture. There is none of that crowding of figure, so often observed in the narrow Cartes de Visite. In fact, the advantages of the new sizes is more especially noticeable for full-length portraits of ladies; exhibiting their dresses and surroundings complete in every particular. Our principal photographers in San Francisco are already taking them, and Snow & Roos are preparing frames and mats especially for the new size. Jacob Shew, 612 Clay street, is devoting especial attention to them, and has produced some very perfect copies of this new style, full length Cartes de Visite, and has on hand albums to receive them.

MEUSSDORFFER—that prince of hatters opens his spring styles of dress and business hats at his store 635 and 637 Commercial street, in this city, and in Sacramento, Marysville and Portland to-day. Meussdorffer always leads the fashion.

DOWN IN A COAL-MINE.

LITTLE I thought when a few years ago I started from London on a visit to Staffordshire, meaning while there to go down a coal-mine—much as a countryman would go to St. Paul's or the Museum—how soon afterwards I should have such bad and fatal experience of these multifarious earthy veins.

I had never seen the Black Country. The Great Western's broad gauge bore us along cushioned and cosey. It was a winter's night, rather showery, but clear. My companions were congenial spirits, and lent their aid so successfully to enliven the journey that we cared little external to our compartment; scarcely noticing the few stoppages we made.

Merriment and chat went round, and chained our attention, until we were at Birmingham. "Change here!" We were all out, and parted, amid heaps of trunks and bags, the jostling of porters and passengers, the smell of steam, and universal scurry.

From here I was alone. It was sufficiently near bedtime to make a lounge grateful, so, tossing my portmanteau under my head, I lay gazing at the lamp. I suppose the apprenticeship I once served to the cradle was not quite forgotten. At all events, the rocking made me drowsy, and I am under the impression that for a few moments I slept. Whether it was so, or whether I merely lay thinking of sleep, I can't say; but certain it is that a peculiar smoky glare startled me into wakefulness. I jumped up, and on either side, as far into the country as I could see, was a spectacle at once impressive, and, to me, novel. I was in the midst of fires. Not a dozen or two, but hundreds. Not bright, dazzling flares, such as the butcher's gas-jet emits, but huge, heavy flames, that burnt, yet illumined little, and wrapt the midnight beyond their immediate circles in a seeming fog.

I let down the window and stood viewing them for some time. What were they?

I was among them early the next day. They were principally blast-furnaces for smelting the iron ore, and rolling mills for putting the metal into the form of bars and sheets. A few were foundries for casting, coke ovens and lime-kilns; but these formed a very small proportion.

The first thing that struck, me on our way to the pits, was the mud. It was not unlike paste made with soot and cinder ashes, rather thin than otherwise. It stuck to my boots, and could not easily be kicked off. Upon raising my head after surveying them, I found I had crushed with my chin a big smut on my shirt-front. Now, if anything will disturb the dignity of a Londoner of rather fastidious taste, it is to splash his snow-white expanse of chest-gear. I had hardly time for my wrath to bubble to the orthodox point, when another "black" alighted on the back of my hand, and I found that the same thing occurred promiscuously as to situation, at regular intervals. There was no help for it while I stayed in the Black Country. I must either don the Church or City clerk; either button my waistcoat up to the top, and only show the white tie, or come the more gaudy scarf and pin.

The indispensible accompaniment of a pit's mouth is that concise arrangement of slim timber that so much resembles the support of the big swing at a fair. At a short distance is the engine-house. A chain that passes from the latter over a wheel at the top of the pit's mouth will raise or lower anything up or down the shaft at a given signal.

A friend who had volunteered to show me the mines consigned me to the care of his brother, who owned several of them in the neighborhood.

I told him I had put on the coarsest clothes my wardrobe would afford. He laughed, and said he'd "rig" me out. For this purpose I was taken to a cottage hard by. The motherly occupant appeared to understand our mission at first glance, and after a friendly "How d'ye do?" left us.

"Get into them," said my new valet-de-chambre, tossing across what appeared to be a heap of rags. I could not conceive what articles of apparel they could be. From a pall to a necktie, there was nothing I'd seen before resembling them.

"Here, you're holding them upside down."

I turned them, and began to have a dim perception that they must be trousers. I don't know what Bond Street would say to the cut. I believe they had been made from a sack divided in the middle, with the edges stitched together.

I was obliged to turn them up round the bottom, and even then the fit was more easy than precise.

The boots matched. Old Dowey could have made such uncouth things.

"You'd better take off your socks; for I don't think they are particularly water-tight," was suggested. I did so.

"Here's the coat."

Another sack, apparently with holes in the corners and top for the arms and neck. If I had never put it on before, I was in sackcloth now. A slouched hat, and I was "rigged out."

He laughed again. "Well, what do you think of 'em?"

"Not over pleasant; but if it's the regular uniform I suppose I mustn't grumble."

The chain, with its four hooked ends, was dangling just above ground.

"You'll have to go down by that," said my friend, pointing to it.

I thought it a dangerous enterprise, but fixed my foot firmly in one of the hooks, and held the chain above. The miner, after a slight hesitation, did the same, gave a sign to the engine-man, and the next instant we were suspended over a cavity two or three hundred feet deep.

After the first few yards our speed increased greatly. We went down, down, into a blacker obscurity, swaying to and fro; and now and then, with a grating bump, were sent against the wet smeary sides.

My companion muttered, "It's too bad."

"What is?"

"Why, they are sending us down as fast as they can to try and scare you; besides, we ought to have had the proper iron lift, that is always used in coming up or down, only you jumped on to the hook and they thought it a good joke to send you down so."

We still descended. There was a dampness about the air peculiar to underground places. Above was the mouth. How small it looked—not bigger than the moon, and gradually decreasing, until at last it was a mere speck. "Look out!" We bumped, jumped off, and for the first time in my life I stood at the bottom of a coal-mine.

Everyone in his childhood has played at being "tipsy," by turning himself round and round until such a giddiness is induced that, after he with difficulty stands still, the objects in the room will continue to chase each other in circuit. Just so I felt for some minutes after I alighted. Sinking with such velocity, I appeared at length to have ceased going down—the sides were rising up—slowly—fast—faster. I saw them scurrying past with the hideous and fantastic mirth of demons I could not but fancy were being released from the regious below.

The feeling soon went off, and we procured lights; nothing but dips stuck on holders. They burnt with an insignificant little flicker, and, totally unreflective as were their surroundings, resembled rushlights in sick-rooms, that show little besides themselves.

We proceeded. No fear of knocking our heads here—the natural roof was three feet above us. I should think we went half a mile, and diverged from the main tunnel before we encountered a gang of workers. Their appearance was picturesque in the extreme. Each had a candle attached to the forehead, and many were stripped to the waist. There were some to bore, and some to load. They were kindly solicitious of my health. Their prevailing complaint was thirst; this interesting feature in mining was pressed upon my particular notice.

The coal is not dug or chipped off. The process by which it is detached is called "blasting."

With what appeared to me to resemble a common crowbar, about four feet long, a hole was pierced as near the top of the seam as possible. In this was put some gunpowder. We had retired to a little distance; the match was lighted and burning. I can scarcely describe the feelings with which I waited the explosion. In this coal-bound passages, miles long, to be waiting until a slow match should fire a charge of powder! I imagined it an enormous cannon about to hurl us with the fragments and débris into eternity. It was a sensation I had not felt since I saw the Indian Sepoys bound back to the gun's mouth awaiting but the command to be blown into countless pieces, I closed my eyes. A momentary sense of pressure, and a bang—during which the drums of my ears seemed almost to meet—and it was over. Two or three tons of this sable rock—torn into blocks of all sizes—lay strewn and scattered, rent from its bed where for ages it had lain securely.

We went back into the main road, for there was some pretence to a road. It was not quite so high here; our heads just escaped the top. There was a perpetual din, swelling louder at intervals—a combination of water rushing in a cavern, and wind roaring on a stormy night interspersed with blows and voices, muffled more or less by distance. This would swell louder, and while I was guessing at the cause, "Stand clear!" and we would have to jump to the side and stand close back to it until some loaded little trucks should pass.

At parts, near the main shaft, where the cutting was pretty straight, these would be worked by attachments from the engine; but farther off, in the more complex ramifications of the mine, horses were employed. Poor old brutes! they were soon tamed by the darkness, let them be ever so unruly at first, and would sink into the monotous ploddings that, except in rare cases, ends only in death.

"Just look up there."

I looked. It was a discarded shaft. Far, far above was the sky. I could catch but a tiny glimpse of it. Underneath, at our feet, a fire was burning; the curling wreaths of smoke slowly ascended, causing an upward draught that ventilated the mine.

"Do you remember that old pit over the other side of the canal that you saw this morning? You asked what smoke it was that came up."

"Yes; quite distinctly."

"Well, this is it; and this is the fire that sends up the smoke."

We went on; doors opened before and closed after without our intervention. The mechanism was human; there was a boy at each.

We passed two or three of these perpendicular apertures, each of which I had seen above in the morning, and which were made known to me by some landmark. They varied from half to three-quarters of a mile distant from each other. The hollow we were traversing differed in size many times, with much the caprice of a river that widens and narrows alternately.

"Do you think you could get through there?"

"Could you?"

"Yes, I could, but perhaps you are not so accustomed to traveling on your back as I am."

"That may be, but I am the smaller of the two, and if it will prevent our having to go all the way back it is worth the trial."

I could not call it a passage, it was so small; it was nothing but a hole. I stooped down and peered into it, Pushing my light far in front, I could see nothing beyond the wick of my dip.

"How long is it?"

"O, not over long. Come on, you must go in feet first, on your back. Here, I'll carry your light.

I gave it him, and he disappeared. I followed, legs in front, not quite on my back, but with the body inclining, so as to be supported entirely on feet and arms. It was slow work,—twenty yards tired me. I looked ahead; there was my companion, with the candles, wriggling along like a glowworm or something uncomfortably warm.

Raising myself to observe this, my forehead hit the top. It was cold and clammy, like the touch of a corpse, but damper, for it left my face wet. Here, as elsewhere about the pit, on the top and sides, on the doors, and even on the trollies and ropes, there was a trickly exudation that to my unaccustomed sense chilled with every contact.

I stayed a little to rest; my warm breath was thrown back. I felt oppressed, but after a bit struggled on, and was at length enabled by a slight increase in the height of the passage to crawl on hands and knees, to walk crouched; to raise myself a little, and ultimately to resume my proper attitude.

"You can walk through that; one of the chaps will take you over."

There was a pool of water—how deep I know not—extending as far as I could see. It proved to be no more than eighteen inches or two feet deep at most. One of the men made very light of carrying me on his back, and after some distance of this kind of travel, deposited me at the foot of a shaft three miles from the one I had descended four hours before.

We waited; the signals were given, and soon down came the lift. We began the ascent. How cheerful looked the glimmer of light aloft, by degrees expanding—growing—until we were atop, and a flood of heaven's light burst on our dazzled gaze! Then I felt a rapturous emotion such as few epochs in our lives yield.

Disrobing at the cottage, I found how necessary was the precaution to submit to be "rigged out." Dirt-begrimed and wet, I was a sorry object. A broken bit of looking-glass, the only mirror I could obtain, showed me an image I did not recognize, although I was on pretty good terms with myself; so, not being able to procure a suitable reflection, I reflected for myself, and first came the reflection that hundreds of my fellow-men are condemned to this life of danger and darkness for their bread.

The mine, as I had seen it, was unpleasant truly; the work I had witnessed arduous, to be sure; but this was by no means the worst, for there comes a season when this mere hole-bore—the worst feature of which that I had experienced being its black dampness—becomes, with the instantaneous rapidity of a fire-flash, a hell-spot and a sepulchre, where our brethren, absorbed probably in the ordinary thoughts of worldly work, are precipitantly hurled to the judgment of an all-searching God; where mothers are rendered childless, where wives are made widows, where weeping and lamentation are generated, and where the finest tendrils of mortal existence are lacerated and left bleeding, never to be healed.

Such a season is this; and when we draw in circle round a festive fire, and are cheered by the merry coal blaze,—when we press the warm hand that is dear to us, let us think of the many so suddenly no more: let us remember the poor miner in his hour of trouble; let us spare a plum from our rich Christmas pudding, and send it to the mine.

The Philadelphia Press gives a summary of the last report of the Girard Estate. The estimated gross revenues for 1867 '68 are $330.000, an increase from last year of over fifty per cent. The value of the real estate is constantly increasing, and as it cannot be sold, or leased for a longer period than five years, it must always furnish a large and steady revenue. The trust owns nearly two hundred properties in Philadelphia, consisting of stores, dwellings, wharves, lots and farms, beside valuable coal and timber lands in Schuylkill and Columbia counties. Some of the rents have been doubled, others trebled. It is to be hoped that the fund will soon be able to support twelve hundred orphans.

S.T-1860-X.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengtben and invigorute.
Tbey create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengtben tbe system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipution.
They cure Liver Complaiut and Nervous Headache.
They are tbe best Bitters in the world. They make tbe weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and berbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting tbe kettle from tbe fire I scalded my self very severely—one band almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * * Tbe Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved tbe pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Pbilada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all case, wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavin, &c., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest tbing," and tbe most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in tbe sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywbere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roacbes, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo bits we can save the bites and bills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Darnes & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle.

DR. H. A. BENTON,

The ELECTRO-MAGNETIC PHYSICIAN, is now cosily fixed in his new quarters, over Congress Hall, Busb street, adjoining the Russ House, and is prepared to treat patients in all the best modes of curing. The Electro-Medicated and Hot Air Baths will do wonders in many cases, in breaking up obstructions, and if properly attended afterwards, will insure success.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE PICTURES TAKEN IN THIS CITY ARE FAR superior to those taken in the east and Europe. We account for tbis simply from our atmosphere, whicb is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at bome. The BEST GALLERY to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few bigh buildings surrounding it. The New York, on Third street, below Jessie, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, anu are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries. *

WAGONS.

MILLS & EVANS, IMPORTERS OF THOROUGH-BRACE Wagons, light express, two and three spring Wagons, suitable for milk-men and furniture dealers, and others wishing light and durable Wagons. Their Wagons are made expressly for the California market, and Mills & Evans' is the only firm which receives Wagons from the celebrated manufactory of A. W. Sanborn & Co., Manchester, N. H. This latter firm stands A No. 1 in the east, and their wagons have stood the test of our California climate, and are sold by Mills & Evans fifty per cent. lower than any other establishment on the Pacific coast. Call and examine their Wagons, at No. 587 Market street, opposite the Metropolitan market. *

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

FAUST CELLAR,

Beer and Wine Saloon,

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets, San Francisco.

A. L. THIELE, - - - - - - - Proprietor

ALWAYS ON HAND, Wholesale and Retail, Westphalia Hams, Russian CAVIAR, Sardines, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, and other European Delicacies. ☞ The finest brands of Liquors, Wines and Cigars; Seltzer Water.

FISHING AND HUNTING PARTIES fitted out at the shortest notice.

L. G. SCHORD,

SUCCESSOR TO
WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine
Wines, Liquors and Segars,
NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,
Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,

LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,

Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL-KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN

WINES AND LIQUORS.

NO. 16 THIRD STREET,

Between Market and Stevenson Streets. San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,

No. 635 Washington Street,

Opposite Maguire's Opera House,

FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS,

Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.

Hot Lunch Served from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.

A. ASTREDRO, - - - PROPRIETOR

TOWNE & BACON,

Book and Job Printers,
Have the Largest Office,
Do the most work,
And do it better
Than other offices
In this City,
536
Try them
With a Job,
And you will be
Satisfied the above
Statements are facts.
Their office is at 536
Clay St., below Montgom'y,
Over Pacific Fruit Market.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order.

FOR POSTERS, HANDBILLS,

AND

Show Work of All Kinds,

GO TO THE

COMMERCIAL PRINTING HOUSE

OF

FRANCIS & VALENTINE,

517 Clay street, and 510, 512 and 514 Commercial street.

DO YOU WANT ANY

PRINTING?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

GREAT REDUCTION!

FURNITURE

At Less than Gold Cost,

AT THE WAREROOMS OF

J. PEIRCE & CO.,

Nos. 415, 417, 419 California street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

WE ARE NOW CLOSING out our last year's stock of FURNITURE etc., at UNPARALLELED LOW RATES.

It comprises the LARGEST AND FINEST assortment in the city—manufactured from the Latest Patterns, and in the most durable manner.

Parties about to purchase are invited to call and satisfy themselves of the correctness of these assertions prior to buying elsewhere.

J. PEIRCE & CO.,
415, 417 and 419 California street.

BRANCH STORES—No. 715 Market street between Third and Fourth; and Main street, Stockton.

DR. HAYDEN,

Dentist,

653 Clay street, between Kearny and Montgomery, San Francisco.

RHEUMATISM CAN BE CURED

BY USING

Healy's Rheumatic Liniment,

Which is warranted to cure the most obstinate cases of CHRONIC OR INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.

It relaxes the muscles, removes the pain, and restores health and vigor to the system.

READ THE FOLLOWING:

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb 6, 1866.

MR. HEALY—Dear Sir: Having witnessed many cures effected by your Rheumatic Liniment, I take great pleasure in universally recommending it to those in search of a really good article.

Yours, &c., FRANK V. SCUDDER.

MR. FRANK HEALY: I suffered considerable rheumatic pains in both shoulders for a long time. I tried many remedies to get relief, but to no purpose. I was advised to try a bottle of "Healy's Rheumatic Liniment," which I did, and it has greatly relieved me. I am now using the second bottle, and am confident that in a few days I shall be well.

Yours, &c., R. PAGE,
316, Montgomery street.

San Francisco, Feb, 9, 1866.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 13, 1866.

To F. HEALY: I have heard much and seen practical proofs of your Liniment, and I endorse all you claim for it. L. GOETZ.
335, 337, Pine street.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 12, 1866.

Dear Sir: I have used the bottle of Liniment you sent me, and it has done me good. Please send me another. WM. HORR,
718, Battery street

HEALY'S RHEUMATIC LINIMENT is for sale by all Druggists on the Pacific coast.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Wholesale Agents, CRANE & BRIGHAM, and R. H. McDONALD & Co., SAN FRANCISCO.

PIANOS!

PIANOS!

AT

AT PRICES FROM $150 TO $600,

AT WALTER S. PIERCE'S PIANO ROOMS, 536 MARKET STREET, opposite Second.

N. B.—The highest cash price paid for Second-hand Pianos.

NATHANIEL GRAY & CO.,

UNDERTAKERS,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

McDOUGALL & MARQUIS,

Architects,

328 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

B. M'DOUGALL. J. MARQUIS.

REFERS TO Messrs. Elam & Howes, Clay street, below Battery; Messrs. Hatch & Co., (R. W. Brangon & T. H. Hatch,) Washington street below Battery; A. J. Coghill, Esq., Front street, corner of Clay; Wm. J. Adams, Esq., (Adams, Blinn & Co.,) Piers 17 and 19, Stewart street; Joseph Rich, Esq., Bush street below Turnverein Hall; Hon. M. S. Latham, London and San Francisco Bank; Wm. B. Johnston, Esq., Insurance Building, 412 and 414 Montgomery street; James Brooks, Esq., Editor "Golden Era."

B. MACKAY,

ARCHITECT,

NO. 434 CALIFORNIA STREET,

Next door to the Pacific Insurance Company.

GEO. BORDWELL,

ARCHITECT,

No. 224 Montgomery street,

Opposite the entrance of the Russ House, San Francisco

Removal!!

JOHN F. SNOW.

COLORING, CLEANING AND RESTORING OF FEATHERS, Kid Gloves, Silks, Woolens, Furs, etc., has removed to the new building of the "MECHANICS' INSTITUTE," opposite the old stand, 25 Post street, between Montgomery and Kearny.

☞ 'RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA' for sale as usual.

JOHN GORMAN,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

No. 619 Merchant street,

Above Montgomery.....(South side.)

DRESSING FOR CHURCH.

Has anybody heard the bell?
You have! dear me, I know full well
I'll never dress in time—
For mercy's sake, come help me, Luce,
I'll make my toilet very spruce—
This silk is quite sublime!

Here, lace this gaiter for me—do;
"A hole! you say? plague take the shoe;
Please, Lule, try and hide it—
Just thiuk, it's Sunday, and, my soul,
I cannot wear it with a hole!
The men will surely spy it.

They're always peepiug at our feet,
(Though, to he sure, they needu't peep,
The way we hold our dresses!)
I'll disappoint them, though to-day,
"And cross myself," pray, did you say?
Don't laugh at my distresses!

Now, Lucie, pray fell my waterfall;
Do you think it large? ain't it too small?
What hother these things give!
My rat and mice, do they set straight?
Please hurry, Lucie, I know I'm late—
"There's Willie!" as I live.

How splendidly the silk will rustle!
(Please hand my "self-adjusting hustle,"
My corset and my hoop)
There now, I'll take five skirts or six—
Do hurry, Lucie, and help me fix,
You know I cannot stoop?

"How shall I say my prayers to-day?
As if the girls went to church to pray!
How can you he so foolish?
Here dump this rihhon in cologne;
"What for?" to paint, you silly one!
Now, Lucie, don't he mulish.

Now, then, my hat—how he ahhors
This thing!—it's big as all out doors—
The frightful sugar scoop!
Thank Heaven, my cloak is handsome, too;
It cost enough to be, I know—
(Straighten this horrid hoop!)

My handkerchief and gloves you'll find
Just in that drawer. Luce! are you blind?
(Does my dress trail?)
It's all the fashion, now, you know;
(Pray, does the paint aud powder show
Through my loose vail?)

Thank you, my dear, I b'lieve I'm dressed;
The saints he praised! the day of rest
Comes only once in seven,
For if, on all the other six,
This trouble I should have to fix,
I'd never get to Heaven!

ADVANTAGE OF ADVERTISING.—Ask Barnum what he thinks of the advantages of advertising. He will tell you that on one occasion he saw a friend of his in his museum (where there were three hundred of people) looking here and there for a particular individual. Barnum witnessed his labors for some time, when he called to him and inquired who he was looking for. He replied "John Smith." Whereupon Barnum mounted a platform, quieted the assemblage, and in a loud voice asked, "Is there such a man in this room as John Smith?" The quick answer, "Yes, here I am," produced Mr. Brown the person he had been looking for for half an hour or more. "Now, Mr. Brown," said Barnum, "look at the beauties of advertising: you might have searched for Mr. Smith all day and not have found him; but I made my wants known to the public, and in one minute I found the man. Ye must advertise; advertise is the word." You merchants East who desire to sell goods, must advertise. Advertise is the word, gentlemen.

POPULAR FOLLIES.—To think the more a man eats, the fatter and stronger he will become.

To believe that the more children study at school, the faster they will learn.

To conclude that, if exercise is good for the health, the more violent and exhausting it is the more good is done.

To imagine that every hour taken from sleep is an hour gained.

To act upon the presumption that the smallest room in the house is large enough to sleep in.

To imagine that because the dirty children on our streets or on the highway are hearty and healthy that therefore it is healthy to be dirty; forgetting that continuous exposure to the pure out-door air is such a powerfull agency for health, that those who live thus are well in spite of rags and filth.

Important Notice
TO
TAX-PAYERS.

THE ATTENTION OF EVERY CITIZEN OF THE City and County of San Francisco is called to the following provisions of the Law in relation to the assessment of REAL ESTATE AND PERSONAL PROPERTY for State and City and County Taxes:

"Between the first Monday in February and the second Monday in March, EVERY PERSON, corporation, association, company or firm, owning, claiming, or having any interest in, or having the POSSESSION, CHARGE OR CONTROL of any real estate, or any PERSONAL PROPERTY, shall deliver to the City and County Assessor, at his office, a statement under oath, of all such real estate or personal property, and the CASH VALUE of such personal property." (Statutes 1862, page 57.)

"All property, both real and personal, of every kind, nature, and description whatever, within this State, whether owned by individuals or corporations, and whether its owner be a RESIDENT OR NON RESIDENT of this State, is liable to taxation; and all persons, corporations, and associations doing business in this State, either as principals or partners, whether special or otherwise, and not residents of the State, shall be assessed and taxed on all sums invested in any manner in said business, in this State, the same as if they were residents of this State; and said taxes shall be collected from the property within this State of said persons, corporations, associations, or firms." (Statutes 1866, page 803.)

Printed copies of the form of statement, as prescribed by law, can be obtained at the Assessor's Office, City Hall, without charge. WILLIAM R. WHEATON, 1c9 City and County Assessor.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, on the
S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
With all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. The Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find in this Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

A Large Reading Room is attached to the Hotel,
Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,
Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr., Proprietor.

MASONIC TEMPLE,
Montgomery and Post streets, San Francisco.

TO THE SICK!
Cures Without Medicines.

Experience of 25 years [15th (1866) in San Francisco,] enables DR. BOURNE to Guarantee Cures! He performs all he promises—more, if possible. Consultations Free. Call or send for circulars.

10 MASONIC TEMPLE, POST STREET.

A. J. PLATE,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
Guns, Rifles and Pistols.

ALSO,
COLT'S AND DERINGER PISTOLS, Powder, Shot, Lead, Caps, and Gun Trimmings, &c., &c.,
NO. 411 SANSOME STREET,
Between Commercial and Sacramento Sts., San Francisco.

☞ New Work made to order, and Repairing executed in the neatest manner.

JOHN LOCHHEAD'S
STEAM ENGINE WORKS
Beale Street, near Mission, San Francisco.

STEAM ENGINES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION BUILT to order—Marine, Stationary, or Locomotive.
HOISTING AND PUMPING ENGINES,
Portable Engines of all sizes,
Donkey Pumps, Etc., Etc., Etc.

The attention of the parties engaged in shipping or inland navigation is called to the SUPERIOR WORKMANSHIP
of Mr. LOCHHEAD, who has been in the business in San Francisco for the last fourteen years and enjoys the reputation of having built ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN STEAM ENGINES.

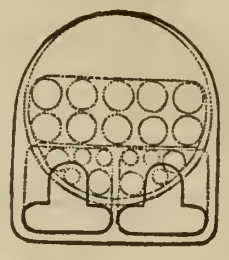
Screw Propellers of all kinds, and Steam Boat Machinery generally, made to order, and warranted to give perfect satisfaction in every particular.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

FULTON FOUNDRY & IRON WORKS
HINCKLEY & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
STEAM ENGINES,
Quartz, Flour and Saw Mills,
Mining Machinery, and all kinds of Iron and Brass Castings,
45, 47 AND 49 FIRST STREET
Between Market and Mission—San Francisco.

BRODIE'S IMPROVED
QUARTZ-CRUSHER.

NEPTUNE IRON WORKS.



Corner Mission and Fremont streets, San Francisco.

MARINE, LOCOMOTIVE AND ALL KINDS OF
HIGH-PRESSURE STEAM BOILERS
Manufactured.

The proprietor imports his own C. H. and B. Iron across the Isthmus, and Tubes of every size. Other parties can never blockade the market. He has made arrangements with the best houses in the East to furnish him with everything in the shape of Iron he wants.

All Boilers guaranteed and tested by U. S. Boiler Inspector before they are sent out of the shop, at my expense. ☞ All kinds of Sheet Iron and Water Pipe, Coal Oil Stills, Wrought Iron Worms, etc., manufactured to order. OLD BOILERS REPAIRED.

D. CAMERON.

PIONEER WORKS.
KITTREDGE & LEAVITT,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Fire Proof Doors and Shutters,

Bank Vaults, Prison Cells, Balconies, Awnings, Gratings, Iron Fence, Stairs, etc,
Corner Fremont and Market street, San Francisco.

Constantly on hand a large assortment of Second Hand Fire Proof Doors and Shutters.

Also, manufacture to order the California Burglar and Fire-Proof Safe, with the Burglar's Lock invented by Mr. W. C. Bussey, of Jackson, Amador county, Cal. No Key required to open this State. It is done by Mathematica Calculation. Call and examine for yourselves, at our Works,
THIS LOCK PUT ON SAFES NOW IN USE

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

V. KINGWELL. JOS. H. WEED, SAM'L WHITE.

SAN FRANCISCO
Foundry and Machine Works,
Northeast corner Fremont and Mission streets,
Manufacturers of
MARINE AND STATIONARY ENGINES,
Quartz Machinery, Saw, Flour and Sugar Mills, Mining Pumps, Hoisting Gear, Agricultural Implements, etc.
ALSO,
Wine, Cider, Cotton and Tobacco Presses of the latest Improved Patterns.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS,
Of all sizes, constantly on hand; Quartz Mill Shoes and Dies warranted to be made of the best white iron.

Dunbar's Improved Self-Adjusting Piston-Packing, requires no springs or screws; is always steam-tight, without excessive friction, and never gets slack or leaky.

MACHINERY, OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS,
Bought, sold, or exchanged. Bolt Cutting and Castings at the lowest market rates.
DEVOE, DINSMORE & CO.

WILLIAM BRODIE,
California Foundry,
FREMONT STREET, NEAR MARKET,
San Francisco.

LIGHT AND HEAVY CASTINGS
Of every description, made to order.
Special attention paid to all kinds of HOUSE WORK, PLAIN and ORNAMENTAL.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
J. D. Arthur & Co., corner of California and Davis.

ARCHITECTS.
Townsend & Wyncken, 405 California.

AUCTIONEERS.
Cohh & Sinton, 407 California street.

BALL AND RACKET COURT.
Thomae Kelly, 846 Howard street.

BILLIARD SALOONS.
A. B. Brown, 328 Montgomery street.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
E. F. Arnold, 538 Market street near Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgumery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CARPETS.
P. F. Loughran & Co., 407 Sansome street.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, removed 18 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery.
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Musgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyer & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
Waters & Dillon, (Billiard Saloon,) 314 Montgomery st.
G. G. Burnett, (Apothecary,) 330 Montgomery.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
N. P. Cole & Co., 21 Sutter and 524 Market streets.

GROCERS.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street.

HAY AND GRAIN.
J. B. Holmes & Co., 110 Market street.

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 229 Pacific street.
John Steinmann, 323 Pine.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, Agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 266 Front, cor Cal
Firemens Fund Ins. Co., S.E. cor. Montg'y and Pine
Occidental Ins Co., S W. cor. Montgom'y and California
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.
White & Young, 211 Pine street.

LUMBER.
Armstrong, Sheldon & Co., corner California and Davis and 124 Market.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st

NOTARY PUBLIC,
H. S. Tibbey, 604, Montgomery street.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second
C. Weiderhold & Co., 685 Market near Third.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.
Daly & Hawkins, 120 Montgomery street.
Dam & Sutherland, 320 Montgomery.
Geo. W. Chapin, 338 Montgomery.
John Pforr, 328 Montgomery.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Broe., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scale 120 California street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. G Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

STOVES AND TIN WARE.
A. Swigert, corner Fifth and Folsom.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

WOOD AND COAL YARD.
Flynn & O'Grady, 860 Howard street.

MR. BARNUM'S BALCONY.

The following hit is from the Musical Review, which appeared in the good old days of the New York Museum, at the corner of Broadway and Ann street.

Mr. Barnum was sitting in his office in the Museum, when he heard a knock at the door.

"Come in," said he.

The door opened, and a trombone entered. Mr. Barnum stared. The trombone was followed by an arm, and the arm by a body, the body belonging to no less a personage than Mr. Eli Fant.

"Mr. Barnum?" said Mr. Fant, inquiringly.

"That's my name," said that gentleman.

"Good morning," said Mr. Fant.

"Good morning," said Mr. Barnum.

"I see that you have a band on your balcony," began Mr. Flint.

"Yes," said Mr. Barnum.

"And I came to see if I could get a situation as trombone."

"I presume you can," said Mr. Barnum, "if we can agree upon terms."

"During what hours shall I play?" asked Mr. Fant.

"They usually play," said Mr. Barnum, "from two to three in the afternoon, and six to eight in the evening."

"What is the place worth?" said Mr. Fant.

"Five dollars a week?" said Mr. Barnum, inquiringly.

"Very well," said Mr. Fant, with great satisfaction. He had not expected more than three or four.

"You can begin to-day, if you like," said Mr. Barnum; "the payments are weekly."

"Very well," said Mr. Fant.

In accordance with this agreement, Mr. Fant's trombone did duty for a week for Barnum, and very hard, too, he blew away on his trombone. At the end of the week he called on Mr. Barnum for his week's salary.

"I will make out a bill if you like," said Mr. Barnum.

"If you please," said Mr Fant.

After a little turning over of leaves and comparing of books, Mr. Barnum handed him the bill. He read it over once, twice, three times, looking every time more and more mystified. At last he said:

"Mr. Barnum, you have made a little mistake here, I believe?"

"Eh?" said Mr. Barnum, "not that I am aware of."

"Yes," said Mr. Fant, smiling. He could not help smiling to think how Mr. Barnum would laugh when he learned where the mistake was.

"It's rather a funny mistake. I don't see how you came to make it. The bill reads:

"'Mr. Eli Fant to P. T. Barnum, Dr.

"'To privilege of playing a trombone in his museum for week ending May 15, 1853, $5.'"

"Well," said Mr. Barnum, "I believe it was five dollars, wasn't it?"

"Ye-es," said Mr. Fant, perplexed, "I believe it was. But I didn't look at it in that light."

"In what light did you look at it?" said Mr. Barnum.

"W-h-y," said Mr. Fant, still more perplexed, "I thought you paid me five dollars, not I you."

"Oho, no," said Mr. Barnum. "This is the state of the case: There are quite a number of persons in this city who wish to practice such instruments, but cannot do it at home on account of disturbing the neighbors. So I let them a standing up place in the balcony, and each gentleman who comes here brings what instrument he likes, and practices whatever he wants to, without disturbing anybody; that is, anybody we care anything about."

The office door opened, and the trombone went out, followed by Mr. Fant, while Mr. Barnum proceeded to make out his bills against the other instruments. Mr. Fant has since given up the trombone.

The last wife of Brigham Young is named Maria Folsom. Her former residence was at Council Bluffs, Iowa. She is an imperious looking young beauty of the Grecian, rather than the Roman order, and is very imperious and jealous.

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

B M. HARTSHORNE, President.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.
On 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central American.

STEAMERS FOR MARCH.

March 9—SACRAMENTO, Capt. J. M. Cavarly, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.
March 19—CONSTITUTION, Capt. W. F. Lapidge, connecting with OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Maury.
March 30—GOLDEN AGE, Captain James T. Watkins, connecting with RISING STAR, Capt Furber.

Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

These steamers will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

Through tickets to Liverpool by the "Cunard," "Inman" and "National" Steamship Lines can be obtained at P. M. S. S. Co.'s office in San Francisco.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Wells, Fargo & Co.

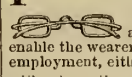
The splendid steamship COLORADO will be dispatched on April 3d, for Hongkong via Kanagawa, carrying passengers, mails and freight.

The steamship HERMANN, Capt. M. P. Nolan, will be dispatched on Friday, March 1, for Yokohama, carrying passengers and freight, and the U. S. mails.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

PRESERVE YOUR SIGHT.



PERFECT SPECTACLES EXactly suited to the Eyes will enable the wearer to pursue the most minute employment, either by day or artificial light, without creating that sense of weakness or fatigue to the organ generally complained of by those using ill-suited or common Spectacles.

PRICE of Perfect Glasses, $2 50, and upward. Sent pre-paid to any post office on the Coast. Applicants by mail will receive a circular containg directions, etc.

Address C. MULLER, Optician,
205 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. - - - Petaluma.
EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

L. G. SCHORD,
SUCCESSOR TO
WILLIAM P. LORING & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in Fine
Wines, Liquors and Segars,
NO. 534 MERCHANT ST.,
Between Montgomery and Sansome sts.

Good Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Families and Clubs supplied on Short Notice.

MARTIN GROSTETTA,
LATE OF VIRGINIA CITY,
Would respectfully inform his friends and the public that he has purchased the WELL KNOWN SALOON previously occupied by THOS. DOYLE, 535 SACRAMENTO ST., above the What Cheer House. The best kind of Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand. Passengers' Stores carefully put up to order.

JOHN TAYLOR,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
WINES AND LIQUORS.
NO. 16 THIRD STREET,
Between Market and Stevenson Streets. San Francisco.

ASTREDO EXCHANGE,
No. 635 Washington Street,
Opposite Maguire's Opera House,
FINE IMPORTED WINES, LIQUORS,
Native Wines and Bitters, English Ale and Porter.
Hot Lunch Served from 11 A M. to 2 P. M.
A. ASTREDRO, - - - PROPRIETOR

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York.

Splendid Presents
TO SEND ABROAD.
STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS
.....OF.....
California Scenery!
A SERIES OF OVER
ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!
ILLUSTRATING
The different Processes of Mining, the Mammoth Trees of Calaveras County, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley, Views of all the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast.
PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE,
And Published by
LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
OPTICIANS,
317 & 319 Montgomery Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
N. B.—CATALOGUES containing a complete LIST OF VIEWS, sent to any part of the world, FREE of POSTAGE.

WM. O. BREYFOGLE,
(Successor to WARE & MOSHER,)
NO. 26 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Manufacturer and Dealer in
SASH, DOORS, BLINDS & SHUTTERS,
From Kiln-Dried Lumber—at the Lowest Rates.
Orders from the country will receive prompt attention

THEODORE KALLENBERG,
No. 416 Market street, - - - San Francisco,
Machinist,
Maker of Models for Inventors, Drawing Instruments, Small Machines, Philosophical Instruments, Scales and Weights, all kinds of Brass and Iron Work.
REPAIRING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.

Asphaltum Roofing.
PAVEMENTS, ROOFING,
CELLAR FLOORS, WATER HOUSES,
And all kinds of
Asphaltum Work,
Done at shortest notice, and at moderate prices, by
M. BONNET,
Office—Express Building (up stairs),
N. E. cor. Montgomery and California sts., San Francisco.

NOTARY PUBLIC—
SPANISH NOTARY
The undersigned having been commissioned by Gov. Lowns Notary Public, vice Henry Dreschfeld, deceased, has removed his office to 509 California street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co., where he will be pleased to see his former patrons, and receive a share of public patronage
A. G. RANDALL,
Notary Public, Broker, Translator, etc.
No. 509 California street, opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.

DOCTOR DEMAREST'S
Private Medical Office,
617 KEARNY STREET,
Near Commercial, San Francisco.
OFFICE HOURS: From 9 A. M., till 4 P. M.

CORNS!
DR. V. POPPER,
Surgeon Chiropedist,
No 20 Montgomery street, between Post and Sutter, San Francisco. Office hours from 9 A. M to 5 P. M.
Offers his services to the public as an Operator on such excrescences as hard and soft corns, enlarged joints, club nails, bunions, nails penetrating the flesh, warts, etc.

DEXTER STABLES,
Bush Street, between Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels, San Francisco.
W. G. JONES, - - - - - PROPRIETOR

GEO. T. CASEBOLT & CO.,
Importers of
Hardwood Lumber,
ALL KINDS OF

Carriage and Wagon Materials, Coach Trimming and Hardware.
315 PINE STREET,
Near corner of Sansome, San Francisco.

D. J. OLIVER
101, 103 and 105 Front street, 110 Pine street.
ON THE
NORTH-WEST CORNER PINE AND FRONT STREETS,
Where he offers for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
200 & 202 MONTGOMERY STREET,
Corner of Bush,
SAN FRANCISCO.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!
NOW IS THE TIME
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New Nn. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old Nn 17
Have received a Large Stock of
GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.
Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.
H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco

VAN VLECK & KEITH,
Designers and Engravers
ON WOOD,
No. 611 Clay street, San Francisco.
WM. KEITH. D. VAN VLECK.

E. POWER,
Architectural and Ornamental
WOOD CARVER
—AND—
COMPOSITION ORNAMENT MANUFACTURER, ETC.,
Robinson & Co.'s Mills,
30 and 32 California Street, San Francisco.

WILSON & EVANS,

No. 513 Clay street,
Importers and Dealers in
FIREARMS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION,
SHOT GUNS, Flasks and Pouches, Eley's Caps, Wads, and all kinds of Breech-Loading Ammunition. Fishing-Tackle in great variety, American and English Rods, Silk, Linen and Sea Lines, Artificial Bait and Flies in every variety.
WOSTENHOLM'S POCKET CUTLERY
NEW WORK made to order. Repairing done in the best manner, and warranted to give satisfaction.
WILSON & EVANS.

Adams, Dentist, 423 Montgomery

MY WIFE'S PIANO.

The deed is accomplished. My wife has got a piano. It came on a dray. Six men carried it into the parlor, and it grunted awfully. It weighs a ton, and shines like a mirror, and has carved cupids climbing up on its limbs. And such lungs—whew! My wife has commenced to practice, and the first time she touched the machine I thought we were in the midst of a thunder-storm, and the lightning had struck the crockery-chest. The cat, with tail erect, took a bee-line for a particular friend on the back fence. The baby awoke, and the little fellow tried his best to beat the instrument, but he couldn't do it. It beat him.

A teacher has been introduced into the house. He says he is the last of Napoleon's grand army. He wears a huge mustache, looks at me fiercely, smells of garlic, and goes by the name of Count Runawaynevercomebackagain-by. He played an extract de opera, the other night. He first ran his fingers through his hair twice, then grinned, then cocked his eye up at the ceiling, like a monkey looking for flies, and then down came one of his fingers, and then I heard a delightful sound, similar to that produced by a cockroach dancing on the tenor string of a fiddle. Down came another finger, and I was reminded of the wind whistling through the knot-hole of a hen-coop. He touched his thumb, and I thought I was in an orchard, listening to the distant braying of a jackass. Now he run his fingers along the keys, and I thought of a boy rattling a stick upon a store-box or a picket-fence. All of a sudden he stopped, and I thought something had happened. Then he came down with both fists, and, oh! Lord! such a noise was never heard before. I imagined I was in the cellar, and a ton of coal was about falling on my head.

A LITERAL MEANING.

The last Harper's Monthly is responsible for the following:

Saunders, mine host of the Tremont, is a rare joke-loving hombre, and can tell a story in an inimitable manner, and appreciate a joke even when the point tells against himself. Several years ago a tall, loose-limbered, foolish-appearing loon came in to the supper-table in a slow and measured manner, and attracted attention by the voracity with which he made away with the eatables. Having devoured the portion of several men, he called at Saunders's desk, and paying his "four bits," drawled out the question in a stuttering way, "I say, Cap, hev you got more heds than you want? for I thought ef you had I'd take one, and ef you didn't hev more'n you wanted I'd go somewhar else and take one." Mine host wondered at the queerness of his style of language, but answered that if he wanted lodgings he could be accommodated—that he still had some spare beds. The stranger came out with his dust and was shown to a double-bedded room, occupied by a little Irishman Before daybreak Saunders was awakened by hearing stealthy footsteps in the dining-hall, and hastily throwing on some garments he proceeded to investigate, pistol in hand. Just as he reached the hall-door he heard a voice in a smothered tone crying, "Saunders! Saunders! who did you put in my room, sure? for the murthering thafe has stole my boots!" It was the little Irishman prowling around in his stockings; and the two hastily proceeded to the room of the late guest, found it sans him, Mike's boots, and the bed, blankets, sheets, and pillow gone. The suggestion about the stranger's "taking a bed" had been acted upon, and it was so rich a sell no attempt was made to apprehend the thief, although heard of at every mining camp along the river for miles, and supposed by all to be a "Jew peddler with his pack on his back."

The following simple rule of determining whether a mine is rich or not, has been found by the Montana Post to be almost infallible, and is cheerfully offered for the benefit of the public: We consult the records of the courts. If we discover that a lawsuit is or has been connected with the lode, we have no hesitation in asserting that it is valuable property. We never heard of any conflict about the ownership or discovery of a worthless claim.

N. P. COLE & CO.,
WHOLESALE
Furniture Warehouse,

No. 314 Pine street, San Francisco.

LOWEST RATES AND MOST COMPLETE STOCK ON THE COAST.

RETAIL STORE,

Nos. 524 Market, and 21 Sutter streets—next door to the Metropolitan Market.

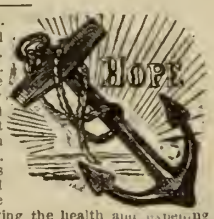
HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM
PRICE 50 CTS

A safe and speedy remedy for all Bronchial affections, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Lungs or Chest, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, and all difficulties arising from a sudden cold, readily yield to its healing powers.
PRICE 50 CENTS.
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
Cor Sansome & Commercial streets.
Also Wholesale and Retail dealers in Domestic and Foreign Drugs, Patent Medicides, Chemicals, Trusses, Fancy Goods, Toilet Articles, etc., etc.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE OF POTASS.
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled With Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."
SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets.

CLEANSE THE BLOOD.



WITH CORRUPT, DISordered or vitiated Blood, you are sick all over. It may burst out in Pimples, or, Sores, or in some active disease, or it may merely keep you listless, depressed and good for nothing. But you cannot have good health while your blood is impure. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA purges out these impurities and stimulates the organs of life into vigorous action, restoring the health and expelling disease. Hence it rapidly cures a variety of complaints which are caused by impurity of the blood, such as Scrofula, or Kings' Evil, Tumors, Ulcers, Sores, Eruptions, Pimples, Blotches, Boils, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose, or Erysipelas, Tetter, or Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Cancer or Cancerous Tumors, Sore Eyes, Female Diseases, such as Retention, Irregularity, Suppression, Whites, Sterility, also Syphilis or Venerial Diseases, Liver Complaints, and Heart Diseases. Try AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and see for yourself the surprising activity with which it cleanses the blood and cures these disorders.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar. Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, bitter disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself has become synonymous with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound "Sarsaparilla," and intend to supply such a remedy as shall rescue the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. We think we have ground for believing it has virtues which are irresistible by the ordinary run of the diseases it is intended to cure. We can only assure the sick, that we offer them the best alterative which we know how to produce, and we have reason to believe, it is by far the most effectual purifier of the blood yet discovered by any body.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is so universally known to surpass every other remedy for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease, that it is useless here to recount the evidence of its virtues. The world knows them.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
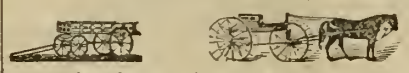
and all Dealers

WM. WORTHINGTON,
House and Sign Painter,
Dealer in
PAINTS, OILS, GLASS, &c., &c.,
735 Market street,
Between Third and Fourth streets, San Francisco.

SAUL & McARRON,
Carriage Manufactory,
NO. 579 AND 581 MARKET STREET,
Near Second Street, San Francisco.

Makes to order all kinds of Carriage and Buggy Work, Express and Thoroughbrace Wagons and Stage Work.
A general assortment of new and second-hand Wagons on hand. Jobbing done with neatness and dispatch.

REMOVAL. REMOVAL.
Larkins & Co.,



Manufacturers of every description of
CARRIAGES.

CONCORD WAGONS, Ranch Wagons and Buggies made to order. All kinds of Jobbing and Carriage Painting done at the shortest notice.
New Manufactory Nos. 631 and 633 Howard street, corner of Hubbard, between Second and Third, San Francisco.

Pollard & Carvill,

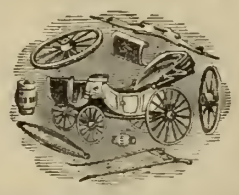
Dealers in and Manufacturers of
LIGHT CARRIAGES AND BUGGIES,
37 and 39 Webb street,
Between Sacramento and California.

Also, Repairing, Blacksmithing, Painting and Trimming done with neatness and dispatch.

A Rare Chance.

THE UNDERSIGNED, INTENDING TO RETIRE from business, desires to call the attention of the public to a LARGE STOCK OF CARRIAGE MATERIAL at his store, No. 506 MARKET STREET, and No. 7 SUTTER STREET, which he will SELL AT COST. Until said goods are disposed of, he will BUILD TO ORDER, at his factory, corner of FIFTH AND MARKET STREETS, all kinds of
WAGONS, CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, &c.,
A good assortment of which can always be found on hand, and at a less price than can be had at any other place in the city. Will keep about 50 workmen employed to complete all unfinished work and contracts, in order to close business by the first day of July next. Has on hand and for sale, Six First-class Concord style 9-Passenger STAGE WAGONS, and a good assortment of LUMBER or FARM WAGONS, EXPRESS WAGONS, CARTS, &c.
Also, will soon have finished FIFTY BUGGIES.
H. CASEBOLT.

A. FOLSOM,



Carriage Manufacturer,
No. 531 CALIFORNIA STREET,
Between Montgomery and Kearny streets, San Francisco.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF CARRIAGES, EXPRESS Wagons, Buggies, etc, made to order, of the best materials and workmanship.
Repairing and General Blacksmithing done with promptness, and at prices to suit the times.

WILLIAM TRUMBULL,

Manufacturer of
Saddles, Harness and Collars,
North-west corner Davis and Commercial streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

A good assortment, made from the best Materials, in the highest style of Workmanship, constantly on hand.
Manufacturing and Repairing done promptly, on reasonable terms. Country Trade solicited.

DR. FONDA SAN FRANCISCO
EYE INFIRMARY,
PERMANENTLY ESTABLISHED, EXCLUsively for the treatment of all diseases of the EYES, and for the past seventeen years Principal of the La Fayette (Ind.) Eye Infirmary.
P. W. FONDA, M. D.,
Surgeon in charge Infirmary,
223 Kearny street between Bush and Sutter.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,
Practical Card and Seal Engraver,
AND PLATE PRINTER,
No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

MANHATTAN INSURANCE CO.
OF NEW YORK.
INCORPORATED.....1821.
Cash Capital and Surplus $1,250,000
Insurance effected against both
Fire and Marine Risks,
AT THE LOWEST RATES.
Losses promptly adjusted, and paid in United States Gold Coin.
R. B. SWAIN & CO., Agents,
206 Front street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL
Insurance Company,
Southwest corner Montgomery and California streets.
INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.
Capital Stock, - - - $300,000
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.
C. CHRISTIANSEN, Pres't.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.

GREAT WESTERN
Life Insurance Company.
OF NEW YORK.
STOCK and MUTUAL
The Security of the Stock Plan, with all the Advantages of the Mutual System.
POLICIES AND DIVIDENDS ARE NON-FORFEITABLE
Thirty Days Grace for Payment of Premiums.
J. W. BRUMAGIN.
General Agent for California,
Office 36 and 37 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

AGENTS WANTED TO CANVASS FOR THE only official Southern History of the War. THE LOST CAUSE, by E. A. Pollard, the popular Historian of the South, and editor of the Richmond Examiner during the war. Complete in one large royal octavo volume, with
24 FINE STEEL PORTRAITS,
giving a full and authentic account of the rise and fall of the late Southern Confederacy. Written under the encouragement of Generals R. E. Lee, Johnston, Beauregard and others. The work is being liberally patronized by leading men of all classes, eager to hear
"THE OTHER SIDE,"
and thus arrive at the truth of history, which it is impossible to do from the many histories written only from a Northern stand-point.
Agents and the public are cautioned against any other work purporting to be this one. To energetic men and women a rare chance is offered to make money. Don't fail to send for circulars of this great and important work. Address
F. E. SHEAR, General Agent,
No. 8 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

RADICAL CURE TRUSSES!

LADIES' SUPPORTERS,
Shoulder Braces, etc.,
FITTED, AND RELIEF WARRANTED,
AT
GEORGE TIEMAN'S & CO.'S
NEW YORK BRANCH
Surgical and Dental Instrument Depot,
No. 218 MONTGOMERY STREET, San Francisco, Cal.,
(Opposite the Russ House,)
J. H. A. FOLKERS, Sole Agent.
Also keeps Ear Trumpets for the Deaf, Elastic Stockings for Enlarged Veins, etc., Baunscheidt's Rheumatism Instrument, Magentic Electro Machines, etc.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

RUDOLPH STEINBACH, Plaintiff, vs. JOSEPH L REED, et als., Defendants

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, and the complaint filed in the said city and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to JOSEPH L REED, CAROLINE L. REED, CHRISTIAN L LIEN, PETER S McNIEL, SARAH J McNIEL, EDWARD STRODE, NEWELL WINANTS, JOHN C. FRY, JAMES RYAN, S. CLINTON HASTINGS, Administrator of the Estate of Austin E. Smith, deceased, WILLIAM SMITH, Defendants.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to compel the defendants to set forth the nature of their several claims in and to the lands and premises described in the complaint, and that adverse claims of said defendants may be determined by a decree of this Court, that it be declared and adjudged that the defendants, or either of them, have no estate or interest whatever in or to said lands or premises, and that they be forever debarred from asserting any claim thereto adverse to plaintiff, and that he is the owner thereof in fee, and for such other and further relief as to equity shall seem meet

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 24th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and sixty-six. WM LOEWY, Clerk

[SEAL.] By W. R. SATTERLEE, Deputy Clerk.

Int. Rev. Stamp, canceled, 50 cts.

B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. d22 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH Judicial District of the State of aliforma, in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

MARY ELIZABETH BARRETT, Plaintiff, vs. CHARLES BARRETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to CHARLES BARRETT, Defeudaut.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaitiff, in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service.) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this conuty; or if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days; or judgment by default will be taken agaiust you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said actiou is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaiutiff and defendant, and that the sum of $30,000, being the one-half of the commou property of the parties, be adjudged to belong to aud be delivered to tois plaintiff; aud that the care, custody and educatiou of the children of the said parties, viz: Cornelius William and Arthur Joseph, be awarded to the plaintiff; and that pending this suit, the defendsnt may, by order of this Court, be restrained and enjoined from selliug, or in any manner disposing of the commou property referred to in the complaint—that is to say, $60,000; aud that defendant be ordered to pay plaintiff $250 per month for the support of herself and children, aod the further sum of $1,000 as attorneys' fees for the prosecution of this action, and for general belief.

Aud you are hereby notified tbat if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as ahove required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief thercin demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 25th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[SEAL.] By G. C. LETCHER, Depnty Clerk.

[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]

PIXLEY & SMITH, Attorneys for Plaintiff. d29 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FIFTEENTH JUdicial District of the State of California, in and for tue City and County of San Francisco.

BENJAMIN S. BROOKS, Plaintiff, vs. THOMAS HARRIS, et al., defendants.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to THOMAS HARRIS and CHARLES FORBES, detendants. You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the abovcnamed Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summous—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, bnt in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree adjudgiug and ascertiuing the amount due to plaintiff from defendant Harris upon the promissory note and mortgage mentioned and referred to in the complaint to be $500 with interest thereon at 10 per cent per month from March 30, 1855, and directing a sale of the premises in said mortgage mentioned, by the sheriff of the City aad County of San Francisco, according to law and the practice of this Court, and the application of the proceeds of sale after payment of costs and expenses to the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff, and that said defeudaut Harris, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the execution of said mortgage, to wit: December 30, 1854, either as purchasers incumbrancers or otherwise, may be barred and foreclosed of all right, claim or equity of redemption in the said premises and every part thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment docketed and executed against said defendant Harris for any deficiency which may arise after applying all the proceeds of the sale of said premises properly applicable, to the satisfaction of said judgment. That the plaintiff or any other parties to this suit may become purchaser at said sale, and be put into possession, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified tbat if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 12th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., canceled. WM. LOEWY, Clerk, By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

B. S. BROOKS, Plaintiff's Attorney. j193m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUdicial District of the State of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco.

CECILE PEBELLE, Plaintiff, vs. JEAN L. PEBELLE, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said city and county of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Jean L. Pebelle, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you, by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service,) after the service on you of this summons, if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimouy heretofore and now existing between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff be permitted to resome her maiden name, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded therein.

Given under my band and seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, this 30th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[L. S.] By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.

[U. S. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cents, canceled.]

J. H. SMYTH, Plaintiff's Attorney. d29 3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of FRANCOISE P. BETUEL, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Frangois M. Betuel, the Executor of the last will and testament of Frangoise P. Betuel deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the devisees of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residne of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the Estate of the said Frangoise P. Betuel, deceased, appear before the said Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the court-room of said court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said Estate among the devisees of the said Frangoise F Betuel, deccased, according to law:

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before the said eleventh day March, A. D. 1867: in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county

M. C. BLAKE, Probnte Judge.

Dated February 5th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK
Of the City and County of San Francisco, } ss.

I, WM. LOEWY, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court in and for said city and county, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true, full and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Probate Court.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 8th day of February A. D. 1867

[SEAL AND STAMP] WM LOEWY, Clerk.

19 5t By A. J. JEGHERS, Depoty Clerk.

GEO. F. & WM. H. SHARP, Attorneys for Petitioner.

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE CITY AND County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of THOMAS THOMAS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of J. W. Brumagim, the Admioistrator of the Estate of Thomas Thomas, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed: that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid: and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered, That all persons interested in the estate of the said Thomas Thomas, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said City and County, on TUESDAY, the twenty-sixth day of MARCH, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Thomas Thomas deceased, according to law:

It is further Ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said twenty-sixth day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a news paper printed and published in the said City and County

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 21st, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK
Of the City and County of San Francisco, } ss

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 21st day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

[Seal and stamp.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Depnty Clerk.

J. F. FINN, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. 123 5t.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—In Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JAMES FITZPATRICK, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administratrix of the estate of James Fitzpatrick, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administratrix at the place of the transaction of her business, at the office of her attorney, Geo. B. Merrill, Esq., No. 520 Montgomery street, San Francisco. MARY FITZPATRICK,

Administratrix of Estate of James Fitzpatrick, deceased.

San Francisco, February 2d, 1867. 4w

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF ELLEN O'CONNELL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the Estate of Ellen O'Connell, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against said deceased, to exhibit the same with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his office, No 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco. WM. A. QUARLES, Administrator of the Estate of Ellen O'Connell, deceased.

San Francisco, February 9, 1867.

W. & C. BARTLETT, Attorneys for Administrator, 323 Montgomery street. f9 5t

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, THAT IN PURSUANCE of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, made on 6th day of February A. D. 1867, in the matter of the Estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on THURSDAY, the 14th day of March, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the counting-room of J. C. Merrill & Co., Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in the city and county of San Francisco, all the right, title, interest and estate of said minors Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, of, in and to all the undivided two months of the lot of land situated in said city and county, and bounded and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the westerly side of Berry street, one hundred and thirty-seven and a half (137 1-2) feet northeasterly from the northeast corner of Berry and Third streets; thence running northeasterly along said westerly side of Berry street one hundred and thirty seven and a half (137 1-2) feet to a point; thence at a right angle northwesterly two hundred and forty (240) feet more or less to a point in the easterly line of King street; thence at a right angle southwesterly along said line of King street one hundred and thirty-seven and a half (137 1-2) feet; and thence at a right angle southeasterly two hundred and forty feet, more or less, to the point of beginning.

And offers or bids for said property, in writing will be received at said place, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county, from this date till Thursday the 14th day of March, 1867, at twelve o'clock noon, by the undersigned. J. C. MERRILL,

Guardian of the Estates of Alfred Rodman and Eloise Rodman, minors. f9

Dated February 8th, 1867.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOSEPH W. KERR, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On readiog and filing the petition of Honora Kerr, the Administratrix of the Estate of Joseph W Kerr, deceased, setting forth that she has filed her final account of her administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court Room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, Anno Domini, 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said Joseph W. Kerr, deceased, according to law:

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published once a week, for four successive weeks, before the said 11th day of March A. D., 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county. M C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated, February 5th, 1867. f9 5t

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of said City and County, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original order on file and of record in my office.

Witness my hand, and the seal of said Probate Court, this 8th day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk,

[SEAL AND STAMP.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

HAIGHT & PIERSON, Attorneys for Petitioner.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH JUDIcial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

THOMAS CORBETT, Plaintiff, vs. MARIA CORBETT, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the Complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Maria Corbett, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this District, within twenty days, otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony heretolore and now existing between the plaintiff and defendant, and that plaintiff have the care and custody of the children, as particularly mentioned in the Complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Depnty Clerk.

[Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50c, canceled.] j19 3m

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF WILLIAM SHANAHAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of William Shanahan, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his office, at the store of Maurice Dore & Co, No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California. Dated February 1, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator and the Administrator of the Estate of William Shanahnn, deceased. 12 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS. — ESTATE OF JOHN THOMAS, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of John Thomas, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated February 14th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,

Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of John Thomas, deceased.

J. F. FINN, Atty for Administrator. fe16-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF AUGUSTA SAAL.—Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of Augusta Saal, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at the office of his Attorney, R. W. Hent, Esq, northwest corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets, in the city and county of San Francisco. Dated February 9th, 1867.

H. O. GOUGH, Administrator of the Estate of Augusta Saal, deceased. f9 5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT OF THE City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

In the matter of the estate of MINA HOFFMAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Isaac D. Barnard, Executor of the last will and testament of Mina Hoffman, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the legatees of the will of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residne of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of the said Mina Hoffman, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Coort Room of said Court, in the City Hall, in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the 19th day of March, A. D. 1867, at two o'clock, P M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residne of said estate among the legatees of the last will and testament of the said deceased, according to law:

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks before the said Tuesday the 19th day of March, A. D. 1867, in the THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 11th, A. D. 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK
OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO, } ss.

I Wm Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to bo a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 14th day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Depnty Clerk.

Messrs. W. & C. BARTLETT, Attorneys for Petitioner.

February 16th, 1867. 1e16-5t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of GEORGE H. HOSSEFROSS, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of sale of real estate should not be made.

It appearing to the said Court, by the petition this day presented and filed by R. H. Simton and H. M. Whitmore, the Executors of the last will of George H. Hossefross, deceased, praying for an order of sale of real estate, that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real estate and also all the personal property of the estate of George H. Hossefross, deceased, to pay the debts due by the said deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Probate Court on MONDAY, the eighteenth day of March A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court Room of said Probate Court at the City Hall in the city and county of San Francisco to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Executors to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, as shall be necessary; and also the personal property of deceased.

And that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

M C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated February 12th, 1867.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK,
OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. } ss.

I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an Order duly made and entered upon the minutes of the said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 14th day of February A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.

By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

Messrs. Winans & Belknap Attys. for Petitioners.

fe16-3t

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE.—Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, and State of California, made on the 12th day of February, A. D. 1867, in the matter of the estate of Thos. W. Sutherland, deceased, the undersigned, Administrator in charge of said estate, will sell at private sale for cash payable in United States gold or silver coin, on and subject to the confirmation of said Probate Court on or after the fifth day of March, A. D. 1867, in one parcel all the right, title, interest and estate of the said intestate at the time of his death; and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has by operation of law or otherwise acquired, other than and in addition to that of said intestate at the time of his death, in and to the following real property, lot, piece or parcel of land situate in said city and county of San Francisco and State of California, bounded and described as follows:

A certain unknown undivided interest of in and to that certain 50 vara lot situated lying and being in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and known on the official map of said city and county as 50-vara lot number 32.

Persons wishing to purchase said real estate will present their bids in writing to the undersigned at his store Nos. 219 and 221 Front street, in the city and county of San Francisco on or before the day set for the sale.

Dated February 13th, 1867.

ALEXANDER R. BALDWIN,

Administrator of the estate of Thomas W. Sutherland, deceased. fe16 3t

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of SARAH McLAUGHLIN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of John Couch, the Administrator of Sarah McLaughlin, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his annual and final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is ordered that all persons interested in the estate of the said Sarah McLaughlin, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said City and County, on MONDAY, the 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order for distribution should not be made of the residne of said estate among the heirs of the said Sarah McLaughlin deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 11th day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and publisued in the said City and County.

M. C. BLAKE Probate Judge.

Dated San Francisco, February 8th, 1867.

I. N. THORNE, Esq., Attorney for Petitioner. fe9 5t

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

J. MAGUIRE, - Sole Proprietor and Manager
CHAS. TIBBETTS, - - Business Manager
C. L. GRAVES, - - - Stage Manager
W. STEVENSON, - - - - Treasurer

ENGAGEMENT OF THE WITCHING ELFIN STAR,

ALICE KINGSBURY!

—SUPPORTED BY—

Mrs. Sophie Edwin, Mrs. H. Jackson,
Mr. J. McCullough, Mr. H. Edwards,
And a Full Corps Dramatique!

THIS AFTERNOON, MARCH 2D,
KINGSBURY MATINEE!—
LITTLE BAREFOOT!

THIS EVENING, MARCH 2D,
Miss Kingsbury will appear in a New Drama,
THE MARINER'S COMPASS!

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle, - - $1 00 | Orchestra, - - $1 00
Parquette, - - 50 | Upper Circle, - 25
No Extra Charge for Reserved Seats.

GRAND MUSICAL MATINEE!

BE GIVEN BY

MASTER LOUIS SCHMIDT!

THE YOUNG CALIFORNIA VIOLINIST,

AT PLATT'S MUSIC HALL,

On This Afternoon, - - - March 2d

ASSISTED BY

Miss Emma Howson,
Mr. Henri Herberte,
Mr. George Felix Benkert,
Members of the Twelve, and
The Germania Society

DR. BENTON

WILL CONTINUE HIS SERIES OF LECTURES upon the subject of PSYCHOLOGY, MAGNETISM and its kindred sciences, at CONGRESS HALL, Bush street, on FRIDAY and SATURDAY EVENINGS, 8th and 9th inst., at 7 1-2 o'clock. The lectures will be illustrated by a variety of very amusing and astonishing experiments upon persons in the audience, showing also that the Electrical or Magnetic Currents, properly directed, are the best and safest method of curing disease. TICKETS FOR GENTS, 25 CENTS; Ladies and Children, Free.

On FRIDAY AFTERNOON Dr. Benton will give a FREE LECTURE, for LADIES ONLY, at 3 o'clock, at Congress Hall.

☞ N. B.—Office for treatment, over Congress Hall.
mh2-1t

WOODWARD'S GARDENS,

Art Gallery, Museum,
CONSERVATORIES, AND ZOOLOGICAL GROUNDS,

On Mission and Valencia streets.

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC EVERY DAY.

A Museum of Natural History containing over four hundred specimens of Zoology has just been opened.

NEW ATTRACTIONS ARE BEING CONSTANTLY ADDED.

Admission to all parts of the Gardens and Museum 25 cents. Children under 12 years of age, half price.

These Gardens are accessible by Howard, Market and Folsom street Cars.

☞ Schools and Charitable Institutions accompanied by guardians, FREE, on MONDAYS and FRIDAYS

"SHERMAN'S March Through Georgia."

ADMISSION, - - - TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

The Exhibition of this Painting will close on the 9th of March. SNOW & ROOS,
219 Montgomery street. (Russ Block.)

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Between lifornia and Pine

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
between California and Pine.

OPPOSITION TO NEW YORK

EVERY TWENTY DAYS!

Carrying the United States Mail via Nicaragua!

THE OPPOSITION STEAMER
AMERICA.
WILL SAIL FOR SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua,
From MISSION STREET WHARF, at 11 o'clock, A. M., on TUESDAY - - - MARCH 5th, 1867.
Connecting at Greytown with the magnificent Steamship
NICARAGUA.
(2500 tons) For NEW YORK.

The MOSES TAYLOR will sail on March 25th.
For further information, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco

NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

OF SAN FRANCISCO.
Office, No. 408 Montgomery Street,
NEAR CALIFORNIA.

CAPITAL (paid up) - - - $1,000,000 00
ASSETS Jan. 1, 1867, - - $1,093.131 92

PRESIDENT.....GEO. W. BEAVER
SECRETARY.....W. W. WIGGINS
MARINE OFFICER.....CAPT. AMOS NOYES
SURVEYOR.....E. N. TORREY

Policies Issued and Losses Paid in Gold.

MARINE INSURANCE
....UPON....
Hulls, Cargoes, Treasure, Commissions, Profits and other Subjects of Marine Insurance, to and from all Ports in the World, including Inland Risks.

FIRE INSURANCE
....UPON....
Buildings, Merchandise, Furniture, Rents, Vessels in Port, and their Cargoes, and other Insurable Property,
..AT..
GREATLY REDUCED RATES!

MARINE AGENTS.
NEW YORK.MESSRS. EUGENE KELLY & CO.
HONOLULU....MESSRS. C. BREWER & CO.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
JOSEPH A. DONOHOE.....Chairman.
JOHN G. BRAY, ALBERT DIBBLEE,
H. W. HALLECK, ABRAM BLOCK,
WILLIAM PIERCE, JAS. H. DEERING,
JAS. T. DEANE, GEO. F. BRAGG.

DIRECTORS.

J. W. Brittan,	Jos. A. Donohoe.
Albert Dibblee.	George W. Gibbs,
Abner H. Barker,	R. G. Sneath.
James H. Deering,	Henry Barroilhet,
Henry S. Dexter,	Abram Block,
N. Van Bergen,	J. C. Johnson,
George F. Bragg,	J. T. Dean,
C. F. Fargo,	H. W. Halleck,
Henry L. King,	Henry L. Davis,
Charles Clayton,	T. E. Baugh,
Michael Reese,	S. C. Hastings,
George W. Dam,	C. A. Eastman,
Wm. G. Badger,	Benj. Hobart,
James W. Cox,	Levi Strauss,
Daniel Mayer,	Charles Lux,
Hiram Tubbs,	Jas. P. Goodwin,
Lloyd Tevis,	P. Maury, Jr,
Alex. Forbes,	W. W. Montague,
Jos. B. Thomas,	Nicholas Larco,
Morris Speyer,	William Pierce,
John G. Bray,	E. H. Winchester,
H. L. Dodge,	E. V. Hathaway,
Walter N. Hawley,	N. C. Fassett,
Isaac E. Davis,	A. Hayward,
E. L. Goldstein,	Samuel Crim,
Daniel Murphy,	John Center,
Wm. H. Sharp,	Theo. Le Roy,
C. L. Taylor,	George C. Hickox,
J. S. Hutchinson,	O. F. Giffin,
Chas. M. Plum,	W. C. Talbot,
M. F. Jones,	A. J. Bryant,
S. Heydenfeldt,	James Phelan,
Abram Seligman,	Geo. V. Beaver,
Thomas Breeze,	C. C. Knox,
F. P. McMahon,	Jas. P. Pierce,
J. C. Wilmerding,	W. W. Wiggins,
Authony Chabot,	J. B. Roberts.
John F. Miller,

UNION BUSINESS COLLEGE.

AND TELEGRAPHIC INSTITUTE.
(MERCHANTS' INSURANCE BUILDING,)
408 CALIFORNIA ST.

THIS INSTITUTION IS DESIGNED TO PREPARE Boys and Men
FOR BUSINESS PURSUITS,
And to impart a thorough
COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

It is conducted upon thorough business principles. The student, upon entering the college,
IS FURNISHED WITH A CAPITAL IN CASH AND MERCHANDISE,
rents a place of business, opens an account with the bank, insures his goods in the insurance office of the College, and enters upon the arena of business. He
COMMENCES SPECULATION,
Carrying out all the details of trade—buying and selling goods, depositing in and checking from the Bank, making and negotiating notes, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., recording the transactions and keeping the books in a regular and scientific manner. From this he advances to other capacities, until he finally takes his position in the UNION BUSINESS COLLEGE BANK,
A regularly established institution, complete in all its appointments, and having a circulation of
ONE MILLION IN COLLEGE CURRENCY.
This course saves from four to six weeks time in copying useless manuscripts.

TELEGRAPHING.

The large and increasing demand for good Telegraph Operators has induced us to organize a separate department for thorough instructions in this branch, and we are enabled now to present advantages in this line equal to any that can be afforded on the continent. Several instruments are in operation, and others will be added as the occasion requires. So great is the demand for Operators, that no young man, well qualified, need want a situation. A skillful and accomplished Operator has charge of the departments, and will devote his special attention to the advancement of the students under his charge.

There is no vacation, and students can enter upon any business day during the year. The public are invited to call and examine the various Departments. Sessions day and evening. For circulars and further information, address

JAMES VINSONHALER, President.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
Main street, Petaluma.

EVENING SILKS!
Carriage Silks!
Bridal Silks!
Dinner Silks!

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.

TAKE PLEASURE IN ANNOUNCING TO THE LADIES of San Francisco, that they have, per last steamer, rec'd the following invoice of SILKS AND LACES!

Orange Moire Antique,
Gros de Paris, in light shades,
Cherry Moire Antique,
Gros de Venise, viz: Pink Lis de Vin, Cherry, Pearl, etc., etc.
Chine and Drogues, for Evening Dresses.
50 pieces thoroughly oil-boiled Bonnet's black Silks, at a reduction of 25 per cent. from cost of importation.
Elegant Chantilly Lace Flounces.
Applique Flounces.
Point de Venise Lace Sets.
Applique Lace Handkerchiefs.
Point d'Alençon Lace Handkerchiefs.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,
107 BATTERY STREET,
Between Pine and California.

THE NEW AND ELEGANT STYLES OF DRESS HATS!
FOR SPRING AND SUMMER, 1867, ARE NOW READY,
AT MEUSSDORFFER'S,
HAT MANUFACTORIES,

Nos. 635 and 637 Commercial St...San Francisco
No. 125 J Street,.....Sacramento
Corner D and Second Streets.....Marysville
No. 72 Front Street.....Portland, Or

OUR STYLES OF GENTLEMEN'S DRESS AND BUSINESS HATS, manufactured of the best material and by the most skillful mechanics, excel any in fineness, taste and durability ever introduced on this coast. We are receiving by each steamer all the LATEST NOVELTIES from New York, London, and Paris. Call and see them

FRESH MEAT! CORNED MEAT!

PARTIES IN WANT OF COARSE FRESH MEAT, AND COARSE CORNED MEAT, in quantities large and small, can be supplied at low figures, on application to
L. MILLER & CO.,
59 and 60 Washington Market.

☞ All orders delivered to any part of the city free of charge.

DUNBAR'S EXCHANGE,

No. 123 Bush Street,
Bet. the Occidental and Cosmopolitan Hotels.

☞ HARRY RIKER would be pleased to see his old friends at home all day.

Hot Lunch every day from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M.
W. DUNBAR, Proprietor.

If there is a Florence Sewing Machine within a thousand miles of San Francisco, that is not giving entire satisfaction, if I am informed of it, it will be attended to without express charge or expense of any kind to the owner. Samuel Hill, Agent, 111 Montgomery St., San Francisco.

JACOB SHEW,

Pioneer Photographer
612 CLAY STREET,
North side, four doors above Montgomery.

Takes all kinds of Photographs in the very best style of the Art. Would especially invite attention to the superiority of the "Cabinet Photograph," or new size, taken at this establishment.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF CAROLINE HUEBNER, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of CAROLINE HUEBNER, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated February 28th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of Caroline Huebner, deceased. mh2 5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of JAMES EDWIN REAS, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated February 28th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator, and the Administrator of the estate of James Edwin Reas, deceased. mh2-5t

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE FOURTH Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

SIEGMUND T. MEYER and ASHER T. MEYER, Plaintiffs, vs. LINA A. SON, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to LINA A. SON, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, (a copy of which accompanies this summons) within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise, within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one and 85-100 dollars, alleged to be due from you to the plaintiffs on a judgment recovered by said plaintiffs against you, and more particularly described in the complaint herein, together with costs of suit.

And you are hereby notified, that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiffs will take judgment against you for said sum and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and the seal of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this nineteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven

WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By JAS. E. ASHCOM, Deputy Clerk.
[SEAL, AND INTERNAL REVENUE STAMP CANCELED.] mh2-3m

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estate of JOHN F. LOGAN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of Mary Banks and Catherine Rogan, claiming to be the nearest relatives and heirs, being the aunts of John F. Logan, deceased, setting forth that the administrator has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

It is Ordered, that all persons interested in the estate of said John F. Logan, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the Court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on TUESDAY, the fifth day of March, Anno Domini 1867, at eleven o'clock, A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate among the heirs of the said John F. Logan, deceased, according to law.

It is further Ordered, that a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said fifth day of March, A. D. 1867, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated January 30th, 1867. feb2-4w

Office of the County Clerk of the City and County of San Francisco.—I, Wm. Loewy, County Clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex-officio Clerk of the Probate Court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true and correct copy of an order duly made and entered upon the minutes of said Court.

Witness my hand and the seal of the said Court, this first day of February, A. D. 1867.

WM. LOEWY, Clerk
[Seal and stamp.] By A. J. JEGHERS, Deputy Clerk.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF GEORGE C. PETERSEN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of George C. Petersen, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said administrator at his place of business at the office of Maurice Dore & Co., No. 327 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco.

Dated February 14th, 1867.

WILLIAM A. QUARLES,
Public Administrator and the Administrator of the estate of George C. Petersen, deceased. mh2-5t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—ESTATE OF THOMAS KEENAN, deceased. Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the Estate of THOMAS KEENAN, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his place of business, northwest corner of Sacramento and Sansome streets, in the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated at San Francisco, March 2d, A. D. 1867.

mh2-5t THOMAS BREEZE,
Administrator of Estate of Thomas Keenan, deceased.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Administrator.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME VI., No 16
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, MARCH 9, 1867.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL: My New Lodgings, by John Clerk: Sound Advice to Young Men, by Prentice; Cacographic Literature, by John Clerk; Local Architectural Items; The State of the South; Our æsthetic Progress; Lion's Mouth: The Draco of the Press; California Academy of Natural Science; Police Pistol Practice; Skedaddle; The First-Class Paper; Dramatic Affairs, etc., etc. POETRY: The Eagle, by X-X. SELECTED: Conundrums (constructively considered); The French Police System; In the Omnibus; A Star in Flames; Black Sheep: Poetry, Paragraphs, etc.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO

The Draco of the Press.

Lucky, indeed, is it for the inhabitants of San Francisco, that the relentless and bloody-minded Fitz-Smythe only occupies the humble and comparatively uninfluential position of gatherer up of local items for the Alta, instead of that of a judge. Fitz-Smythe is constantly exposing some "hardened miscreant for whom hanging is too good," or "fiend of the blackest hue, for whom no punishment devised by human law can be sufficiently severe." On Tuesday, Fitz-Smythe was "informed by a friend that some miserable scoundrel or scoundrels were in the habit of stealing the plants and trees from off the graves of deceased persons at the Lone Mountain Cemetery." This is very shocking. "The graves of deceased persons" should be protected, as also should the graves in prospectu of persons not yet deceased. It would be well to detail a member of the police force to guard the cemetery, and to punish by a long term of imprisonment, any person found perpetrating such mean thefts. But that would not satisfy Fitz-Smythe. No! He says:

"A good look-out should be kept, and the parties, if captured, have the benefit of neither judge nor jury."

That's the talk. Lynch 'em! Smash their brains out with broken tomb stones! They should have the benefit of neither judge nor jury. On Wednesday, our local Draco became still more excited on the subject of thefts of shrubs. He says:

"On Monday night some soulless wretch entered the grounds of B. C. Horn, Esq., on Harrison street, near Second, (Rincon Hill) and threw down two large sized ornamental marble statues, crushing in their fall several fine plants, and destroying, by breaking, the ornaments. In front of the residence were two large figures representing reposing lions, one of which was by the same hands thrown over into the street, but being strong enough to stand the shock was not broken."

Our Draco becomes ingenious in devising an appropriate punishment for the soulless wretch who wrestled with the lion and overthrew him. He says:

"It would hardly be too much punishment to tie one of the broken statues around the contemptible scoundrel's neck and throw him off the end of Vallejo street wharf."

Not a mill-stone, mind you, but one of the broken statues is to be tied round his neck before casting him into the bay. But why, oh worthily indignant Fitz-Smythe, "throw him off the end of Vallejo street wharf?" Fitz Smythe in his rage and grief becomes incoherent:

"Such acts as these are almost enough to make a man shut himself out from the world by building a high board fence around his garden plot, no matter how large or small that might be. The citizen who is public spirited enough to plant and ornament a garden, and let the passer-by gaze upon his grounds by making an open fence about his property, should be commended and praised by every person, and when the wanton hand of a sneak destroys or steals from his stock, every effort should be exhausted to ferret out the offender."

Fancy a man "shutting himself out from the world by building a high board fence round his garden." Oh! Fitz-Smythe! of coarse every one must admire the public-spirited citizen who will "let the passer-by gaze in upon his grounds" through the pales of his fence, and he ought to have a monument erected to his memory when he dies. We sincerely trust that these mean and mischievous thieves and destroyers of shrubs and flowers will be discovered and punished; but we would not tie stone lions round their necks and throw them off the end of Vallejo street wharf, nor would we deny them the benefit of both judge and jury.

A Quincy Maniac.

An exchange says: "A lady recently died in Quincy from injuries received from a fall at her own door on the ice."

We suppose that people are expected to cry, "How sad!" when they read how this poor Quincy maniac met with her death: "from injuries received from a fall at her own door on the ice"! We don't pity her a bit. She had no business to have her house on the ice; or if she must have her door on the ice, she should have practised skating.

California Academy of Natural Science.

The California Academy of Natural Science held its monthly meeting last Monday evening. Various new specimens of bugs, beasts, birds, and various petrifactions were handed in. Dr. Ramsnuckle brought a bug found in his bed—said he had seen and felt several like it during the last few months.

Perrybingle Smith Jr. arose and remarked that such specimens were quite common where he came from. He then presented the society with a three legged horse, and was immediatedly voted a life membership, providing he would take the horse away with him.

Dr. Rumbuzzle remarked, that too much rain had fallen during the past winter. He also produced a diagram proving that more water was evolved from the clouds in a heavy rain than a light one. The society received this announcement with two cheers, and Dr. Rumbuzzle was mounted on Perrybingle's three-legged horse, and led away.

Balwer Dickens Smith exhibited a live "rat" captured in the composing rooms of a weekly paper. This animal had lived fourteen days without a square meal. The termination of its spinal vertebrae was distinctly visible.

John Washington Brown read an essay, proving the possibility of speech among clams. He also entertained the society at considerable length with an account of an unsuccessful attempt to produce a hybrid between the frog and the lobster.

Humboldt Jones read an essay on the nocturnal habits of cats; the result of years of observation by himself and Mrs. H. Jones. It was an entire failure, and he was thereupon voted a bag of ichthyological putrefactions—mostly smelt.

Agassiz Brown brought a sketch of the brains of an editor, taken after death. The substance was light, porous and honeycombed much, resembling the inside of a squeezed lemon.

Silliman Snooks recited the poem, "I would I were a Butterfly;" also, "On Linden when the Sun was Low;" and closed the show by exhibiting the head of Joaquin, the hand of Three-Fingered Jack, a two-headed calf, an infant in good spirits with four ears and one eye, and wound up entirely by killing a cat with a single dose of Pacific street whisky.

"Skedaddle."

This word, by no means an elegant one, is frequently used even by the press. It first became common after the battle of Pea Ridge, when the Westen soldiers engaged there boasted that they had made "Pap." Price's troops "skedaddle." The word soon became popular, especially among the army boys, and was used from the Osage to the Potomac, to express a retreat. The word being new and singular, etymologists set to work seriously to discover its origin, and some of them, satisfactorily to themselves, traced it to the Greek! A man who heard it in common use in what was then the "Western country," gives the following account of its origin: In the early days of that region fencing material was scarce, and to protect their grain fields from the cattle, which were numerous, small boys with dogs were employed. The boys were stationed at convenient points, and whenever any of the horned marauders approached too near the precincts sacred to Ceres, they would set the dogs on them. It was with these urchins the curious word had its origin; and it was probably formed in this wise: "Hiss, cattle!" "'S cattle!" "'S' kaddle!" "'Skedaddle!" The last expression—probably on account of its oddness, as Western people are observed to have a penchant for odd words, finally became the settled one, and was very potent in causing vagrant cattle to betake them to their legs with great expedition. As most of our troops at the battle of Pea Ridge where Western men, it is not at all strange that when they saw Price's troops scampering off like so many frightened cattle, their favorite expression should have occurred to them.

Interesting about Olives.

The Santa Cruz Sentinel of the 2d instant contains the following paragraph, which, as a model of style as well as a repertory of information concerning the olive, and an essay on national taste, we feel constrained to give to our readers:

ANOTHER PIONEER GONE.—One of the old olive trees, in the mission orchard, was blown down during the late storm. The tree is no doubt, sixty or seventy years old and full of fruit. The tree is a relic of the olden times, a connecting link between the Arcadian days, when Old Spain held sovereign sway over this portion of the globe. Several other large olive trees are standing full of fruit, and growing quite thrifty. The olive is a tree tenacious of life, and grows quite thrifty. The fruit is a dark purple color, when ripe, about the size of a small plum, and having a bitter acrid taste. Residents of Italy and Old Spain, consider pickled olives, a great luxury, but Americans prefer other and sweeter delicacies and condiments.

The Sigma Phi Jollification.

The dinner of the Sigma Phi Society came off at Martin's restaurant on Monday. The dinner was good, the wine first rate, and every one was jolly. Monday was the fortieth anniversary of the formation of the society, and the dinner (as was happily expressed by a gentleman some time after dinner) had a great signification. He said: "Gentlemen, thish mos 'mport'n' occash'n. Lenth 'n breth lau thish banquet's great Sigma-Phi-cation!"

The First-Class Paper.

We have for some time past left the new "first-class daily paper," the Times, to the tender mercies of the Bulletin and Dramatic Chronicle. The former annoys it by reiterating the charge that it steals dispatches; the latter pitches in and worries it on general principles The Times does make a good many blunders for a "first-class paper." One of the editors complains in Thursday's issue that the Southern people say, "an appeal must be made to the Supreme Court. That failing, nothing is left but abject submission"—and goes on as follows:

"By pride angels have fallen. The Southern people must learn to abstain from the use of language such as this. Abject is not the word that becomes their lips. It is alike insulting to the dignity of Congress and inexpressive of the condition in which their own misguided conduct has placed them. Arrogance, surrounded by the luxuries of wealth, is entitled to little sympathy But when displayed amid poverty, helplessness and crime, it excites only pity and disgust."

The above is a fair sample of the editorials of the Times. How grand is the opening: "By pride angels have fallen," and then perhaps these same angels, after they were subjugated, exclaimed that there was nothing left for them but abject submission. Then mark the stern rebuke which follows: "Abject is not the word which becomes their lips." Perhaps the Southerners who are reported by the telegraphic reporter (how many Southerners is not mentioned) to have made use of this proud word, used it as expressing their own "cast down" condition; but the Times declares that "abject" is "inexpressive of that condition." It evidently thinks that the Southerners evince a most rebellious spirit in not terming their present condition an "exalted" one, though five thousand persons in one county in Alabama are at this time starving to death. The local items in the same issue writes an item on "the evils of gambling." We will cut a chunk out of the middle as a specimen:

"But bring before them, instead, a truthful picture of one ruined life, one blasted career; trace carefully in all its hideousness and deformity the progress of the monster canker worm; lay bare, from its first inception in a moment of thoughtlessness, the growth, progress and consummation of the fatal passion; open the doors of one doomed home and display in all their wretchedness and gloom the cold, black hearth, the bare walls, the thin, wan wife and the starving children; picture with a relentless pencil the deep furrows graven."

There, that's enough. That's the sort of stuff the Times publishes as city news. This ambitious young local, who ought evidently to write an epic poem, instead of filling the laborious and shoeleather-destroying occupation in which he is at present engaged, concludes by publishing an affecting letter about a young Solomon Abrahams. He says:

"We copy it, changing only the name, verbatum et literatum."

We also have reproduced the local's writing "verbatum et literatum." The latter is a specimen of Times Latin. From all we can learn, there is but one man on this first-class daily who has received the advantages of a decent education. The others are foes to reason, haters of the dead languages, and murderers of their own.

Police Pistol Practice.

Practice will soon make the San Francisco Police force very skillful in the use of the national weapon, the revolver. In their hands it is a most efficient instrument for the ends and prevention of crime. A ball through the heart is very effectual in quieting the lungs of noisy Bacchanals, and a broken arm may suspend the operations of a burglar, or a person suspected of burglary, for many months. The historian of 1900 may write, concerning the regulation of the public peace in this city in 1867, as follows:

"Public order and morality was strictly maintained by the police at this time chiefly by moral suasion proclaimed from the mouths of six-shooters. But few arrests were made and the courts were comparatively idle. Midnight brawlers and criminals were promptly shot. Scores of dead and wounded frequently garnished the sidewalks in the grey dawn of the morning, arrested in their unlawful career by the leaden messenger of justice, death or mutilation. At times mistakes were made, and respectable law abiding citizens were shot down. Yet, those not killed outright cheerfully suffered from their injuries, thinking it far better a few should be shot by mistake rather than the majesty of the law should not be vindicated. Instances of women and children killed at the windows by stray bullets, were not unfrequent, and also in this manner a preacher of the gospel had a sudden termination of his labors, and sent to life eternal while in the midst of the delivery of a Thanksgiving sermon. The principal abuse of this system, lay in the fact that it gave the police rather too much power, enabling them to shoot anyone they pleased, thus affording them a means of revenging real or imagined private injuries. Mainly to this cause was due the total massacre of the police force on St. Bartholomew's Eve, 1868, by an outraged and bullet-ridden populace, many of whom had suffered the loss of relatives and friends through the pistol practice of policemen."—[Hist. Cal. by Jim Jones.]

Base-Ball Propriety and Principle.

Says the Bulletin, in mentioning a challenge between two base-ball clubs, one of which named Sunday as the day of trial: "There are a large number of young men who enjoy this manly game, but from principle or more correct views of propriety, will not play on that day"—meaning Sunday. From this we learn that there is a more correct standard by which we can be guided through the journey of life than that of principle. We shall now submit the question to the public more especially the mathematical public, in the form of a query in compound proportion, known sometimes as the "Rule of Three," thus. Given Base-Ball, Sunday, Principle. Required, more correct views of propriety than those emanating from principle.

BLACK SHEEP

BY EDMUND YATES.

Author of "Land at Last," "Kissing the Rod," etc.

FROM CHARLES DICKENS' MAGAZINE, "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

BOOK III.

CHAPTER V.

CONTINUED.

THE transition effected by by the aid of his intense selfishness, from his lormer state of leeling toward Harriet, to one which reqnired only the intervention of any active cause to become hatred, was not a difficult matter to a man like Ronth. Having lost all her former charm, and much of her previous usefulness, she soon became to him a disagreeable reminder. Something more than that—the mental superiority of the womau, which had never before incommoded him, now became positively hateful to him. It carried with it, now that it was no longer his mainstay, a power which was humilating, because it was fear-inspiring. Routh was afraid of his wife, and knew that he was afraid of her, when he had ceased to love her, after he had begun to dislike her; so much afraid of her that he kept up appearances to an extent, and for a duration of time, inexpressibly irksome to a man so callous, so egotistical, so entirely devoid of any seutiment or capacity of gratitude.

Such was the position of affairs when George Dallas and Mr. Felton left London to join Mr. and Mrs. Carruthers at Homburg. From the time of his arrival, and even when he had yielded to the clever argnmeuts which had been adduced to nrge him to silence, there was a sense of insecurity, a foreboding in Routh's mind; not a trace of the sentimental superstitious terror with which imaginary criminals are invested after the fact, but with the reasonable fear of a shrewd man, in a tremendously dangerous and difficult position, who knows he has made a false move, and looks, with moody perplexity, for the consequences, sooner or later.

"He must have come to Englaud, at all events, Stewart," Harriet said to her husband, when he cursed his own imprudence for the twentieth time; "he must have come home to see his uncle. Mr. Felton would have been directed here to us by the old woman at Poynings, and we must have given his address. Remember, his uncle arrived in England the same day he did."

"I shonld have sent him to George, not brought George to him," said Routh. "And there's that uncle of his, Felton; he is no friend of ours, Harriet, he does not like us."

"I am qnite aware of that," she answered: "civil as he is, he is very honest, and has never pretended to be our friend. If he is George's friend, and George has told him anything about his life since he has known us, I think we can hardly expect him to like us."

Her husband gave her one of his darkest looks, but she did not remark it. Many things passed now without attracting her notice; even her husband's looks, and sometimes his words, which were occasionally as bitter as he dared to make them.

He was possessed with a notion that he must, for a time at least, keep a watch upon George Dallas; not near, indeed, nor apparently close, but constant, and as complete as the maintenance of Harriet's influence with him made possible. For himself, he felt his own influence was gone, and he was far too wise to attempt to catch at it, as it vanished, or to ignore its absence. He acquiesced in the tacit estrangement; he was never in the way, but he never lost sight of George; he always knew what he was doing, and had early information of his movements, and with tolerable accuracy, considering that the spy whose services he employed was quite an amateur and novice.

This spy was Mr. James Swain, who took to the duties of his new liue of business with vigorous zeal, and who seemed to derive a grim kind of amusement from their discharge. Stewart Ronth had arrived with certainty at the conclusion that the young man had adhered to the promised silence up to the time of his leaving England with his uncle, and he felt assured that Mr. Felton was in entire ignorance of the circumstances which had had such terrible results for Mrs. Caruthers. It was really important to him to have George Dallas watched; and, in setting Jim Swain to watch him, he was inspired by darkly sinister motives, in view of certain remote contingencies—motives which had snggested themselves to him shortly alter George's unhesitating recognition of the boy who had taken Routh's note to Deane, on the last day of the unhappy man's life, had solved the difficulty which had long puzzled him. Only second in importance to his keeping George Dallas in view was his uot losing sight of the boy; and all this time it never occurred to Routh, as among the remote possibilities of things, that Mr. James Swain was quite as determinad to keep an eye on him.

Harriet had acquiesced in her husband's proposal that they should go to Homburg, readily. It happened that she was rather more cheerful thau usual on the day he made it, more like, though terribly unlike, her former self. Natnre must have its periods of rest lor the mind, be the agony ever so great; and hers was of the slow and hopeless kind, which has such intervals most surely, and with efficacy. One of them had come just then. and she was placid, drowsy, acquiescent. She went with Routh to Homburg; he manaaged to make some hopeful, promising, and credulous acquaintances on the way, and was, besides, accredited to some "business people," ol perlectly authentic character, at Frankfort, in the interest ol the flourishing Flinders.

The change, the novelty, the sight of gayety, in which she took no share, but which she looked on at with a partial diversion of her miud, did her good. It was something even to be out of England; not a very rational or well-founded relief, bnt still a relief, explicable and defeusible too, on the theory to which she adhered, that all her ills were merely physical. The torpid interval prolouged itself, and the vital powers of the sufferer were recruited for the wakening.

This took place when Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge's pony-carriage passed her as she sat by the side ol the broad-shaded road, and the woman's splendid black eyes met hers. When her husband passed her without seeing her, absorbed in passionate admiration, which any child must have recognized as such, for the beautiful woman whose pony-carriage was like a triumphal chariot, so royal and conquering of aspect was she.

Keen were the tormentors, and full of avidity, and subtle was the new device to tax the recruited strength and mock the brief repose. It was raging, fierce, fiery, maddening jealousy.

It was late in the afternoon of the day on which Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge had sent her answer to Mr. Felton's note, and while George Dallas was sitting with Mrs. Routh, that the beautiful widow and her companion—this time exploriug the forest glades in another direction, in which they met but few of the visitors to the springs—once more mentioned Mr. Felton and his son. The gray ponies were going slowly, and the French groom in atteudance was considering the probable direction of the "affair" in which his mistress had so precipitately engaged herself, and which, being conducted in the English tongue, was interpreted to him by glances aud tones only. The beauty of the face ou which Stewart Routh was gazing in an intensity of admiration, with a certain desperation in it, in which a cleverer woman than this one would have seen indications of character to warn and alarm her, but which this one merely recognized as a tribute due to her, was marvellously bright and soft, as the slauting rays of the sun came through the tree stems and touched it lingeringly. Her black eyes had wonderful gleams and reflections in them, and the masses of her dark hair were daintily tinged and tipped with russet tints. She was looking a little thoughtful, a little dreamy. Was she tired, for a moment of sparkling? Was she restiug herself in an array of the semblance ol tenderness, more enchanting still?

"You knew him, then, in your husband's lifetime? He is is not a new acqnaintance?"

"What a catechist yon are," she said, with just a momentary glance at him, and the least flicker of a smile. "I did know him, in my husband's lifetime, who highly diapproved of him if you care for that piece of information; we were great friends, and he was rather inclined to presume upon the fact afterwards."

She lingered upon the word, and gave it all the confirmatory expression Routh had expected and feared.

"And yet yon make an appointmeut with him to meet him here, in this place, where every one is remarked and speculated upon; here, alone, where you are without even a companion—" He paused, and with a light, mocking laugh, inexpressibly provoking, she said,—

"Why don't you say a 'sheep dog?' We know the immortal Becky quite as well as you do. In the first place, my appointment with Arthur Felton means simply nothing. I am just as likely to break it as to keep it; to go to London, or Vienna, or Timbuctoo, to-morrow, if the fancy takes me; or to stay here, and have him told I'm not at home when he calls. ouly that would please his lather; and Mr. Felton is about the only creature of my acquaintance whom I don't want to please. In the second place, I don't care one straw who remarks me, or what they remark. and have no notion of allowing public opinion to take precedence of my pleasure."

She laughed again, a saucy laugh which he did not like, gave him another glance and another flicker of her eyelash, and said:

"Why, how extremely preposterons yon are! Yon know well, if I cared what people could, would, might. or should say, I would not allow you to visit me every day, and I would not drive you out alone like this."

The perfect nnconcern and freedom of the remark took Routh by surprise, and disconcerted him as completely as its undeniable truth. He kept silence; and Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge, amused at the blank expression of his countenance, bnrst iuto a hearty fit of laughter this time.

"I tell you I don't care about public opinion. All the men admire me, no matter what I do; and all the women hate me, and would hate me all the same, for my beauty—which I entirely appreciate, you know—if I made my life as dull and decorous, as miserable, squalid, aud canting, as I make it pleasant, and joyous, and 'not the thing.' Neither men uor women dare to insnlt me; and if they did, I should know how to meet the emergency, I assure you, though I am not at all clever. I am only courageous—'plucky,' your English ladies call it, I think, in the last new style of stable and barrack-room talk. I am that; I don't think I could be afraid of any thing or any one."

"Not of a man who really loved you with all the force and passiou of his heart?" said Routh, in a hoarse whisper, and bending a fierce, dark look upon her.

"Certainly not," she replied, lightly; bnt the color rose in her cheek, and her breath came a little quicker. "I don't believe in people loving with passion and force, and all that sort of thing. It is pretty to talk about on balconies, and it looks well on paper, in a scrawly hand, running crookedly up into the corner, and with plenty of dashes, and no date—" And here she laughed again. and touched up the grays. Routh still kept silence, and still his dark look was bent upon her.

"No, no," she went on, as the rapid trot of the ponies began again to sound pleasantly on the level road, and she turned them out of the forest boundaries toward the town, "I know nothing about all that, except pour rire, as they say in P'aris, about every thing nnder the sun, I do believe. To return to Arthur Felton: he is the last person in the world with whom I could imagine any woman could get up any thing more serious than the flimsiest flirtation."

"You did 'get up' that, however, I imagine?" said Routh.

"Of course we did. We spouted very tritc poetry, and he sent me bouquets—very cheap ones they were, too, and generally came late in the eveuiug, when they may, being warranted not to keep, be had at literally a dead bargain; and we even exchanged photographs—I don't say portraits, you will observe. His is like enough; bnt that is really nothing, even among the most prudish of the blond misses. I wonder the haberdashers don't send their likenesses with their bills, and I shall certainly give mine to the postman herc; I am always grateful to the postman everywhere, and I like this one—he has nice eyes, his name is Hermann, and he does not smoke."

"What a degenerate Germau!" said Routh, "And so Mr. Arthur Felton has your likeness?"

"Had—had, you mean. How can I tell where it is now? thrown in the fire, probably, and that of the reigning sovereign of his affections comfortably installed in the locket which contained it, which is handsome, I confess; but he does not so much mind spending moncy on himself, you see. It is exactly like this."

She placed her whip across the reins, and held all with the lelt hand, while she fumbled with the right among the satin and lace in which she was wrapped. and drew out a short gold chain, to which a richly-chased golden ball, as large as an egg, was attached. Turning slightly toward him, and gently checking her ponies, she touched a spring and the golden egg opened lengthways, and disclosed two small, finely executed photographs.

One was a likeness of herself, and Routh made the usual remarks abont the insufficiency of the photographic art in certain cases. He was bending closely over her hand, when she reversed the revolving plate, and showed him the portrait on the other side

"That is Arthur Felton," she said.

Then she closed the locket, and let it drop down by her side amid the satin and the lace.

The French groom had in his charge a soft India shawl in readiness for his mistress, in case of need. This shawl Stewart Routh took from the servant, and wrapped very carefully round Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge as they neared the town.

"The evening has turned very cold," he said; and, indeed, though she did not seem to feel it, and rather laughed at his solicitude, Routh shivered more than once before she set him down near the Kuursaal, and then drove homeward, past the house where his wife was watching for her, and waiting for him.

Routh ordered his dinner at the Kuursaal, but, though he sat for a long time at the table, he ate nothing which was served to him. But he drank a great deal of wine, and he went home to Harriet—drunk.

"How horribly provoking! It must have come undone while I was handling it to day," said Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge to her maid, when that domestic was attiring her for dinner. "I had the locket, open, not an hour ago."

"Yes, ma'am," answered the maid, examining the short gold chain; "it is not broken, the swivel is open."

"And of all my lockets, I liked my golden egg best," lamented Mrs. P. Ireton Bembridge.

CHAPTER VI.—A FIRST APPEAL.

"Stewart," said Harriet Routh to her husband, in a tone of calm, self-possessed inquiry, on the following day, "what has happened? What occurred yesterday, which you had not the courage to face, and deprived yourself of the power of telling me?"

As Harriet asked him this question, she unconsciously assumed her former manner. Something told her that the cause of Routh's conduct, and of the distress of mind which she read in his face, was not connected with the subject that was torturing her. Anything apart from that, any misfortune, any calamity even, might draw them together again; might teach him anew his need of her, her worth to him,—she felt some alarm, but it was strangely mingled with satisfaction. The sharp agony she had endured had impaired her faculties so far, had dulled her clear understanding so far, that the proportions of the dangers in her path had changed places, and the first and greatest danger was this stranger,—this beautiful dreadful woman. In that direction was the terrible impotence, the helpless horror of weakness, which is the worst attribute of human suffering; in every other there was the power to exercise her faculties, to rally her presence of mind, to call on her fertility of resource, to act for and with him. With him at her side, and in his cause, Harriet was consciously strong; but from a trouble in which he should be arrayed against her, in which he should be her enemy, she shrank, like a leaf from the shrivelling touch of fire.

She was standing by his side as she asked him the question, in the familiar attitude which she had discarded of late. Her composed figure and pale calm face, the small firm white hand, which touched his shoulder with the steady touch he knew so well, the piercing clear blue eyes, all had the old promise in them, of help that had never failed, of counsel that had never misled. He thought of all these things, he felt all these things, but he no longer thought of, or remembered, or looked for the love which had been their motive and their life. He sat moodily, his face pale and frowning, one clenched hand upon his knee, the other restlessly drumming upon the table; his eyes were turned away from her, and for some time after she had spoken he kept a sullen silence.

"Tell me, Stewart," she repeated in a softer voice, while the hand that touched his shoulder moved gently to his neck and and clasped it. "I know there is something wrong. Tell me what it is."

He turned and looked full at her.

"Do you remember what you said, Harriet, when that letter came from Poynings,—what you said about the hydra and its heads."

"I remember," she answered. Her pale cheek grew paler; but she drew nearer to his side, and her fingers clasped his neck more closely and more tenderly. "I remember. Another head has sprang up, and is menacing you."

"Yes," he said, half fiercely, half wearily. "This cursed thing is never to be escaped nor forgotten, I believe. I can hardly tell you what has happened, Harry, and even you will hardly see your way out of this."

A touch of feeling for her was in his voice. He really did suffer in the anticipation of the shock she would have to sustain.

"Tell me—tell me," she repeated, faintly, and with a quick, involuntary closing of her eyes, which would have told a close observer of constant suffering and apprehension.

"Sit down, Harry." He rose as he spoke, placed her in his chair, and stood before her, holding both her hands in his.

"I have found out that the man we knew as Philip Deane was—was Arthur Felton, George Dallas's cousin, the man they are inquiring about, whom they are expecting here."

She did not utter a cry, a groan, or any sort of sound. She shrank into the chair she was sitting in, as if she cowered for life in a hiding-place, her outstreched hands turned cold and clammy in her husband's grasp. Into her widely-opened blue eyes a look of unspeakable horror came, and the paleness of her cheeks turned to ashen gray. Steware Routh, still standing before her holding her hands, looked at her as the ghastly change came over her face, telling—what words could never tell—of the anguish she was suffering, and thought for a moment that she was dying before his face. The breath came from her lips in heavy gasps, and her low, white brow was damp with cold, sluggish drops.

"Harriet," said Routh,—"Harriet, don't give way like this. It's awful,—it's worse than anything I ever thought of, or feared. But don't give way like this."

"I am not giving way," she said. Drawing her hands from his hold, she raised them to her head, and held them pressed to her temples while she spoke. "I will not give way. Trust me, as you have done before. This, then, is what I have felt coming nearer and nearer, like a danger in the dark,—this—this dreadful truth. It is better known than vague. Tell me how you have discovered it."

He began to walk up and down the room, and she still sat cowering in her chair, her hands pressing her temples, her eyes, with their horror-stricken looks, following him.

"I discovered it by an extraordinary accident. I have not seen much of Dallas, as you know, and I know nothing in particular about Mr. Felton and his son. But there is a lady here,—an American widow,—who knows Felton well."

"Yes," said Harriet, with distinctness; and now she sat upright in her chair, and her low, white brow was knitted over her horror-stricken eyes.

"Yes, I have seen her."

"Have you, indeed? Ah! well then, you know who I mean. She and he were great friends,—lovers, I fancy," Routh went on, with painful effort; "and when they parted in Paris, it was with an understanding that they were to meet here just about this time. She met George Dallas, and told him, not that, but something which made him understand that information was to be had from her, and she has appointed an interview with Mr. Felton for to-morrow."

"Yes," repeated Harriet, "I understand. When he and she meet, she will tell him his son is coming here. His son will not come. How did you discover what you have discovered?"

He took out of his pocket a large locket like a golden egg, and opened it by touching a spring. It opened lengthwise, and he held it towards Harriet. She looked at one of the photographs which it enclosed, and then, pushing it from her, covered her face with her hands.

"She showed me that yesterday," Routh continued, his throat drier, his voice more hesitating with every word he spoke, "when she told me she was expecting him,—and I contrived to secure it."

"For what purpose?" asked Harriet, hoarsely.

"Don't you see, Harriet," he said, earnestly, "that it is quite plain Dallas has never seen a likeness of his cousin, or he must have recognized the face. Evidently Mr. Felton has not one with him. Dallas might not have seen this; but then, on the other hand, he might; and to prevent his seeing it, even for a few hours, until we had time to talk it over, to gain ever so little time, was a great object."

"You took a strange way of gaining time, Stewart," said Harriet. "Had you come home last night in a state to tell me the truth, time would really have been gained. We might have got away this morning."

"Got away!" said Routh. "What do you mean? What good could that do?"

"Can you seriously ask me?" she returned. "Does any other course suggest itself to you?"

"I don't know, Harry. I am bewildered. The shock was so great that the only thing I could think of was to try and forget it for a little. I don't know that I ever in my life deliberately drank for the purpose of confusing my thoughts, or postponing them, before; but I could not help it, Harry. The discovery was so far from any apprehension or fancy I had ever had."

"The time was, Stewart," said Harriet, slowly and with meaning, "when, instead of 'confusing' or 'postponing' any trouble, dread, or difficulty, you would have brought any or all of them to meet at once; unhappily for us both, I think that time is past."

He glanced at her sharply and uneasily, and an angry flush passed over his face.

"What cursed folly have you got in your head? Is it not enough that this fresh danger has come down upon me—"

"Upon us, you mean," she interrupted, calmly.

"Well, upon us, then; but you must get up an injured air, and go on with I don't know what folly? Have done with it; this is no time for womanish nonsense—"

"There is so much womanish nonsense about me! There is such reasonableness in your reproach!"

Again he looked angrily at her, as he walked up and down the room with a quicker step. He was uneasy, amazed at the turn she had taken, at the straying of her attention from the tremendous fact he had revealed; but, above and beyond all this, he was afraid of her.

He shrugged his shoulders impatiently, and said, "Let it drop, let it drop; let me be as unreasonable as you like, and blame me as much as you please, but be truer to yourself, Harriet, to your own helpful nature, than to yield to such fancies now. This is no time for them. We must look things in the face, and act."

"It is not I, but you, who refuse to look things in the face, Stewart. This woman, whom I do not know, who has not sought my acquaintance, whose name you have not once mentioned before me, but who makes you the confidant of her flirtations and her appointments,—she is young and beautiful, is she not?"

"What the devil does it matter whether she is or not?" said Routh, fiercely. "I think you are bent on driving me mad. What has come to you? I don't know you in this new character. I tell you, this woman—"

"Mrs. Bembridge," said Harriet, calmly.

"Mrs. Bembridge, then, has been the means of my making a discovery which is of tremendous importance, and thus she has unconsciously saved me from an awful danger!"

"By preventing George Dallas from finding out this fact for a little longer?"

"Precisely so. Now I hope you have come to yourself, Harriet, and will talk rationally about this,"

"I will," she said, rising from her chair and approaching him. She placed her hands upon his shoulders, and looked at him with a steady, searching look. "We will talk this out, Stewart, and I will not shrink from anything there is to be said about it; but you must hear me then, in my turn. We are not like other people, Stewart, and our life is not like theirs. Only ruin can come of any discord or disunion between us."

Then she quietly turned away and sat down by the window, with her head a little averted from him, waiting for him to speak. Her voice had been low and thrilling as she said those few words, without a tone of anger in it, and yet the callous man to whom they were addressed heard in them something which sounded like the warning or the menace of doom.

"When Dallas knows what we now know, Harriet," said Routh, "he will come to us and tell us his discovery, and then the position of affairs will be that for which we were prepared, if we had not succeeded in inducing him to be silent about Deane's identity."

"Exactly so," said Harriet; "with the additional difficulty of his having concealed his knowledge."

"Yes," said Routh; "but that is his affair, not ours. He concealed his knowledge because he was compromised. There is nothing to compromise me. I neglected a public duty, certainly, in favor of a private friendship; but that is a venial offence."

It was wonderful to see how the callousness of the man asserted itself. As he arranged the circumstances, and started them, he began to regain his accustomed ease of manner.

"It is unfortunate that he should be compromised in this double way, and, of course, there will be a great deal to go through, which will be hard to bear, and not easy to manage; but, after all, the thing is only as bad as it was when Dallas came back. Don't you see that, Harriet?"

"I see that, Stewart, but I also see that he will now have a tenfold interest in finding out the truth. Hitherto he might have been content with clearing himself of suspicion, but now he will be the one person most deeply interested in discovering the truth."

"But how can he discover it?" said Routh; his face darkened, and he dropped his voice still lower, "Harriet, have you forgotten that if there be danger from him, there is also the means of turning that danger on himself? Have you forgotten that I can direct suspicion against him tenfold stronger than any that can arise against me?"

She shivered, and closed her eyes again. "No, I have not forgotten," she said; "but O, Stewart, it is an awful thing to contemplate,—a horrible expedient."

"Yet you arranged it with a good deal of composure, and said very little about its being horrible at the time," said Routh, coarsely. "I hope you are not going to be afflicted with misplaced and ill-timed scruples now. It's rather late in the day, you know, and you'll have to choose, in that case, between Dallas and me."

She made him no answer.

"The thing is just this," he continued; "Dallas cannot come to any serious grief, I am convinced; but, if the occasion arises, he must be let come to whatever grief there may be,—a trial and an accquittal at the worst. The tailor's death, and his mother's recovery, will tell in his favor, though I've no doubt he will supply all the information Evans would have given, of his own accord. I think there is no real risk; but, Harriet, much, very much, depends on you."

"On me, Stewart! How?"

"In this way. When Dallas comes to see you, you must find out whether any other clew to the truth exist; if not, there is time before us. You must keep up the best relations with him, and find out all he is doing. Is it not very odd that he has not mentioned his uncle's solicitude about his son to you?"

"I don't think so, Stewart. I feel instinctively that Mr Felton dislikes and distrusts us— (what well-founded dislike and distrust it was," she thought, mournfully, with a faint pity for the unconscious father) —"and George knows it, I am sure, and will not talk to me about his uncle's affairs. He is right there; there is delicacy of feeling in George Dallas."

"You seem to understand every turn in his disposition," said Routh, with a sneer.

"There are not many to understand," replied Harriet, simply. "The good and evil in him are easily found, being superficial. However, we are not talking of his character, but of certain irreparable harm which we must do him, it seems, in addition to that which we have done. Go on with what you were saying."

"I was saying that you must find out what you can, and win his confidence in every way. I shall keep as clear of him as possible, under any circumstances. If the interview of to-morrow goes off without any discovery, there will be a chance of its not being made at all."

"Impossible, Stewart—quite impossible," said Harriet, earnestly. "Do not nourish any such expectations. How long, do you suppose, will Mr. Felton remain content with expecting his son's arrival, and hearing no news of him? How soon will he set inquiries on foot which must end in discovery? Remember, hiding is possible only when there is no one seeking, urged by a strong motive to find. Listen to me, now, in your turn, and listen to me as you used to do, not to cavil at my words, or sneer at them, but weigh them well. This is a warning to us, Stewart. I don't talk superstition, as you know. I don't believe in any nonsense of the kind; but this

I do believe, because experience teaches it, that there are combinations of circumstances in which the wise may read signs and tokens which do not mislead. Here is just such a case. The first misfortune was George's return : it was confirmed by his uncle's arrival ; it is capped by this terrible discovery. Stewart, let us be warned and wise in time ; let us return to England at once—to-morrow. I suppose you will have the means of learning the tenor of Mr. Felton's interview with this lady who knew his son so well. If no discovery be then made, let us take it as another indication of luck, circumstance, what you will, and go."

"What for?" said Routh, in amazement. "Are you returning to that notion, when all I have said is to show you that you must not lose sight of Dallas?"

"I know," she said—"I know ; but you are altogether wrong. George Dallas must make the discovery some time, and must bear the brunt of the suspicion. I don't speak in his interests, but in yours—in mine. Let it come when it may, but let us be away out of it all. We have money now, Stewart,—at least, we are not so poor but that we may make our way in another country,—that we may begin another life. Have I ever talked idly, Stewart, or given you evil counsel? No, surely not. In all the years for which you have been all the world to me, I have never spoken vainly : let me not speak vainly now. I might implore, I might entreat," she went on, her eyes now bright with eagerness, and her hands clasped. "I might plead a woman's weakness and natural terror : I might tell you I am not able for the task you dictate to me ; but I tell you none of these things. I am able to do and to suffer anything, everything that may or must be done, or suffered for you. I don't even speak of what I have suffered ; but I say to you, be guided by me in this. There is a weak spot in your stronghold ; there is a flaw in our armor. I know it. I cannot tell, I cannot guess where it is. An instinct tells me that ruin is threatening us, and this is our way of escape. O, my husband, listen to me!"

(To be Continued.)

The Sigma Phi Celebration.—On Monday evening last the members of the Sigma Phi Society residing in the city, celebrated the forteenth anniversary of their association. The Society numbers among its members some of the most distinguished literary personages of the country, and many have held, or now hold, prominent political positions. A number of representatives from Atlantic Chapters early migrated to the Pacific coast. These have since had accessions to their numbers, until now the Brethren may be found in all the States and Territories west of the Rocky Mountains. For many years past the anniversaries of the organization of this Fraternity have been observed with great spirit and enthusiasm by the members resident here.

Among the members now resident in California are the following :

Hon. Edward Norton, Rev. Chas. Wadsworth, D. D., Hon. Edward Tompkins, Alfred Wheeler, Rev. J. E. Benton, Wm. H. J. Brooks, Rev. I. H. Brayton, Chester Averill, J. I. Bowman, Dr. F. W. Hatch, I. N. Thorne, John Beveridge, Chas. E. Brayton, M. W. Belshaw, Frank Hamilton, Jr., E. D. Shattuck, H. S. Cravens, H. K. Mitchell, J. E. Southwick, W. G. West, J. P. Winnegar, D. P. Belknap and H. B. Livingston.

The anniversary dinner came off at Martin's Restaurant, after which reminiscences of college days and college companions occupied the time until an early hour in the morning.

Charles Warren Stoddard's Poems.—We have had the pleasure of examining the proof-sheets of the illustrations already prepared for the forthcoming volume of Charles Warren Stoddard's poetry, now in the press of Edward Bosqui & Co., of this city. The illustrations were designed and engraved by Messrs. Van Vleck & Keith ; are beautiful specimens of art, and some of them valuable, as faithful representations of California scenery. They comprise "Tamalpais" and "Point Lobos," illustrating poems which appeared originally in the Californian ; "Sunset by the Sea," "At the Spring" and "Meditation," together with some pretty head and tail pieces. Several additional illustrations are contemplated. The book will be issued about the first of May, and will be in all respects the finest specimen of California bookmaking hitherto produced. Furthermore, we are pleased to learn that the list of subscribers to this volume is rapidly increasing—a gratifying evidence of the appreciation in which our citizens hold native genius and and art.

Death of "Artemus Ward."—As we go to press we learn, from dispatches to the daily papers, the painful intelligence of the death of Charles F. Browne, better known to the public as "Artemus Ward," which occurred at Southampton, England, on the 6th inst. Mr. Browne was the most popular humorist of the day, while his cordial manners and social qualities endeared him to a host of personal friends.

San Francisco Olympic Club—The Second Exhibition and Social party of this club, for the present season, will be given on Friday evening next at their Hall on Sutter street. The entertainments given by the Olympians, like good wine, needs no "bush."

The Last Day.—The exhibition of Nast's painting, "Sherman's March Through Georgia," at Snow & Roos' gallery, will close this evening. The painting will be re-shipped to New York.

"Locae Architectural Items," unavoidably crowded out of this number, will appear next week.

[For the Californian.]

SOUND ADVICE TO YOUNG MEN.

BEING MODERN EXPOSITIONS AND MODIFICATIONS OF OLD MAXIMS.

BY PRENTICE.

THE following screeds of advice are shot at young men semi-annually from numerous papers The advice is supposed to be good, and, consequently, is never followed. We contend that it is not good. We propose to take up several of these maxims, one by one, and prove their fallacy. The first shot reads thus : "Keep good company or none."

Now, living a hermit and keeping no company is an unnatural state of existence. If you are good yourself, go into bad company and try and elevate them to your own level. Go among the black sheep. You need not thereby become a black sheep yourself. Let them have a good opinion of you. Exclusive and select piety and goodness, of the "I am holier than thou" stripe, have damned millions. Who is to regenerate the unregenerated unless it be the regenerated themselves? Preaching goodness by words, redeems but few. Preaching goodness by example may be more potent for redemption, but you cannot preach by example ten miles off. Don't keep all your goodness to yourself. Let your light shine before men and women. Hide it not under a bushel. The man of Nazareth did not keep such company. He went amongst publicans and sinners. Perhaps sinners in those days may have resembled the ungodly of the present. We mean the gamblers, the bar keepers, the men who hang about Maguire's Opera House, who frequent the Bank Exchange, who patronize melodeons and beer saloons, aye, perhaps, even the members of the Press and State legislators, etc.

The second reads, "Never be idle." Another fallacy. It is good at times to be idle. It is good for mind and body. There is a time for all things. A perpetual condition of work, work, work, be it corporeal or mental, is ruinous to mind and body. Go into the fields and lie down upon the grass, providing it be not damp, as it may then have a rheumatic tendency. Wander by the sea shore. Be lazy once in a while. The steam engine must be idle sometimes that its fires may be drawn, its boilers cleansed, a screw tightened here, and a leak stopped there. You cannot go through the world with a full head of steam on all the time There is temperance even in work. Idleness makes one reflective. What was Newton doing when the apple fell from the tree? Lolling on the grass.

Third gun. "If your hands can't be usefully employed attend to the cultivation of your mind." This is very good as far as it goes, only it does not go far enough. The mind may be undergoing the process of cultivation, even while the hands are employed. The mind is always at work and the qualities belonging thereunto may be cultivated, even while one is digging post holes. Sitting down with a stern determination to do some heavy reading that intellectual cultivation may be facilitated, has oftentimes an effect to defeat the end in view. It comes to be regarded as a task, for which reason it becomes distasteful. The cultivation of mind goes on everywhere, in doors and on the street, and in the use of every sense and faculty we are possessed of. Put that in your pipe and smoke it, young man.

Fourth explosion. "Always speak the truth." There should have been added to this modification "unless you write for the newspapers." No one who writes for the public can gain an honest livelihood who always speak the truth. There are such things as desperate cases, in which the telling of the truth may lead to dire misfortune. If you remain silent under examination, your silence may be construed as a tacit admisssion. The temptation then to tell a lie of a temporary nature is very strong. Pious people sometimes break the news of the sudden death of a husband to a loving wife by these short-lived lies, and pardon themselves for it. We are all telling silent lies every day. Do you proclaim it on the house-tops when your pockets hold not a cent? Don't you go about with a cheerful countenance, as if you were staggering under the load of prosperity? You know full well, were you to proclaim that truth, the ravenous world would turn and devour you—that you would share the fate of the wounded porpoise.

Fifth bomb. Never speak evil of any one. This should be so modified as to read "Never speak evil needlessly of any one." If by evil is meant the mention of certain defects in a person's character, there may come a time when mention of such defects are necessary. If you discover your bosom friend about employing a professional thief as a domestic, it may be as well to give your friend a hint regarding the man's unfortunate peculiarities. If unintentionally you walk out with a lunatic, who contemplates murdering you on reaching some retired spot, you might not admire the stern and formidable virtue which prevented friends from informing you that the man was mad because they made it a rule "Never to speak evil of anyone." A persistent obedience of such unbending maxims is ruinous.

Sixth report. "Earn money before you spend it." This maxim is obsolete and unnecessary at this time of day, since ninety-nine hundredths of us are compelled to earn our money twice before we have the privilege of spending it once. It applies only to millionaires who are obliged to hire others to look after their constantly accumulating piles of gold.

Seventh musket. "Do not marry until you are able to support a wife." Obedience to this maxim would ruin all possibility of marrying a wife who could support you. Such a thing might be. Such things sometimes are, especially among clergymen, and occasionally physicians. If the lady be rich, she has a right to support you (the country at the present writing being free in this matter,) and if you are poor and your bodily and mental conformation is agreeable to the lady, you have a natural and inalienable right to be married to her, and keep married so long as the union is agreeable to both parties. Obedience to this maxim would never give to any liberal-minded and wealthy lady the opportunity of making of herself a blessed and long sought for donation, to some enterprising, young poor man. It is therefore opposed to the admonition, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Eighth gun. "When you retire to bed ; think o'er what you what you have been doing during the day." When you retire to bed the best thing you can do is to go to sleep. That is the legitimate object of going to bed. That is what beds were founded for. Don't bother your brains and get nervous over your rascality by daylight. It is unhealthy and promotes wakefulness. Sufficient for the night is the evil thereof, especially if you possess a partner of your joys and sorrows, and a concomitant infant. Morning is the proper time for the revival of past transactions, provided you can enjoy the luxury of lying abed.

Ninth shot. "Save when you are young, that you may spend when you are old." Well enough were there any certainty of growing old. We believe in the expediency and rationality of "going it whilst you're young" provided you go it in a prudent and temperate manner. This may be done, paradoxical as it may appear. Economy carried to extreme becomes parsimony. The close-fisted at twenty are miserly at sixty. Many of the good things of this planet fade out entirely at three score and ten. If they are to be bought and enjoyed at all, it is in the vigor and strength of youth and manhood, and not when the eye becomes dim, the taste palled, the knee weak and the soul just on the point of quitting its decayed tenement. Save for a rainy day, but not for too many rainy days The present is all we have. Live for it a little. Saving and hoarding in anticipation of the future have been too strongly hammered into the national brain. "Great Heavens!" says one, "would you encourage the national extravagance, already proverbial?" Not altogether. The extravagance of shoddy is better than the cold-blooded selfishness of the miser The money from which the fool is so soon parted, generally benefits to a certain extent some one poorer than himself. But how extensive is the good derived from the millions shut up in banks, vaults etc. ?

[For the Californian.]

THE EAGLE.

Up through the fields of azure hue,
My pinions tipt with morning dew,
I calmly float ;
As on a wide, wide waste of sea,
Some dark speck there, may floating be,
A drifting boat.

The Sun's red eye in flaming light
Comes rolling from the caves of night,
To meet me there;
And down below, the Earth in gloom
Seems rising from the pit of doom,
On waves of air.

A lance of flame darts through the sky,
And gilds my pinions passing by
Upon its way ;
Then tides of light from out the Sun
In flashing streams around me run,
To bring the day.

O'er cloud and tempest, far abroad,
I view the highways of the Lord,
In boundless space ;
Where worlds above, below, around,
Seem specks of light in the profound,
Before His face.

Deep down upon the Earth below,
Black specks are passing to and fro—
What do they there?
In ceaseless turmoil, rushing haste,
As if by some dark demons chased,
Of woe and care.

But I, who upward soar afar,
Am watching with the morning star,
When day is born ;
And bathing in its crimson sea,
The songs of worlds float by to me,
From out the dawn.

O ! things of Earth, that walk and creep
Within the far abysmal deep,
Of boundless space ;
How dim amid the starry worlds,
Earth's dusky form its face unfolds
In circling race.

X–X.

San Francisco, February, 1867.

[For the Californian.]

CACOGRAPHIC LITERATURE.

THERE are certain would-be-thought scholarly critics and elegant men of letters, who condemn, indiscriminately, all those effusions of which one characteristic is that all or most of the words called "hard" by school urchins, are misspelled. Some of them go so far as to assert that such productions, emanating from men of literary ability, are an insult to the language; that they tend to vitiate the language and degrade literature; and that the newspapers—especially literary papers (which they assume to be the arbitres elegantiarum in this branch of æsthetics)—ought to wholly contemn and reject them, lest a "bad spell" should come over their readers, destructive to all correct notions of literary propriety. With these high-toned censors we have no sympathy. We like a variety of mental as well as of physical food. We would occasionally turn from Plato to Pindar by way of relaxation. The wisdom of Fenelon does not prevent us from enjoying the ribaldry of Rabelais. "Box and Cox" can amuse us after we have been elevated and impressed by the artistic rendition of the stately character of Richelieu. A banquet of Bacon does not destroy our appetite for an afterdish of Joe Miller, and we can even relish "Sut Lovengood" or "Parson Nasby" after an hour or so with Story, or Bancroft, or Motley. "Every one to his taste," saith the proverb; and we think ours is not the worst. What! O critic, "because thou art virtuous, dost think there shall be no more cakes and ale?"

The cacographic style has its uses, and perhaps it is not more abused than most others. Before condemning it, it would perhaps be as well to consider that it has often been used in works of standard character. Fielding and Smollett frequently made their minor characters write characteristically, and their example has been followed by later eminent novelists, both English and American. Many writers have employed cacography solely for the purpose of amusing their readers; these are mere buffoons, most of them low, contemptible and unendurable. They have poured forth a volume of trash against which every respectable press should close its columns. They pander to a vulgar taste, which deems everything "funny" that is merely disjointed, and would find as much food for mirth in the painful hobbling of a cripple as in the ludicrous antics of a harlequin. Were the censures of the critics directed only against this class, we would heartily concur in them. But when we find arraigned in this category real artists—literary caricaturists, whose productions, while grotesque, exhibit breadth of power with depth of purpose, we must enter our humble protest.

These writers deal in keen and cutting satire. To employ it successfully they assume certain characters, which they costume, as it were, accordingly. Mr. Thackeray, for example, wished to satirize certain foibles of the English aristocracy abroad. To do this effectually he must write from "behind the scenes." Accordingly he employs the character of an upper servant with an English nobleman's family on the continent, and in his name produces "Jeames's Diary"—a work no less keen and effective than "Vanity Fair." Had Thackeray clothed the supposed diary of the English flunkey with scholarly diction and orthography, the book would have been an absurdity and would have failed of its purpose. In like manner James Russell Lowell borrowed the regimentals of private "Birdofreedom Sawin" to satirize the spirit which prompted the Mexican War, and Mr. Locke assumed the holy robe of "Rev. Petroleum V. Nasby" in order the more surely and completely to bring into ridicule and contempt the Northern Copperheads. It is absurd to suppose that either of these gentlemen—and especially the latter—could have succeeded as well by writing in elegant language over his own signature or a fictitious one. By adopting a similar style, "Josh Billings" has been enabled to mingle keen wit and profound philosophy with a rustic humor which has captivated tens of thousands of readers; Artemus Ward has winged many a sharp arrow of wit and satire, and other writers have succeeded in accomplishing various purposes, which it is highly probable they could not otherwise have done.

Nevertheless, the style is not one to be imitated. To use it successfully requires at least average wit and common sense, combined with a talent which but few possess, though nearly every one thinks it is easy enough. But that its exercise can in anywise affect the purity or elegance of the English language is a proposition as absurd as that the same result could follow from the introduction of provincialisms, or the speech of ignorant persons, in works of acknowledged merit. The style has its uses—even its beauties—and within certain limits is admired by persons of culture and refinement. It is hardly doubtful that even the critics who so scornfully condemn it occasionally find both amusement and instruction in the "badly spelled" epistles of Nasby, Billings and others.

JOHN CLERK.

JOHN MINDLETON & SON'S great credit sale of three hundred and fifty homestead lots will take place at Platt's Hall on Monday week, March 18th inst. Call and procure maps.

REMOVAL.—P. Lisenfeld, the premium billiard-table manufacturer so long located at 612 Battery street, has removed to 539 Sacramento street, a few doors below Montgomery. See card.

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS.

THE Mariner's Compass, which was produced on Saturday, was presented again on Monday and then withdrawn from the stage. It was an even worse play than The Orange Girl, and not even the fine scenery with which it was presented could save it. The management of the Opera House must not take it for granted that because a play has proved a success at one of the minor theatres in London, it will prove acceptable to the audience at a first-class theatre in San Francisco. The lower classes of London are easily amused, and are not very critical as regards the sense of a play as long as the moral sentiment is good and the fun is broad and noisy enough. The San Francisco public will not tolerate trash on the stage, therefore the less they have offered to them the better it will be for the management. On Wednesday, Mr. John McCullough appeared as "Hamlet," and rendered the part carefully and conscientiously, avoiding all attempt at new readings, and contenting himself with following stage traditions. Mr. McCullough's reading and acting were both good. Miss Alice Kingsbury gave us "Ophelia," differing considerably from that which is generally seen. I think Miss Kingsbury's conception of the character is far better than that of an actress who makes "Ophelia" a quiet, rather sedate young lady. The other characters were fairly played. On Thursday Funchon was played and, as has been the case on every occasion of its production, the house was crowded. Last night Mark Lemon's drama, entitled Sea and Land, was produced. As the CALIFORNIAN's rule is to go to press before the curtain rises, on Friday, in order that all the typographic artistes engaged on it may have an opportunity to attend the theatre, I cannot write a criticism of the manner in which this play was performed until next week. It will be played at the matinée to-day, and again in the evening.

Miss Pauline Conger, a young lady of this city, who has good literary attainments, will, at an early day, make her debut at Maguire's Opera House, in Sheridan Knowles' play of The Wife. Miss Conger intends to adopt the stage as a profession; she has youth and good looks, and is said by her friends to possess rare dramatic talent.

On Monday Robert Heller, the conjuror and pianist, made his first appearance at the Metropolitan Theatre. He possesses a great advantage in being a fluent talker, and possessing considerable skill in playing tricks with his mother tongue. He keeps the audience amused by talking, conjuring and playing on the piano, for a little over two hours. The conjuring portion of the performance is not as good as we expected it would be. The invention of the electric telegraph renders the explanation of such tricks as the two first on the programme, the "Cabalistic Clock" and the "Aerial Bell," very easy. The clock, which is of glass, is made, by means of a wire passing through the centre of the cord by which it is suspended, to point to any hour required; the glass bell by the same means raps answers to questions. Heller did not tell me how these feats were accomplished; I knew them many years ago. In the feat entitled "Infernal Medicines," the sleight of hand required is cleverly performed, but the feat itself is an old one which has been performed here many times. When I come to the "Witch's Pole" I must pass in my checks; it is perfectly incomprehensible. The "Orange Tree" is a very ingenious and beautiful piece of mechanism. Heller handles the silver rings with far more grace than any of his predecessors. The coarse insult, which Mr. Heller saw fit, on the first two nights, to offer to the members of the Odd Fellow's Association (holding up the rings formed into the honored symbol of their order, and exclaiming "Idiotic offshoot of Free Masonry) was subsequently wisely omitted. He is a fine pianist; his execution is brilliant; his style of playing is very cold; his art seems to lie chiefly in his fingers' ends; he appears to possess equal firmness and power in right and left hands; his playing in octaves is very fine. As a composer, Heller is "pretty." His "Last Rose of Summer," composed for the express purpose of exhibiting to advantage his clever tricks on the piano, is not a fine musical production. The good old tune does not deserve to be treated in such a flippant manner. "Second Sight," exhibited by Heller and his assistant Willie, has set all San Francisco to wondering. "Second Sight" has been I know most effectively exhibited by means of an established code of questions, each one containing in itself its answer. For instance: We will say that Heller, on receiving a watch, must frame his question thus: "What is this?" Willie answers, "A watch." Heller says, "Go on." Willie says, "It is gold." If the watch is silver, Heller would perhaps say, "gold or silver?" instead of "go on." It is not difficult to imagine how, by varying the question every time (as it will be observed Heller does), it may be possible to convey to the man on the stage the names of many hundreds of articles. Second sight is generally a miracle of memory. It is possible that Heller may not use this method, and may accomplish his second sight performance by the aid of physiological communication with Willie. If the code of signals which I have mentioned is used, it is quite possible for Heller to arrange with his confederate on the stage before the commencement of the performance each night, that after he has asked many questions aloud he will touch nine articles and demand their names by simply clapping his hands, thus the first clap shall give information that he is touching a stick, the second a hat, and so on. I do not pretend to say that Robert Heller's "great mystery of second sight" is "worked" in this way; but I say pay attention to his questions, and notice whether he always, when a watch is handed to him, addresses his question to Willie in the same words. Heller will perform every night during the coming week.

I am sure every one in San Francisco will be grieved to hear that Signor Felipe Morelli, the favorite baritone—the finest that ever was heard in this city—died in Jamaica some weeks ago. This sad news was received by a gentleman in this city this week. Signor Morelli was very much liked by all who knew him, and his brother professionals in this city will lament his death.

The public will be glad to hear that Mrs. Laura Cuppy, who has been too long absent from this city, will shortly return and will resume her popular Sunday lectures at the Opera House. Mrs Cuppy has met with great success in Sacramento, large and fashionable audiences having attended each one of her lectures.

A lecture, on a highly interesting subject, will be delivered on Sunday evening, March 17th, at Maguire's Opera House. Dr. H. B. Davison will lecture on the "Commercial Wants, Present Condition, Productions, Soil and Climate, and Chief Characteristics of the inhabitants of the States of Colima and Jalisco." The large cities of Colima and Guadalajara lie in these States. The latter city is second in point of commercial importance in Mexico. Dr. Davison has been engaged for the last seven years in those cities in commercial pursuits. This lecture will be more especially interesting at this time, when the commercial men of Guadalajara, becoming awake to the importance of the navigation of Lake Chapala and the Rio Grande, have, in connection with American and foreign capitalists in this city, incorporated the "Lake Chapala and Rio Grande Steam Navigation and Commercial Company." The first steamer for Lake Chapala is rapidly approaching completion. The announcement of this lecture has led me a little beyond the strict province of a dramatic letter, but the fact that Mexico is the most interesting country in the world, and the "dramatic events" now transpiring there, must be my excuse.

TOUCHSTONE.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS are beautiful and bright with verdure and flowers. The animals in the zoological collection are in a high state of health and spirits, and the green-houses and hot-houses are in fine order.

THE PACIFIC MUSEUM.—The costly ceroplastic models of the internal organs of the human frame, on exhibition at this establishment, are objects of interest to the studious youth of this city.

THE HOMESTEAD SALE TO-DAY.—At 12 o'clock to-day, at Platt's Hall, Messrs. Cobb & Sinton will commence their grand auction sale of five hundred Homestead lots—each 25 by 114 feet. This property occupies the whole of twenty one blocks and portions of others, lying between 22d and 25th streets, and Dolores and Noe streets—forming a portion of the Mission table-lands, and is all held by that best of titles, United States patent. The new terminus of the Market street horse-car railroad is within two or three blocks of these lots. The terms of sale are very easy—one-third cash and the balance to remain on mortgage at one per cent. Real estate investments, in a rapidly growing city like ours, are the surest basis of wealth. There is no fear of the San Francisco real estate "petering out"; on the contrary, there is almost a certainty that its increase in value will probably double or treble the amount of purchase money in less than two years. With so large a number of lots to dispose of at this sale, they must necessarily be struck off at the lowest selling figures, and the present opportunity for investment is no ordinary one.

DR. BENTON will lecture, and exhibit his remarkable power of magnetism on the persons of the audience, to-night at Congress Hall. The Doctor, being an Electrical Physician, takes this method of making the public acquainted with the power that electricity has over the human system, and has gallantly made the admission free for ladies, and 25 cents only for gentlemen. The psychological features of his lectures are more wonderful and amusing than the stereotyped tricks that Heller and other conjurers do. They should be seen by everyone. He will continue his lectures next week on Friday and Saturday evenings.

GOOD WATCHES, AND CHEAP.—C. E. Collius & Co., 603 Montgomery street, are retailing the celebrated machine-manufactured American watches at wholesale prices, thus placing it within the means of every one to purchase as good a time-keeper as the best imported. They also sell Swiss and English watches at very reasonable prices. Let every man heed the Scriptural injunction, "I say unto you all, watch!"

LET the public bear in mind that Mr. Jacob Schreiber, at Nos. 121 and 123 Sansome street, below Pine, is especially engaged in the business of Beds, Bedding, Mattresses, Blankets, etc., where they can be purchased at lower rates than elsewhere. Hotel and steamboat men know this fact well, and smaller purchasers can be convinced that this is so by calling and pricing the above articles.

REMOVAL.—Mr. John F. Snow, who cleans and restores soiled kid gloves to their original snow-like purity, has removed to the new Mechanic's Institute building, No. 25 Post street, directly opposite his old stand.

YOUNG MEN requiring the aid of a physician, can receive important information, gratuitously, by applying to Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple.

ELECTRICITY.—Four bits for the use of the powerful electro-magnetic battery of Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street.

DYSPEPSIA IS CURED, not patched up, guaranteed thorough, and to the entire satisfaction of the invalid, by the never-failing process of Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple.

CURES GUARANTEED to the sick in almost all cases—without medicine, mesmeric jugglery, or any species of fraud or deception, by Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple.

CONUNDRUMS.

BY GEORGE WAKEMAN.

SOME time ago, a friend sent me, with his compliments, a very curious present. To outward appearance it was a box of cigars. I was rather surprised at this, for the reason that I do not smoke, and, moreover, my friend having been an editor for the last ten years, is not in a pecuniary condition which would render it prudent for him to make very numerous presents of cigars at the current prices. I opened the lid and discovered that the box was filled with small slips of printed paper neatly tied into little bundles and closely packed. I cut the ribbon of one of the bundles, and spreading the slips on the table, found that they were twenty-five conundrums. In fact it was a box of conundrums. My friend had taken the fancy to cut them from exchanges. of which he looked over piles every day, and to pack them in this peculiar manner.

I counted the bundles, and made various computations in reference to them. I do not remember the exact result—I have no memory for figures—but, in a general way, I estimated that I could supply a country weekly paper with a column of conundrums for each issue during the space of four years and six months. I judged, however, that one eighth of a column would be as many as an ordinary reader would heartily enjoy in each paper, and, at that rate, I would have been able to keep the journal supplied with conundrums for thirty-six years.

I tried to compute the explosive power of the material contained in this little box. I know an obese, and very lively middle-aged gentleman, with large cheeks, white teeth and a generally cheerful expression of face, who, by the simplest conundrum, judiciously told after dinner, can be thrown into such convulsions as threaten the demolition of the dishes and the bursting of his own sides. He will go off in that manner about five times by varying the style of conundrums, after which they gradually lose their effect upon him until the next day. Now let us suppose that, by some undiscovered means —by some intellectual ignition of every one of the conundrums in this box—the point of each and all of them might be made to flash upon his mind at the same moment, as thousands of grains of powder ignite at once; suppose there might be one grand, sudden, simultaneous explosion of this wit upon his mind—what would be the result? If he nearly breaks the dishes and bursts his sides at one conundrum, what would become of him and the house over his head when the effect of their mass of wit was concentrated into one convulsion? It is indeed a merciful ordering of Providence that the mind is only capable of a certain amount of joy and grief and mirth, after which they lose their force, and that the effect of wit upon the mind does not increase, like the power of powder, in mathematical ratio with the quantity.

I must confess that I was at a loss what use to make of this present. To attempt to read all the contents of the box was out of question. Could I make them marketable? Could I induce some magazine to publish nothing for several months but conundrums, with "to be continued" at the close of each number? Could I sell them at so much a dozen, as motto verses are sold? Or could I be still more choice with them and procure a run of custom from gentlemen who are required to keep up a reputation for wit to secure invitations to social dinners, after the manner of the person who wrote that article in one of Dickens's Christmas stories, which explains the manner of making conundrums from the dictionary. That person's idea, I may remark, is old, for my friend informs me that at one period of his life he was timed. on a bet, and proved himself able, with the aid of a dictionary and spelling-book, to make two and a half conundrums per minute, for such a length of time (being allowed intervals for meals and sleep), that it was quite evident that he could continue doing so as long as the English language held out. Indeed, he was not limited by the number of words in the language, for he found it possible to make a great many conundrums on one word.

To give me some idea of his method of operation, my friend took the pains to make assorted packages illustrative of distinct styles of conundrums. For instance, there were two packages (fifty) on the single word "lie." As, for instance, when is truth falsehood? When it lies in a well. There were three packages about ships. You will find in your spelling-book a list of words ending with ship. Every one of them is capable of a conundrum after the following style: What ship should be freighted with knowledge? Scholarship. Take all the technical words used on shipboard (if you have a complete spelling-book you will find them in one list), and every one of those words is capable of one or more conundrums. How easy it is! Why is a man who marries twice like a ship? Because he has a second mate. When may a ship be said to be in love? Notice how many answers may be made to this: When she wants a mate (there it is again); when she wants to be manned; when she is struck aback by a heavy swell; when the carpenter re guards her; when she makes much of a fast sailor; when she is tender to a man-of-war; when she is a ship of great size (sighs); when she hugs the wind; when she runs down for a smack; when she is after a consort; when she is attached to a buoy.

Let me begin at the beginning, with my friend, and illustrate some methods of constructing conundrums. The student should commence on the alphabet. The best letter is t. For instance: Why is the letter s like dinner? Perhaps you give it up. The triumphant student answers, Because it comes before t. Here is one more ingenious on account of its associations: Why is China called the celestial land? Because a little tea (t) makes an immortal life out of an immoral one. The practical hand can make these at the rate of one in thirteen seconds. Thus: Why is a a strong letter? Because it is always in health. If the alphabet was alive, why would you find it difficult to kill it? Because you could not put b out of being. Why is c a fortunate letter? Because it is always in luck. You will perceive that the whole alphabet can be used in the last form. L, u and k the same as c, and the other letters in this manner, Why is a an unfortunate letter? Because it is always out of luck. A lady asks a gentleman, to whom she is engaged, Why is d like a ring? He gives it up. Because we can't be wed without it. Why is i the happiest of vowels? Because it is always in bliss, while e is in hell and the others are in purgatory. Again, you can use a form like this: Why will s be long remembered by Americans? Because it is the beginning of secession and the end of Jeff Davis.

These conundrums are easily made, and illimitable; but my friend only classified them as beginners. There are several other methods for beginners. Take the numeral adjectives. What word is that of five letters from which, if you take away two of them, only one will be left? St-one. What word is that of eight letters from which, if you take away five, ten will still be left? Ten-dency. If you will look in the dictionary you will find about a hundred words beginning with the syllable "ten," all of which you can turn into conundrums as fast as you can talk. There are any number of puzzles to be made on the principle used by Artemus Ward of putting the figure 4 for the word "for." That is not nearly as ingenious as the children's method of spelling potatoes—put one o, put two o's, put three o's, put four o's, put five o's, put six o's put seven o's, put eight o's. There are other methods which I cannot stop to consider; as, what word is always pronounced wrong? Why, "wrong," of course. What word is pronounced quicker by adding a syllable to it? Quick, etc.

My friend next opened his spelling-book at the list of christain names, then turned to the dictionary to find words commencing with such syllables as Ann, Abe, Ben, Bill, Carrie, Dan, Dick, Ella, Emma, Olive. Ollie, Jennie, Polly, Minnie, etc., and went to work thus: What lady should be loved by the Irish? Amelia Ration. In the same way with Ann T. Diluvian, Dick Tater, Ollie Garchy, Sall Lad, etc. Several hundred such conundrums can be made as fast as a short-hand reporter can take them down. Sometimes a little extra thinking will develop a new one not already obtained in the dictionary, as when you say that Jenny Rosity is a benevolent lady.

You will allow me to remark that the machinery by which a conundrum is made and then palmed off on society, must never be exposed. The conundrum must seem to be a natural product of the conversation, although it is quite easy to lead the attention of a whole room-full gently up to a joke. Punch gives a graphic description of such an attempt in the following account of a five minutes' conversation before dinner:

Bold Somebody (during an awkward silence.) Have you (to Young Lady)—have you ever read Hiawatha?

Young Lady (timidly feeling that something or other depends upon her reply.) Yes. (Fearing she may be called upon for a quotation, adds)—but 'twas a long time ago.

Bold Somebody (leading up to his joke, gently.) The name of the heroine was, as you remember, Minnie-haha, the laughing water.

Young Lady (not liking to commit herself.) Well—

Bold Somebody (observing that his conversation attracts general attention.) I dare say she was called by her savage intimates, Minnie.

(A few people tittering ha! ha! ha!)

Bold Somebody. Well, if a cannibal had eaten this heroine (every one listening) why would he be like a small portrait?

Young Lady (repeating.) If a cannibal had—what?

Bold Somebody (says it again.)

Young Lady. Ah yes! Is it a riddle?

Bold Somebody (pleasantly.) Yes.

Various people (pretending to have thought over it, and wondering when dinner will be ready.) I don't know.

Lady of the House (politely.) What is the answer, Mr. Somebody?

Bold Somebody (repeating the point.) He would be like a small portrait, because he'd be a Minnie chewer.

(Curious sensation felt by everybody.) Bold Somebody smiles at his boots.

ENTER SERVANT.

Servant (very distinctly.) Dinner mam.

Relief of guests. Exeunt omnes.

On ordinary names it is not necessary to use the dictionary. I had four packages entirely on scriptural names. If I remember rightly, there were twelve conundrums on Adam, some of which were profane. Among the genealogies and the hard names, the torture of language was frightful.

Others run on puns, for instance: When is a man not a man? When he is a-bed. When is a fortune like an appendage to a vessel? When it is amassed (a mast.) Why is a sailor never a sailor? Because he is always a-board or a-shore. Never despair of any word. Can you make one on "bee?" Why is making honey like whipping? Because it is a bee-laboring business. Take the same syllable again. See from what a remote point the following conundrum finally comes to the dictionary: Why is a bee-hive like a rotten potato? A bee-hive is a bee-holder, a bee-holder is a spectator, a spectator is a rotten potato. In the same way, a convalescent dyspeptic is said to be like a reprieved criminal, because he cannot di-gest yet; a child who gets stout as he gets taller is said to be like a newspaper reporter, because he picks up in-formation etc. The incongruity of the two subjects said to resemble each other is the merit of the following: Why is an old man like a dog's tail? Because he is in-firm. In 1850, the Universalist Society at Linn offered a reward of a set of silver spoons for the best conundrum. The man who took the prize was a student of the dictionary, for this was his conundrum: Why is a prolix clergyman like an aged person? Because they both di-late. Lord Dundreary attempted to get off a conundrum of this sort once and was rather unfortunate. He says a young lady was asking him the last thing in "widdles."

"Now, I hadn't heard any mythelf for thome time, though I couldn't give her any vewy gweat novelty, but a fwiend of mine made one latht tneathon which I thought wather neat, tho I athked her,

"'When ith a jar not a jar?'

"Thingularly enough, the moment thye heard thith widdle thye burtht out laughing behind her pocket-handkerchief."

"Good Gwathiouth! what'th the matter?" thaid I; "have you ever heard it befaw?"

"Never," thye thaid, emphatically, "in that form; do, pleathe, tell me the anthwer."

Tho I told her.

"When it ith a door!"

Upon which thye—thye went off again into hythtewicth. I—I—I never did thee thuch a girl for laughing. I know it ith a good widdle; but I didn't think it would have thuch an effect ath that.

It is really astonishing to what extremes the passion for wrenching words from their ordinary meaning is carried. Let us take some words of three syllables. A field of grass is like a person older than yourself, because it is past-ur-age, the snows on Mount Blanc are like a ship-builder, because they av-a-lanch (have a launch) whenever they get ready; cats are like unskilful surgeons, because they mew-till-late and destroy patients; the heart of a lover is like a sea-serpent, because it is a secreter (sea cretur) of great sighs (size); gate-posts are like the human species, because they prop-a-gate; if the ornithological emblem of the United States were taken sick, it would be contrary to law, because it would be ill-eagle; a person who dislikes writing resembles an inmate of Greenwich Hospital, because he is a pen-shunner (pensioner); a marriage certificate is like an article the public cannot do without, because it is a noose-paper; the patients who should be put in the highest part of the hospital are the room-attics.

I do not know of anything worse, except those of words in four syllables. The poet Bryant's head is like a colored girl's because it cannot produce any more than a-Topsy's (Thanatopsis); the kind of essence which a young man likes when he pops the question is acquiesence; the shape of a kiss is elliptical (a liptickle); the man who sells fiddles is like a musical instrument, because he is a violin seller (violoncello); a new patent mouse trap is a cowardly affair, because it is a puzzle-any-mouse (pusillanimous) contrivance. That will do. When conundrums require parentheses and italics they must be very bad. The person who said that a swallow was like a smoking chimney because it had a crooked flue (flew), thought he had done wonders.

Similar monstrosities are: Why is killing bees like a confession? Because you unbuzz'em. Why is a person riding rapidly up hill, like one who presents a young lady with a young dog? Because he gives a gal a pup. In the following a long word writhes awfully upon the rack of the riddler: Why are the Arabs like a process of reasoning? Because they're a racy hossy nation (ratiocination). And here is probably the most wonderfully protracted pun ever made: When may a man be said to have a vegetable time-piece? When he gets a potato clock (gets up at eight o'clock).

Dr. Holmes stated that in the "Index Expurgatorius" of the "Asylum for Aged and Decayed Punsters" the following puns are prohibited:

References to Attic salt when asked to pass the salt cellar; remarks on being mustered, etc.; associating baked beans with bene-factors of an institution; saying that beef-eating is befitting, etc.

There are many rather pretty conundrums drawn from nature. I read in one package such well-known ones as that the best time to read the book of nature is when Autumn turns the leaves; that the trees when they put on their new dress do not have to open their trunks because they leave out a Summer suit; that the grass is like a note of hand, because it is matured by falling dew; that the stars should be the best astronomers, because they have studded the heavens ever since creation. I discovered one package of sixty-seven questions about trees.

A style of conundrum has become very frequent and popular which is founded on a transposition of letters or words giving a new and surprising sense. It generally commences with "what is the difference?" I have opened one package of this class. The first one is as follows: What is the difference between stabbing a man and killing swine? One is assault with intent to kill and the other is a killing with intent to salt. So it is discovered of a cat and a document that one has claws at the end of its paws and the other has pauses at the end of its clauses; of a wife and an editor, that one sets articles to rights and the other writes articles to set: of the eagle and a certain kind of dog, that one is a tarrier in the sky and the other is a Skye-terrier; of a pound of meat and a drummer boy, that one weighs a pound and the other pounds away; of a church organist and the influenza, that one knows the stops and the other stops the nose; of a successful lover and his rival, that one kisses his miss and the other misses his kiss; of seventeen and seventy, that one is careless and happy and the other hairless and cappy; of an emperor and a beggar, that one issues manifestoes and the other manifests toes without his shoes; of a tailor and a siege gun, that one works the breeches and the other breaches the work; of the Prince of Wales and a bomb-shell, that one is heir to the throne and other is thrown to the air. It is also mentioned that the difference between a baby and a great coat is that one you was, and the other you wear; that perseverance is a strong will and obstinacy is a strong won't; of a gauze dress and a drawn tooth, that one is too thin and the other is tooth out.

As a relief from the ingenuity of the specimens which I have given, it is well to introduce occasionally a question which ought to be obvious to every one, but which is not. For instance, what makes more noise than a pig under the gate? two pigs; why does a traveler who has been on a long journey, and comes to a board fence in the midst of a forest, try to get over it? because he wants to get over; what is the best thing to do in a hurry? nothing; why does the miller wear a white hat? to keep his head warm. Lord Dundreary gives one of this kind which, though quite obvious, is, notwithstanding, exceedingly logical:

Why doeth a dog waggle hith tail? Give it up? I think motht fellath will give that up! You thee the dog waggleth hith tail becauth the dog'th thtwonger than the tail. If he wathn't, the tail would waggle the dog!

Somewhat similar is the following, which was written in the sixteenth century:

Why dooth a dogge tourne hym thryes ere that he lyeth hym downe? Because he knoweth not his bedde's head from the fete.

If any person shall follow the course of instruction here laid down, I trust he may arrive in due time at the felicity of that decrepit centenarian described in the account of the Asylum for Aged and Decayed Punsters.

The ancient man crawled toward us, cocked one eye, with which he seemed to see a little, up at us, and said:

"Sarvant, young gentleman. Why is a—a—a—like a—a—a? Give it up? Because it's a—a—a—a—a—."

He smiled a pleasant smile, as if it were all plain enough.

"One hundred and seven last Christmas," said the director. "He lost his answers about the age of ninety-eight. Of late years he puts his whole conundrums in blank—but they please him just as well."

It is so easy to make conundrums that most intelligent men will prefer to put their faculties to some harder and more useful task. A dancer once said to a Spartan, "I can stand on one leg longer than you." "Perhaps so," said the Spartan, "and so can my goose." A few conundrums are very well after dinner with the raisins and nuts, and I have no doubt my friend, the editor, will be quite willing to furnish them at reasonable rates in lots to suit purchasers.—Galaxy.

Ladies Should Read Newspapers.—It is a great mistake in female education to keep a young lady's time and attention devoted to only fashionable literature of the day. If you would qualify her for conversation, you must give her something to talk about—give her education with the actual world, with the outer world and its transpiring events. Urge her to read newspapers and become familiar with the present character and improvement of our race. History is of some importance; but the past world is dead, we have nothing to do with it. Our thoughts and our concerns should be for the present world, to know what it is and improve the condition of it. Let her have an intelligent opinion, and be able to sustain intelligent conversation concerning the mental, moral and religious improvements of our times. Let the gilded annuals and poems on the center table be kept part of the time covered with weekly and daily journals. Let the whole family, men, women and children, read newspapers.

Pursuit of Pleasure.—We smile at the ignorance of the savage who cuts down the tree in order to reach its fruits; but the fact is, that a blunder of this description is made by every person who is over eager and impatient in the pursuit of pleasure. To such the present moment is everything and the future is nothing; he borrows, therefore, from the future at a most ruinous and usurious interest; and the consequence is that he finds the tone of his best feelings impaired, his self-respect diminished, his health of mind and body destroyed, and life reduced to its very dregs, at a time when, humanly speaking, the greater portion of its comforts should be still before him.

THE HERDSMAN'S REPOSE.

BY JULIA GODDARD.

THE herdsman rested awhile at noon,
At noon when the sun was shining bright,
And hills and valleys were all a-light
In the glow of summer glory.

And the rivulet lazily hummed a tune,
And the flaxen-haired herd-boy soundly slept,
And into the herdsman's thought there crept
A long-forgotten story.

Quietly grazed the cattle around,
And the pony cropped the herbage sweet;
The worn-out dog at his master's feet
Stretched out, was fitfully sleeping.

The valley in tranced slumber was bound,
Only the herdsman and Hector grim,
Who had watched through many a watch with him
A dreamy look-out was keeping.

Andthe herdsman sighed a heavy sigh,
And his thoughts went back to days gone by.
The herdsman lighted his pipe. Quoth he:
"All things must happen that are to be;
There's never a day, be it ever so bright,
But must darken and darken into night;
There's never a night so black and drear
But the morning light draws ever so near;
And the darkest night that ever shall be
Must brighten into eternity.

* * * * *

"There were two brothers in days gone by.
Loving each other tenderly—
Loving till love stepped in between.
Who was fairer than little Jean?
Little Jean with the golden hair—
Why should hate come through one so fair?
One was loved and one was not—
One was flushed with triumph, and one
Was as his heart were turned to stone;
All the pulses of life seemed gone,
And the blood in his veins to rot.

* * * * *

"Whence rang out that terrible cry?
The river was deep, and the current strong,
And a drowning man was borne along,
'Let him die!
Death hath been mine for many a day,
I might have died, and what cared they?
She may weep, and she may wail,
And her cheek and lip turn ashen pale,
As her lover in his shroud shall lie;'
And again rang out that terrible cry.
They were two brothers—in days gone by
Loving each other tenderly."

The herdsman took his pipe from his mouth,
And he wiped his burning brow,
And a choking sob in his throat arose
At the tale he thought over now.
"Thank God there was no murder done,
The strong man rescued the drowning one;
The strong man looked in his mother's face—
The strong man had in her prayers a place.
And little Jean with the golden hair
Blessed the strong man again and again,
Till his stony heart throbbed free from pain,
And the blood coursed softly through each vein."

He might not now despair.
Years ago in the quiet grave
Little Jean is laid at rest,
And only one brother lives to bear
The secret in his breast,
Of the hand that was stretched forth to save
Him from a life of dark unrest,
Him from the curse of Cain.

The Daughter at Home.—To be able to get dinner, to sweep the room, to make a garment, to tend a baby, would add greatly to the list of a young lady's accomplishments. Where can we behold a more lovely sight than the eldest daughter of a house, standing in the sweet simplicity of her new womanhood by the side of her toiling, careworn mother, to relieve and aid her? Now she presides at the table, now directs in the kitchen, now amuses the fretting babe, now diverts half a score of little folks in the library. She can assist her younger brothers in their studies, read the newspaper to her weary father, or smooth the aching brow of her fevered mother. Always ready with a helping hand and a cheerful smile for every emergency, she is an angel of love, and a blessing to the home circle. Should she be called out of it to originate a home of her own, would she be any less loving or self-sacrificing?

Conversation.—Let your conversation be with those by whom you may accomplish yourself best; for virtue never returns with so rich a cargo, as when it sets sail from such continents. Company, like climates, by a kind of contagion, doth insensibly infect us: soft and tender natures are apt to receive any impressions. Alexander learned his drunkenness of Leonidas, and Negro his cruelty of his barber.

London is to be provided with basket-carriages, in the Parisian style. This improvement is due to French enterprise and capital.

IN THE OMNIBUS.

A MIGHTY woman with a bundle, a cross woman with a baby, an uncomfortable woman with a dog, an old gentleman with a trumpet, a beaming young lady with expansive crinoline, and the usual complement of nothing particular people, including myself, John Hayes, gentleman at large, would not have been inside if I could have helped it; and judging from the surrounding faces, we were all hot and hated one another. When a fellow creature is visibly radiating the caloric one has already in excess, hatred for him, or even her, follows in logical sequence, and we were waiting for more passengers.

"Please help me in, I'm blind!" It was the tiniest, sweetest voice; we all turned to see a little girl lay her hand confidingly on the conductor's arm. I took her from him as carefully as if she had been in truth what she looked like—my Parian Clytie—the same pure, sweet face, with the delicate features and drooping white eyelids; but the sadness of her pallor was relieved by the vivid dark gold of her hair, which fell in soft thick rolls upon her neck.

"Isn't there a dog here?" said she presently.

"Yes, darling," said the dog's owner, as she handed it to the child, looking uncomfortable no longer; the blind face turned to hers seemed to charm away its nervousness.

"What a dear fellow," said Clytie, and the rough terrier grew popular.

"Do they let you go far alone?" said the cross woman.

"Oh, yes." The little creature gave a low glad laugh of triumph. "I've been to the blind school; I can do every thing for myself now."

"Would you mind saying that again, my dear? I am very deaf," said the old gentleman. She repeated her sentence, adding with an old womanly pity, "It must be very sad to be deaf."

I said, involuntarily, "You don't look as though you were ever sad."

"Oh, no, I never am, now that Emy is well."

"Who is Emy?"

"Oh, my little sister; oh, such a little darling; but she was ill for a long time—so long!"

Clytie's voice faltered, as though she were living over again a great sorrow.

"But she is well now," I said.

"Oh, yes, quite strong, and it's so nice."

"Have you many sisters and brothers?" asked the young lady.

"No; only Emy and one brother, baby Tom; he's such a great, fat fellow, and he laughs—you can't think how he does laugh."

If it was anything like the musical thrill his sister sent rippling through the air, I should like to have heard the baby.

"What does he laugh at?" said the cross woman.

"Oh, everything; at Emy and me, when we play Punch and Judy; and at dinner, when there's dumplings; and sometimes he lies on the floor and laughs at himself; and we laugh, too, it's so funny."

The little one's mirth was so infectious, we all joined in with various modulations of the roar of the deaf old gentleman, who could not stop himself, and setting off again, little Clytie clapping her soft gloved hands till she made the dog bark, and the conductor looked in to say:

"Well, if I ever saw such a row."

"Euston road, please," said Clytie, turning into a business woman all at once.

The unwelcome place seemed to come directly. As I turned from helping the child out, I saw the cross woman's face breaking up into tears.

"It's queer," she said, "but I feel like to cry to see her so merry."

I was unpleasantly conscious of what my dear mother used to call the apple in my throat; so I was grateful to the deaf gentleman for saying "Eh!" and saving the effort of replying.

We all fell into quietness, but it was curious to notice how forbearing we were to one another; the child's great loss, worn like a flower crown on the head of some pictured saint, made our petty discomforts all melt away.

The young lady began to play with the baby, the old gentleman with the dog, and I, who object to all gratuities on the principle of never having any money to spare, was absolutely pleased when the mighty woman handed back her change to her vanquished foe, saying:—

"Never mind the penny, conductor."

Even the cross woman grew quite interesting over a reminiscence of a youth she had known when she was a girl, who had recovered his sight after being blind for a year.

I think, if instead of being a plucked evil service candidate, I could be a woman with a mission, I could choose that of my unconscious little Clytie.

Senator Sherman's daughter is said to be the belle of Washington, and Mrs. Charles Sumner is said to be the undoubted leader of fashionable society in Washington this Winter.

Some of our most fashionable women have adopted powdered wigs for full dress.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS,
J. F. BOWMAN. } Editors and Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1867.

THE STATE OF THE SOUTH.

IT is reported that General Grant is in favor of having the garrisons of United States troops now maintained in the Southern States withdrawn without further delay, believing that they are no longer necessary. Of the degree of reliability that belongs to this statement, we have no satisfactory means of judging. If, however, such is the opinion of General Grant, it certainly ought to carry much weight with it—though a statement of the reasons and facts upon which it is based will seem exceedingly desirable to those who, from all the information at present within their reach, have arrived at the opposite conclusion.

We are not conscious of any feeling of excitement, animosity, or prejudice, likely to interfere with an impartial examination of the facts of the case, and from all the facts that we have been able to gather, it seems to us clear that a spirit still pervades many portions of the South which would make the withdrawal of the garrisons at present stationed there, equivalent to giving the negroes and a class of the whites unreservedly into the power of men who have clearly manifested, and are still manifesting, a disposition to use such power not merely oppressively—that is a very mild expression—but with terrible cruelty. Very probably General Grant has much more accurate and extensive information on the subject than we possess, and he may also have taken some view of the subject that has not occurred to us; but until the public is favored with the grounds of his opinion at large—if it is true that he has expressed the opinion attributed to him—those who have looked at the subject as we have, will of course decline to change their views in blind deference to the authority of a name, however illustrious.

We do not know how numerous in the South is the class of men whose sentiments are represented in a recent letter in the Richmond Times concerning the state of things in Texas, from which the following is an extract, but if that class wields any considerable influence, we would quite as soon take our chances in a Camanche village after a battle, as in Texas after the withdrawal of the troops:

"There the negroes have not been demoralized by the Freedmen's Bureau and the school-marms. The climate, too, of this magnificent State, although salubrious in the extreme, has been found unhealthy to the few straggling Yankee letter-writers and meddling negrophilists who have ventured there in quest of mischief. They have, in many instances, when they have stirred up ill-feeling between the races, been mysteriously devoured by wolves and bears, or scalped by the Camanches. The settlers in Texas have bitterly deplored those accidents, but they have not been able to prevent them."

We repeat that we have no very accurate means of estimating how large a portion of the population of the South shares the murderous spirit that pervades this fiendish letter; but we do know that it was permitted to appear in a paper that is reputed to be the most popular journal in Virginia. It is also a significant fact, that the result of a recent official investigation into the alleged illegal apprenticing of colored children in North Carolina, is to the effect that a system of modified and temporary slavery was being introduced there, and that negro children "were bound under unlawful indentures, without the consent of their parents, or allowing them to protest in court." Scarcely a mail, from the East, arrives that does not bring intelligence of acts of violence or cruel oppression practised in some Southern community upon the freedmen, or upon whites who have been identified with the Union cause. Among the latest items of this description, it is stated that Obion County, Tennessee, "continues to be the scene of great lawlessness and savagery;" that "in Logan County the blacks are miserably persecuted by 'regulators' who plunder, beat, and assassinate them." If we are inclined to withhold our unqualified confidence from statements so general as these, we are, nevertheless, compelled to attach some weight to them as not wholly without foundation, by numerous well authenticated specific cases. For instance, there is not any reason to doubt the existence, in various localities, of certain organizations or "committees" of murderous ruffians, whose object and business it is to commit outrages upon negroes and Union men. The particulars furnished in regard to the "I Am Committee" of Logan County, Tennessee, for instance, are too circumstantial to admit of any doubt as to their substantial accuracy. This secret association "of regulators" has recently, it is stated, posted a handbill in divers public places, announcing the rules which they propose to enforce, and the penalties to be inflicted upon all who shall dare to disregard them. The sentences of this invisible tribunal are secretly pronounced, and they are executed by midnight visitation or sudden attack in out of the way places. Among other laws promulgated by the "I Am Committee" are the following:

No man shall squat negroes on his place unless they are all under his employ, male and female.

Negro women shall be employed by white persons.

All children shall be hired out for something.

Negroes found in cabins to themselves shall suffer the penalty.

Negroes shall not be allowed to hire negroes.

Idle men, women, or children shall suffer the penalty.

All white men found with negroes in secret places shall be dealt with, and those that hire negroes must pay promptly, and act with good faith to the negro. I will make the negro do his part, and the white must, too.

The "penalties" for violating these rules, and the threats by which the tribunal seeks to strengthen its authority, are well calculated to furnish a vivid idea of the kind of ruffians and savages who constitute the "I am":

For the first offence is 100 lashes—the second is looking up a sapling.

This I do for the benefit of all, young or old, high and tall, black and white. Any one that may not like these rules may try their luck, and see whether or not I will be found doing my duty.

Negroes found stealing from any one, or taking from their employers to other negroes, death is the first penalty.

Running about late of nights shall be strictly dealt with.

White men and negroes, I am everywhere. I have friends in every place. Do your duty, and I will have but little to do.

In all probability, it is the existence of organizations of a similar character to this that has made Texas the paradise which the eminently Christian correspondent of the Richmond paper describes it, and has prevented the negroes of that happy State from being "demoralized by the Freedman's Bureau and the schoolmarms," besides rendering the climate particularly "unhealthy to straggling Yankee letter-writers and meddling negrophilists." Notwithstanding the rumored opinion of Gen. Grant, we experience a very strong conviction that the withdrawal of the United States troops at the present time from the States composing the late Confederacy, would be speedily succeeded in large districts of the majority of said States by a sudden and alarming aggravation of the unwholesomeness of the climate for all persons unfortunate enough to possess either skins or political opinions of an unpopular complexion.

OUR ÆSTHETIC PROGRESS.

IT is gratifying to note the increasing attention paid to architectural embellishment in the principal public buildings recently erected in San Francisco. It is beginning to be understood by the persons who have control of the erection of edifices of this description that it is not enough that they should be piles of masonry, with a sufficient amount of room inside to answer business requirements, but that they should in a certain sense be works of art. It is also beginning to be understood that every architect, worthy of the name, is something more than a mere carpenter or builder—that he is an artist. It is owing to these truths having been long overlooked, that so many costly structures in this city, including several large churches, are offensive to the eye that has been cultivated to appreciate beauty of form and proportion as expressed in architecture. Unfortunately, this kind of culture is by no means common among the class of men who generally have to pass upon the plans submitted for proposed churches and other public edifices. The controlling influence in these matters is generally exercised by men of wealth and practical ability, in whom business success and the respect which attends it, have bred a conceit of their superior taste and knowledge in departments not at all related to those with which they have been most conversant. It is a hard thing for a successful man, accustomed to the deference which wealth commands in all young communities, to acknowledge that his taste is liable to be erroneous in any matter directly or indirectly connected with the disbursement of large amounts of cash; and certainly, it must be admitted that the man or the corporation whose money is to pay for a building has an indubitable right to consult his or its own taste in regard to such building. Nevertheless, there is a subtle principle of regulation in matters of this kind that steadily, though imperceptibly tends to bring the crude or vulgar taste under the influence of that which is trained and cultivated. Vestrymen and trustees, and boards of directors, however opinionated or self-sufficient, often receive impressions unconsciously; advance opinions as their own, which they merely echo; and enthusiastically admire at second hand. Ignorance, in fact, is naturally prone to yield itself to the guidance of knowledge—provided only that it is not made to realize too clearly that it is being guided; and during the last year or two, it is quite certain that the amount of influence exerted by culture, taste and professional skill, in the matter we are speaking of, has notably increased. This affords us encouragement to hope that we shall yet have structures in San Francisco which will be something more than safe, substantial and convenient buildings for the purposes for which they were respectively designed—which shall, in addition to furnishing church or office or other accommodation, exert a direct influence on the æsthetic education of the people, by affording to the imagination and the taste the same sort of gratification that is supplied by a noble picture, or any other true production of the artistic faculty.

[For the Californian.]

MY NEW LODGINGS.

AFTER the escapade of Mr. Jones, which resulted in my vacating my elegant apartments in the aristocratic mansion of Mrs. Harriet Honeydew, widow, No. 3,999 Stockton street, I was obliged, as a matter of course, to seek lodgings elsewhere. I have a horror of hotels. They are a necessary evil for the accommodation of travelers and sojourners; but the permanent resident who will deliberately take up his abode at a hotel certainly has not learned how to live. At a grand hotel there is great display and very little comfort. If you are at all socially inclined, you are sure to have a score or more of idle acquaintances who seem to take a malicious pleasure in trespassing upon your time and your pocket—in making you neglect your business, injure your health and ruin your reputation. I have two or three friends who board at a first class hotel. They have offices in the city and pretend to do business; but I defy the oldest and most sagacious man in the world to find them in their offices during business hours or at any other time. They are always roving around with Brown, Jones and Robinson, "taking another nip," and arranging the programme for the evening's pleasures. When I meet them in the street, as I do occasionally, they are always in the company of some fast-looking individuals, whom they introduce to me as Colonel This or Judge That; their faces are expressive of recent severe dissipation; and they always say: "We are just going around here to get a square drink, Clerk; won't you go along?" Of course I decline the invitation, and off they go in search of the "cup that cheers and yet inebriates;" while I shake my head sadly as I walk away in the opposite direction, thinking of the physical and financial ruin which is fast overtaking these young men, simply because they board at a fashionable hotel, and, being of a social turn, have acquired a set of fast acquaintances whom they cannot get rid of. A popular hotel, I repeat, is the worst place in the world for the permanent residence of a "good fellow." He gets into all sorts of bad scrapes. There was Robert Jenkins—he had not boarded more than three months at the Great Mogul before Mrs. Rataplan ran away with him—took him up to Oregon or some other foreign port, and there worried him into committing suicide. Bob had been civil to her—had taken her to the theatre a few times, and once, with the consent of her husband—who was a dry old stick, up to his ears in business and caring little for anything else—had accompanied her to a masked ball, where he treated her very handsomely. As Bob was well dressed, and seemed to be liberal in his expenditures, she imagined that he was wealthy, and resolved to effect his ruin. She succeeded. Well, to return to our mutton, if you are of a retiring, modest manner, and rather good-natured, the servants, waiters and chambermaids at a big hotel will soon find you out, and take revenge upon you for all the indignities they may have suffered from other quarters. They will snub you, and neglect you, and shamefully impose upon you in various ways; and if you venture to put in a mild remonstrance before his high mightiness the landlord, that worthy will respond with an air as if he doubted your veracity, or your sanity, or some other of your moral or mental qualities, that "such things cannot be, because he doesn't allow them. He has heard that the servants at the Grand Lama are very insolent; but his know better; why, he wouldn't keep one in his house who didn't come right square up to the mark;" and then he would promise to "see about it;" and then he would deliberately forget his promise. You can't tell me anything about hotels. It may be all very nice to stand in front of the Lick House or the Occidental and pick your teeth for the edification of such of your acquaintances as may chance to pass by, and after they get out of your hearing remark, "What a blessed stuck-up fool Smith has got to be;" but give me a quiet suite of rooms in a respectable private house, where there are few or no other lodgers, and where I can come in or go out as I please; take my meals at a restaurant when I am hungry, and associate with gentlemen of a quiet and reflective habit, who are moderate in their potations, and do not make it a point to go to bed inebriated every night of the year, and I am as happy as a man well can be who is compelled by cruel fate to live the life of a bachelor at the peril of his longevity. (See statistics in a recent number of the Bulletin.)

So, after I had bidden Mrs. Honeydew a stern but respectful farewell (if she had shed a few tears—even a teaspoonful—I would have relented and remained with her—I have a weakness that way), I set about finding other lodgings. And first, I consulted the papers. I have found, in my brief experience, that people often save much time and trouble by consulting the advertising columns of the newspapers. I soon found what I wanted. It was worded thus:

To Let.—A suite of handsomely furnished rooms, suitable for a single gentleman. Apply at 4,611 Union street.

Taking the address I started out, and soon reached the place designated in the advertisement. The house was quite a large one, and not particularly new or inviting in external appearance. There was some shrubbery in the front yard, but it seemed to be pining away in consequence of neglect. The hinges and fastenings of the gate were so loose that I feared the confounded thing would drop off when I opened it; and there was a general untidiness about the place which was anything but inviting. I would have retreated at once; but happening to look up I saw a sharp female face at a wiudow and a pair of bright eyes observing me, and I hadn't the courage to run away. I walked up boldly and rang the door bell. The door was immediately opened by a shock-hended young woman with a broom in her hand, and wearing a calico} dress which would have been the better for a lively and forcible application of soap and water. She invited me to step into the parlor, and I followed her into a dingy room, the walls whereof were hung with cheap and gaudy prints: the furniture looked as if it had been bought second-hand at auction, and was so dilapidated that I hesitated before I took my seat upon a rickety sofa, the springs of which emitted a complaining sound, and made themselves uncomfortably evident when I sat down upon them. My martyrdom was brief, however, for presently the landlady entered. She was attired in a faded morning wrapper, looked as if she might have combed her hair and washed her face some time during the previous week, and altogether was less captivating (if that could be possible) in appearance than the servant girl. Her sharp features and small black eyes warned me to be careful not to arouse her temper. But she smiled as graciously as a playful catamount when she saluted me:

"Good mornin', sir. Come to see about them rooms I s'pose?"

"Yes, madam; I saw your advertisement in the paper, and thought I would call and inquire about them."

"Well, you'll find them real nice rooms. There's a settin'-room and a bedroom, and they're furnished good enough for anybody. There ain't no fire-place in the settin'-room, but I reckon you can put up a stove if you want one. There's been two or three speakin' to me about them rooms, and I reckon it's lucky you come just when you did, or they might 'a been took. There was Mr. Rumsler that keeps a saloon down on Jackson street—p'raps you are acquainted with him—he talked about takin' them, but he hasn't made up his mind yet."

"You have other lodgers, I presume," said I.

"Not many now," replied the landlady. "I've got four young men, and there's three young women that works in a milliner shop, or something of that kind. They're all very stiddy, and don't stay out late except Saturday nights—then the boys stay out late because they don't have no work to do next day. You'll find them very sociable, and good company."

"Madam," said I, rising, with a respectful bow, "I think the rooms will not suit me."

"How do you know they won't?—you havn't even looked at them. Won't you walk up and see them?"

"No, I thank you, it is not worth while."

"Will you be so good as to tell me, sir, what your objection is to them rooms?" and the smile changed into a portentous scowl.

"Madam," I replied, "to the rooms I can make no objection, certainly, because I have not seen them. But I want a more retired place—you have too much company for me."

"Indeed! Well, sir, I hope you may always find as good company as honest working young men and women. As a general thing people that's honest themselves ain't afraid of company."

"I did not object to the character of your lodgers, madam, but to their number. Besides, your house is inconveniently far from my place of business, and it would not suit me on that account."

"What did you come here for, then? I don't believe you wanted any rooms. You look more like one of them fellows that goes around pickin' up things! You'd better git from here, or I'll call a policeman!"

I made my exit from that locality with more speed than dignity, and with a feeling compounded of amusement and indignation—the former predominating. And the untidy landlady and sloveuly servant girl watched me from the front door step, and, I am confident, discussed my appearance and supposed character in a manner highly uncomplimentary to the undersigned.

After this adventure I was careful not to approach a house until I had reconnoitered it from the other side of the street. At last my diligence was rewarded. At 4,253 Powell street, I found a house which seemed to suit me in external appearance as well as in its internal arrangement. The landlady was a widow (all these landladies are widows), "fat, fair and forty," and charmingly good-natured. She had a pretty daughter aged eighteen and a son a couple of years younger. Her lodgers were two young men of correct habits—I ascertained by close inquiry that neither of them belonged to the Hercules Club—the landlady thought, but was not certain, that they were both members of the Young Men's Christian Association. At all events they were quiet and gentlemanly, and went to church regularly every Sunday. Also, a young lady, whose "delightful task" it was "to rear the tender mind, and teach the young idea how to shoot"—in other words, a schoolma'am. Now, in my tender boyhood I made the close acquaintance of a class of schoolma'ams anything but lovable—old maids of vinegar visages and acidulous temper, who, in revenge for their own deprivation of offspring, took delight in maltreating with devilish ingenuity such helpless brats as were placed temporarily under their care. But the schoolma'ams of the present day are of a different class. They are young, handsome and intelligent. They "spare the rod," yet do not "hate the child." They have soft voices, rosy cheeks and tender eyes. I envy the youngsters who go to school to them. If I were as they I would never play truant—no, never!

Mrs. Peablossom's rooms suited me, and I took them. I immediately removed my personal effects to my new quarters, and settled down in quit possession, resolved to make up by increased diligence for the time and money I had lost through that scamp, Jones. Delusive hope!

In the evening I presented myself in the parlor, and was duly introduced to the members of the household: Miss Polly Peablossom, a large and well-favored young lady, with a strong resemblance to her mother; Miss Catharine Crickett, the schoolma'am, a young lady of about twenty-two, with soft brown hair, keen blue eyes, regular features, and a small, graceful figure; Mr. Podson, a tall, slender young man of about thirty, with immense side-whiskers; Mr. Gigsby, an immature youth of twenty or thereabouts, with ruddy cheeks and an incipient moustache, and Tom Peablossom, a rather mischievous boy of fifteen. After a little small talk, Miss Crickett addressed me:

"Do you sing, Mr. Clerk? We are all musicians here."

"That branch of my education," I replied, "has been sadly neglected. I used to know a few old psalm tunes, but I fear I have forgotten them. However, I can whistle a stave or two of 'When this cruel war is over,' if you would like to hear it."

"No, I thank you; don't trouble yourself. But I suppose you don't object to music?"

"By no means; I am rather fond of it," I replied, with an inward foreboding that I was likely to have enough of it so long as I staid under that roof. And as I looked around upon the company I fancied that I could read stirring lyrics in the deep blue eyes of Miss Crickett, sentimental love-ditties in the soft gray orbs of Polly Peablossom, passionate strains in the flashing hazel optics of young Gigsby, melancholy dirges in Podson's stony stare, Ethiopian melodies in Tom's roguish glances, and a hymn of peace and contentment in Mrs. Peablossom's comfortable countenance. One thing I noted for a certainty—Podson and Gigsby were both dead in love with Miss Crickett, and about as jealous a pair of rivals as I ever saw in my life; while the young lady, who was evidently aware of the "situation," did not seem to care a straw about either of them.

